The Subordinate Judge, as stated already, dismissed the suit. His categorical findings were ; (a) the plaintiff has failed to prove that he had not labelled as despatched by Liptons on 22nd December 1914 and received by him on 4th January 1915 other tea which he had received previously in 1914 ; (b) the tea labelled by him was all of one uniform quality ; (c) the fact elicited did not establish an offence under section 437, Indian Penal Code, against the plaintiff ; (d) the defendants had reasonable and probable cause for believing that the plaintiffs had committed an offence ; (e) the defendants' complaint was not malicious ; (f) if the plaintiff had been entitled to damages both Mr. Andrews and Liptons' and Company would have been liable for those damages and a reasonable and proper amount would have been Rs. 5,000.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court for a decree for Rs. 6,000 damages.

ABDUL SHAKUR V. LIPTON & CO.

We deem it desirable to state at the outset our view of the law applicable to the case. The correctness of the Trial Court's finding that the plaintiff-appellant, in fact, was not guilty of the offences attributed to him in the complaint has not been contested by the respondents. This leaves the appellant with the obligation of satisfying us that the prosecution was instituted against him without any reasonable and probable cause and with malice. The most notable pronouncement on the questions of what constitutes reasonable and probable cause, and what constituted malice, is that delivered in 1878 by Mr. Justice Hawkins in Hicks v. Faulkner (1). It has been adopted and applied repeatedly in subsequent decisions both in India and in England, and its correctness is nowhere disputed in any of the authorities which have been cited before us. After making it clear that to succeed in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must allege and establish both (a) absence of reasonable and probable cause and (b) malice, and must fail altogether if he fails to establish both. Mr. Justice Hawkins proceeded to define reasonable and probable cause as follows:—

“... an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based upon a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds, of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any ordinarily prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed.”

Later on he defined the malice necessary to be established as “... not, even malice in law, such as may be assumed from the intentional doing of a wrongful act, but malice in fact; malus animus indicating that the party was actuated either by spite or ill-will towards an individual or by indirect or improper motives though these may be wholly unconnected with any uncharitable feeling towards any body.”

We have no difficulty in holding that the law is expressed accurately and comprehensively in the above passages. The explanation given in the same judgment of the respective functions of Judge and Jury in applying these rules does not concern us in the present case.

The appeal has been argued before us at considerable length by Mr. Abdul Qadir for the appellant, and by Mr. Tek Chand for the respondents and we have been referred to every detail of a somewhat voluminous record. Certain facts are clear to us. The person responsible for the prosecution of the plaintiff was Mr. Newby, the then manager of Liptons' at Calcutta. He was led to take up the question of instituting legal proceedings by reports received from Lajpat Ram. The full correspondence between Lajpat Ram and Liptons' Calcutta Office has not been produced, but the letters which have been filed can be read as indicating malice in the sense defined above on the part of Lajpat Ram against Abdul Shakur. The prosecution, however, was in no way the result of the malice of Lajpat Ram. What Mr. Newby acted upon were the four tins of tea, which are admitted to have been purchased at the plaintiff's shop by emissaries of Lajpat Ram, which were labelled 'despatched from Calcutta 22nd December 1914 and received in Lahore 4th January 1915,' and which were stamped with Liptons' secret Code letters for the 1st week of October 1914. Before taking action Mr. Newby consulted his Solicitors and he arranged for the complaint to be drawn up by one of the leading Advocates of Lahore. His motive was in no sense personal spite against the plaintiff, but was a determination to stop the sale by the latter of tea marked with 1914 Code letters as tea received in Lahore in January 1915. His object was to protect what he considered to be the interests of his firm in Lahore, and relied for success upon the secret letter Code system.

The questions then which arise for determination are, firstly, whether the Code system was, in fact, not infallible, secondly, if it was not infallible, whether Mr. Newby did not honestly believe, on reasonable grounds, such as would appeal to an ordinarily prudent man, that the system was at least capable of rendering it impossible for the tea tinned at the beginning of October to be sent to Lahore on the 22nd December, and, thirdly, if there was no such honest belief, whether Mr. Newby can be held to have been actuated by indirect or improper motives, if he launched a prosecution relying upon the system, solely with an eye to the business advantage of his firm with no honest desire to bring to justice a man whom he believed to have broken the law and without heed to the personal consequences entailed upon the individual concerned.

In all these questions the burden of proof is on the plaintiff-appellant. This is made clear in the discussion by the Court of Appeal in Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Co. (2) in which it was pointed out that, if, in order to show the absence of reasonable and probable cause, there are minor questions which it is necessary to determine, the burden of proving each of those minor questions lies upon the plaintiffs, just as much as the burden of proving the whole does. "The test", it was explained by Brown, L. J., "as to the burden or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this; to ask oneself which party will be successful if no evidence is given, or if no more evidence is given than has been given at a particular point of the case, for it is obvious that as the controversy involved in the litigation travels on, the parties from moment to moment may reach points at which the Tribunal will have to say that, if the case stops there it must be decided in a particular manner." If no more evidence has been given by the plaintiff in the present case than that Liptons' Code system was not infallible, he would not be entitled to a finding, that there was absence of reasonable and probable cause. He had to go further and to prove that they did not take reasonable care to inform themselves of the facts and that they did not honestly believe in the case which they placed before the Magistrate. Having done this and established that the defendants acted without reasonable and probable cause, he had to go further still in order to obtain a decree, and to prove also [to borrow the words used by Cave, J. in his summing up to the Jury in Abrath v. North Eastern Railway (2)] that the defendants in what they did were actuated by malice, that is to say, were actuated by some motive other than an honest desire to bring a man whom they believed to have offended against the criminal law to justice.

The plaintiff has succeeded in proving that the defendants do not work according to a system which enables them to say positively the date within a few days on which any tin of their tea was filled, packed and despatched from their Calcutta Warehouse. Several instances of tins being sent off without any Code letters on them or with letters which cannot be read have been proved. These show that if there is supervision of the packing operations, which are described as being carried out by coolies, that supervision is not effective. It has been admitted by the defendant's witnesses that in the same room in which cases for "Railway orders" are packed there are shelves on which is kept a stock of 4,000 or 5,000 filled tins for compliance with local orders or miscellaneous orders (i. e., orders for boxes of mixed kinds of tea or of tea and other articles such as jam, coffee, etc.). It is true that the witnesses say that no tin is allowed to remain on these shelves for more than a week after being filled, but the evidence given does not satisfy us that adequate precautions to this end are prescribed. The plaintiff has proved, further, that his consignments from Liptons' in the last three months 1914 were four and were despatched on 30th September, 7th October, 12th December and 22nd December. A tin found in his shop on 12th April 1915 was Code marked 2nd week October 1914, and this, if received by him direct from Liptons' (and there is nothing to indicate the contrary) must have been packed in the consignment of 12th December.

Again, there is Mr. O'Neil Shaw's evidence that two boxes which showed no signs of having been opened since they were first packed contained tins marked 3rd week November 1914 and 3rd week December 1914. It was elicited, too, from a book produced by Ashutosh Kumar, Liptons' despatch clerk, that 95 cases were despatched on 3rd January 1917 in fulfillment of 43 orders which had been received on various dates from 16th December 1916 and 1st January 1917. This fact contradicts the declarations of this same witness and of other witnesses for the defendant that tea ordered is tinned, packed and despatched on the day of arrival of the order.

Finally, there is the evidence of Mr. Marshall. The lower Court considered him unworthy of belief as a discontented former employee of Liptons', but the state of discontent imputed to him is scarcely made on the record. It is certainly impossible to reconcile his description of the method of packing adopted in Liptons' Warehouse with that given by Liptons' present employees and by Mr. Newby. Mr. Marshall had left Liptons before the events now under discussion occurred, but the other witnesses say that the system was the same in his time as it was in 1914 and 1915, and Mr. Marshall declares that he visited Liptons' Warehouse in May 1915 and found things being done then exactly as they had been done when he was employed. We can find nothing on the record to suggest any reason why Mr. Marshall should perjure himself on behalf of Abdul Shakur. He belongs now to what may be a rival firm, but we cannot suppose that he would be encouraged by his employers to obtain custom for them by giving false evidence in Courts of Justice on behalf of persons likely to be lucrative clients. It has been urged for the defendants that in comparison with Mr. Marshall their principal witness Mr. Newby is thoroughly disinterested since he has severed his connection with Liptons', but there is an obvious retort that Mr. Newby, who appears still to be connected with the tea industry, would not relish being known in business circles as the man who costs Rs. 17,000 in damages. It is fair to say at this stage that we have been favourably impressed by the record of Mr. Newby's evidence to which we shall return. Our immediate concern is with what Mr. Marshall says.

The packing procedure described by him is up to a certain stage more methodical prima facie than that stated by Liptons' witnesses, which appears to us, if rigidly adhered to, to involve machinery and labourers alternately working at high pressure and standing idle perhaps for a whole day. According to Mr. Marshall tins are taken from the labelling machine to the shelves where they are stacked by colours, and the packers draw their supplies from the shelves. Packed cases are stocked in the sameroom, also by colours, and, when an order comes, the required numbers of cases are taken out and sent to the Railway Station. This may be taken out of the shelves and packed on the day on which they are placed there or they may stay on the shelves for weeks or months. Packed cases may remain a month or two before being removed.

The version of Liptons' employees has been narrated already. They have explained that Mr. Marshall himself admits that tea deteriorates from the moment of tinning and that the deterioration may be noticeable after six months to the consumer and they say that for this reason tea is not tinned until orders arrive.

The only method of testing these two divergent stories is by the result of Mr. O'Neil Shaw's examination of two cases, and this indicates that neither account is strictly accurate. The bulk of the tins in both cases had been filled on the day of despatch or the day before and this fact does not corroborate Mr. Marshall. On the other hand, the presence of November filled tins contradicts the other version and the truth seems to be that, although efforts are made to send out newly tinned tea, there are other previously packed tins lying about in the packing room, and there is no effective arrangement for keeping these from getting mixed up with the freshly filled tins. Mr. Marshall says that the Despatch clerk checks the colours of the tins packed, but that there is no check of the Code mark, and here he seems to be right. When he says that the system is such that tins filled months before and boxes packed months before are knowingly allowed to remain in the Warehouse before being sent out he is probably wrong. His own statement and the other evidence had made quite clear the advantage which tea merchants gain by placing tea in the hands of consumers at the earliest possible moment after packing, and a successful business, such as Liptons' has been shown to be, must be presumed to work towards that object.

We come now to the second point, the absence of reasonable and probable cause.

ABDUL SHAKUR V. LIPTON & CO.

We think that Mr. Newby did believe honestly when he placed the matter in the hands of his Solicitors that the system of filling, labelling, packing and despatching was capable of rendering it impossible for a tin filled at the beginning of October to be contained in a case despatched at the end of October. Mr. Newby was very frank and very patient throughout what seems to us to have been an unnecessarily long cross-examination. He says that he did hold that belief and there is no reason for doubting his word. But was his belief based on reasonable grounds? We think not. He was manager of the warehouse and it was his duty to know every thing that went on there. He has committed himself to the positive assertions that not only would it be impossible for tins packed in October to be despatched in December, but that it would also be impossible for tins packed in the 1st week of December to be despatched by Railway in the 3rd week of December, and that it would be impossible for one case to contain tins of different dates. In the light of the proof given to the contrary, these statements can only mean that Mr. Newby did not take reasonable care to inform himself of the true facts. He was unable, when challenged in cross-examination on the 24th February 1917 to swear positively that he made full enquiry regarding the truth of the allegations in paragraph 5 of the complaint filed on the 9th April 1915. Those allegations were that Abdul Shakur has affixed his labels, "despatched on 22nd December 1914 and received 4th January 1915" to tins supplied to him on antecedent dates and received in 1914. The answer given to the question is, of course, additional proof of Mr. Newby's good faith and anxiety to speak nothing but the truth, but the plaintiff is entitled to claim the benefit to his case of the character of the answer. Another damaging admission was elicited in the same cross-examination. The question was "Have you ever got back tins from customers at Lahore, which according to you are old, before or after the criminal case?" The answer was, "Most likely; you can quite understand that with millions of tins going out from Liptons' scarcely a week passes without we received some complaint regarding tea which may have become contaminated. I cannot remember any instance in Lahore." There were, then, complaints, which it seems to us should have put Mr. Newby on his guard against absolute faith in his system, and we think that a prudent man should have made a thorough enquiry into what was actually being done in the packing room before making up his mind definitely that the October marked tins purchased from Abdul Shakur's shop by Lajpat Ram's agent could not possibly have been included in the consignment of the 22nd December.

It is true that Mr. Newby took legal advice before instituting his complaint and that Lajpat Ram was instructed to "place the whole case openly" before Mr. Broadway (letter dated 9th March 1915 Exhibit P.R. 17 page 34, printed record). But the information laid before the Solicitors and Mr. Broadway as facts has not been disclosed and herein lies a material distinction between the present case and the well-known Privy Council case Corea v. Peiris (3) which has been cited by the defendant's learned Advocate. In Corea v. Peiris (3) the respondent obtained a decision in his favour that he had acted with reasonable and probable cause on proof that he had believed the story told to him by old trusted servants, that he had consulted his legal advisers at every step and that he had taken action in defence of his title to his property in the bona fide belief that the appellant has trespassed on his land and forcibly removed his goods. Both the legal advisers, however, whom Mr. Peiris consulted entered the witness-box and described in detail what had been placed before them, and the information given by the old and trusted servants was not of such a nature that Mr. Peiris could have verified it by personal observation. There are other distinguishing features which need be dwelt upon, notably the antecedents of the plaintiff. In the present case Mr. Newby may have made special enquiries from his Warehouse Staff and may have been told the same story as the witnesses have told in Court but there is no proof that he did so, and, if it be assumed that he must have done so, he was not compelled to rely upon the assurances given by his subordinates. There were direct tests which he could apply himself; for instance, he could have gleaned a certain number of packed boxes and scrutinized the Code marks of the contents. As for what he told his Solicitors, we can only presume from the contents of the complaint subsequently put into Court that he must have told them that the Code mark system was absolutely watertight. He thought that it was, but he did not take reasonable steps to verify his belief, and the system was not watertight. Therefore, the defendants did not have reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. The lower Court went wrong in thinking it sufficient proof of reasonable and probable cause that the defendants stated in their complaint nothing beyond what they believed to be the absolute truth.

The third and the most important point is the question of malice, for it is not enough for the plaintiff to prove absence of reasonable and probable cause. It has been made clear, as we have stated already, that the main object which the defendants desired to attain by the prosecution was to protect their own business interests. This does not mean that they did not believe the plaintiff to have offended against the law and that they did not honestly desire to bring him to justice. Mr. Newby has sworn that his motive was to prevent the plaintiff from selling tea with a false description and that he had no indirect motive such as to induce the plaintiff to renew his old agreement. The expressions of indignation at Abdul Shakur's conduct contained in certain letters to Lajpat Ram, the talk of bringing "the most damaging action against Shakur," (letter of 9th March 1915 Exhibit P. R. 17) the assertions that "we mean business" and that "we are going to stop this false dealing at any cost" (letter of 8th March Exhibit Z. 5) are in no way inconsistent with this position, which was perfectly legitimate. There is, however, an argument in favour of malice having been established which has been pressed strenuously and which is based upon the proceedings of Lajpat Ram in connection with the labelling of the stock in other Lahore shops as packed in 1915 and alluded to at the beginning of our judgment.

The only account of these proceedings is contained in incomplete fragments of correspondence between Liptons' and Lajpat Ram which the plaintiff succeeded in getting out of the defendants. The full correspondence has not been produced, and the defendant's Counsel in the commission proceedings at Calcutta said that he could produce nothing more, but presumably the missing letters are or were in the defendant's power and possession. On the other hand, Lajpat Ram himself would have been the most material witness on the point, and there is nothing to show that the plaintiff on whom the burden of proving malice lay, made any attempt to place this man in the witness-box. The record shows that Lajpat Ram was at times in Court during the trial of the suit.

It has been proved, as we have stated, that tea packed in 1914 was labelled in Lahore shops as packed in 1915. Of this there is no doubt. The tins with the labels and the 1914 Code marks are before us in Court and they have been identified by the persons from whose shops they were obtained. The suggestion is that Lajpat Ram was authorised and encouraged by the Head Office to label tea falsely, that in any case the Head Office sent Lajpat Ram 4,000 labels with a free hand and knew that he was likely to put the labels on old 1914 tea and that the firm took no steps to prevent him from doing this. It is contended that Lajpat Ram was the firm's agent, that it must be responsible for his action. That the firm, while professing to protect the public by prosecuting Abdul Shakur, was at the very moment perpetrating a fraud on the public of the same character as that imputed to Abdul Shakur by supplying labels for the misdescription of tea in the shops of other traders and that such conduct is conclusive proof of malice.

Now, Mr. Newby has sworn that his instructions to Lajpat Ram were to withdraw all the 1914 packed tea from the Lahore shops when the special 1915 labels were issued. Mr. Gregory, Counsel for the defendants in the Calcutta proceedings, was asked to produce the letter in which these instructions were conveyed but was unable to do so. Nevertheless, there are letters by Lajpat Ram on the record which have been admitted in evidence without objection and which corroborate what Mr. Newby says. On 28th January 1915 (Exhibit P. R. 32, page 45 of the printed record) Lajpat Ram wrote in reply to a letter from Liptons' of 21st January 1915. "The names of merchants are being printed in tickets. A list of stocks of 1914 held by merchants is being prepared. I will ticket only those tins which were received by merchants in 1915 and will not give chance to Shakur to bring a fresh trouble. The instructions conveyed in your letter are very clear and require no modification." Again, acknowledging another letter of 1st February 1915 Lajpat Ram wrote (Exhibit P. R. 30, page 44 of the printed record): "The 1914 stock in possession of our customers will be taken possession of by Saturday next, but the merchants want similar quantities of tea in exchange." There is certainly no proof that any 1914 tea was actually returned to Calcutta by any shopkeeper in Lahore, and there is, on the other hand, proof that 1914 tea was labelled in certain shops as packed in 1915; but Lajpat Ram is not shown to have known the Code and letter from Liptons' (Exhibit P. R. 17 dated the 9th March 1915, page 34 of the printed record) proves that they believed that he did not know. Lajpat Ram would thus have had to depend upon the word of the shopkeepers for the dates of their consignments.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff points to the evidence of one of these shopkeepers, Firoz Din, and to a letter from Liptons' to Lajpat Ram (Exhibit P. R. 26 dated the 22nd February 1915) as showing that Liptons' encouraged or connived at false labelling. Firoz Din stated "in 1915 an agent of Liptons' came to me and told me to keep my tins ready and he would come again and label them. He came again and affixed the labels. I think their colour was red. The labels were special labels of 1915. The tea in the tins was old tea, that is to say, that the tea had come before 1915, some 7, 8 or 9 months previously." The passage in the letter runs "Messrs. Bakhsh Elahi and Company," (a firm of agents in Calcutta), "were instructed to let us have full particulars of all Lahore orders but they have not apparently done so in the case of Mohammad Din-Firoz Din's order, and we trust you will see the tins ticketed." Liptons', however, (and perhaps Lajpat Ram too), are exonerated by the terms of Lajpat Ram's letter to which this letter is a reply. Lajpat Ram wrote on 18th February 1915 (Exhibit Z 16 page 51 printed record) "Messrs. Mohammad Din-Feroz Din, the China House, have received 16 cases of tea in January last through Bakhsh Elahi and Company, but without tickets. I will ticket the tins in a day or two. But I would like to request you to tell Bakhsh Elahi and Company that they should in future instruct their packers to specially label the consignments intended for Lahore."

The evidence of other shopkeepers produced as witnesses by the plaintiff on the subject of this labelling was as follows.—

Kanshi Nath, from whose shop two tins with 1914 Code marks and 1915 labels were procured, stated that Lajpat Ram supplied him with the labels, that 90 or 100 labels were pasted on by Lajpat Ram himself, that the tea had been received in November 1914, and that when labelled it was falsely described. In cross-examination he admitted that he could read the labels and understood what they stated; that he made no objection to the false description being put on, and that he did not tell any purchaser that the label was false. This man has stultified himself.

Sitaram stated that Lajpat Ram labelled 200 or 250 tins in his shop, that he had a stock of tea in December and received a fresh consignment in January, that the labels were put on in April when the tea was two or three months old, that he did not know whether the old tins or the new tins were labelled and that he did not assent to nor would have allowed a false label being affixed.

Mohan Lal said that Lajpat Ram labelled 120 tins in his shop all of which had been ordered in December 1914 and had been received on 4th January 1915, and that "Lajpat Ram told me that the old tea should not be sold and that traders should see that the tins bear the label of 1915." A tin labelled 1915 was procured from this witness's shop which is Code marked 3rd week December 1914.

In our opinion the plaintiff has not proved either that the Company instructed Lajpat. Ram to label old tea in Lahore shops as packed in 1915 or that Lajpat Ram himself knowingly did so label old tea. Lajpat Ram may have been careless, in fact he was, for he sent his sons out to label in certain shops and he issued labels to the shopkeepers themselves, but, the defendants, in spite of the fact that they have not produced the full correspondence, have satisfied us that their instructions to him were not to label 1914 tea.

It has been remarked already that some of Lajpat Ram's letters contain indications of personal spite against Abdul Shakur and some of the information conveyed by him to Liptons' was inaccurate. But the prosecution had nothing to do either with Lajpat Ram's spite or with false information sent by him. It was solely due to true information given by Lajpat Ram that tea tins bearing the Code mark of 1st week October 1914 had been labelled by Abdul Shakur as despatched from Calcutta on 22nd December 1914. We do not think that concrete malice on the part of the defendants in the matter of Abdul Shakur's prosecution can be evolved out of the mere carelessness and supineness of their agent Lajpat Ram in his dealing with Liptons' 1915 labels.

Mr. Andrews stated in his first examination as complainant that tea packed in 1914 is of different quality to that packed in 1915. This has been fastened upon by the plaintiff's Counsel as an indication of malice in the light of subsequent proof that Liptons' successfully maintain a continuously uniform quality, and it is suggested that the statement was made falsely in order to induce the Magistrate to issue process. We think, however, that the reference was to the deterioration of tea from the date of tinning as to which all the witnesses connected with the tea industry are agreed.

Next, we have been referred to a passage in Rai Jung Bahadur v. Rai Gudur Sahoy (4) where the learned Judges agreed with the Court below that, ordinarily, the absence of a reasonable and probable cause in instituting a proceeding which terminates in favour of the plaintiff would give rise to the inference of malice. This proposition was considered in Shama Bibi v. Chairman of Baranagore Municipality (5) to have been expressed too broadly. We can readily imagine instances where such an inference might arise but the correct law applicable to the present case, in our opinion, is to be found in Brown v. Hawkes (6). There the Jury held, firstly, that the defendant did not take reasonable care to inform himself of the true facts of the case (as we have held here); secondly, that the defendant honestly believed in the full charge which he laid before the Magistrates (also as we have held) and, thirdly, that the defendant was actuated by malice and indirect motives in the proceedings taken against the plaintiff. On these findings the judgment was entered for the plaintiff. The Court of Appeal allowed the defendant's appeal, holding that, although the absence of reasonable and probable cause is some evidence from which malice may be inferred, the Jury, by their finding as to the honest belief of the defendant, had negated any inference which depended solely on such evidence, and that, in the absence of any other evidence of indirect motive, the finding of the Jury that the defendant was actuated by malice could not be supported. It was pointed out by Cave, J., (whose judgment ultimately was affirmed) in discussing the evidence that, if there was an honest belief in the plaintiff's guilt, neither anger nor hastiness on the part of the defendant would evidence malice, and that anger, so far from being a wrong or indirect motive, is one of the motives on which the law relies to secure the prosecution of offenders, while hastiness in the defendant's conclusion as to the plaintiff's guilt, although it might account for his coming to a wrong conclusion, does not show the presence of any indirect motive.

Lastly, we have been asked to accept as proof of malice the fact that Mr. Andrews did not at two stages after the commencement of proceedings withdraw from the prosecution of Abdul Shakur. The first stage was on 12th April when the search of Abdul Shakur's shop produced twelve labelled tins only of which five exhibited no distinct Code mark, the other seven being marked with dates previous to the 3rd week in December. The second stage was when Mr. O'Neil Shaw opened the two boxes with the result already described. There is no force in this argument. The 12th April was a long time after Abdul Shakur first commenced to under-cut the rates of the other shop-keepers and it would have been quite reasonable to suppose that by that date he had succeeded in selling nearly all his 1914 stock. At the time when Mr. O'Neil Shaw opened the boxes Mr. Andrews declared that he was not satisfied that either box had not been opened before, and he could not know what view the Magistrate was likely to take until the judgment had been delivered. The record shows that he made no incautious or intemperate statement imputing trickery to Abdul Shakur. He did not assert that the boxes had been tampered with, nor did he say that they must have been tampered with. He said in his cross-examination, "I am not satisfied that the case has not been opened before," and in re-examination, "I can't account for tins bearing different marks getting into one case. It is impossible for tins bearing different Code letters for the month to be despatched in one case." He appears to have assisted the Court readily in interpreting the Code marks on the unpacked tins, and there is no indication that he attempted to prevaricate or to withhold any information which might help the accused.

We hold, therefore, that while the plaintiff has proved that the defendants instituted proceedings against him without taking reasonable care to inform themselves of the true facts, nevertheless he has not succeeded in establishing that they were actuated by malice, and his appeal, therefore, must be dismissed. Since, however, the appellant has succeeded partially, and on an important point, in a case of much difficulty, we direct that parties bear their own costs.

Mortgage—Sale to mortgagees of mortgaged property—Mortgagee, liability of, to pay mortgage-debt, whether extinguished—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62.

Where a mortgagor sells a part of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, intending thereby with the sale-proceeds to pay off the mortgage-debt, the sale and the mortgage are entirely unconnected, and the effect of the sale is not to relieve the mortgagor of his liability to pay the mortgage-debt under section 62 of the Contract Act.

Appeal from a decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, dated the 8th April 1920, in Civil Suit No. 32 of 1919.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.,

Messrs. M. K. Padhye and S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was for foreclosure of a mortgage executed on 14th August 1908. It was of the simplest possible character, being a claim for the amount still due on the mortgage after making allowance for a payment of Rs. 9,000 made on 17th October 1917. On that date the mortgagor sold a portion of the property and paid the Rs. 9,000 he received for the sale to the mortgagees towards satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. It is the fact that the purchasers happened to be the mortgagees and that appears to have befogged all consideration of the case; the fact is practically irrelevant. The mortgagor originally agreed to sell the property for Rs. 9,000 on 9th January 1913, and he agreed also that the purchaser might retain enough of the purchase-money to pay off the mortgage. Such an agreement was unnecessary as the purchaser already had that right under the proviso to section 55 (5) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. It happens that at that time the amount due on the mortgage was less than Rs. 9,000.

2. But the defendant mortgagor did not carry out his agreement till he was compelled to do so by a decree of a Civil Court in a suit instituted under the Specific Relief Act; the sale-deed was eventually executed by the Court for him on 17th October 1917, by which time the amount due on the mortgage was considerably in excess of Rs. 9,000. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the parties intended that the sale should pay off and extinguish the mortgage, that is to say, that the sale was substituted for the original contract to pay the mortgage-debt, so that the mortgagor would no longer be bound to pay the mortgage-debt under section 62 of the Contract Act. This view is obviously and entirely wrong and arises out of a lax use of expressions. The parties undoubtedly intended that the mortgage should be fully paid off by means of the sale or rather of the sale-proceeds but not that it should be extinguished by the sale itself. In the latter case it would have been unnecessary to specify the value of the property sold or the exact amount due on the mortgage.

3. There is admittedly no indication of any such intention in the sale-deed, which was executed in 1917. The indication has apparently been found in the fact that when the agreement to sell was made the mortgage-debt was less than Rs. 9,000. That, however, indicates no more than an expectation that the sale would be effected within a reasonable time and before the amount due on the mortgage had increased beyond Rs. 9,000. It is, indeed, the case for both parties that it was not the sale that was to pay off the mortgage-debt but that the sale proceeds were to be used for that purpose.

4. The sale and the mortgage are entirely unconnected except that they are between the same parties and cover the same property. Even if we go back to the agreement to sell, as has been done, this is perfectly clear from the very fact that the balance of the consideration of the sale, after deducting whatever was found to be due on the mortgage, was to be paid to the mortgagor. It is made still clearer by the words of the document which was filed as Exhibit P-2 in the suit for specific performance. A translation of the relevant portion is as follows: "For the aforesaid sum of Rs. 9,000 the fields are sold to you. As earnest-money I have to-day received Rs. 500. As for the rest the balance after deducting whatever is found due on your mortgage will be paid to me when I get the sale-deed registered."

5. Nothing further need be said about the case except to note its similarity to that of Maung Shwe Goh v. Maung Inn (1) decided by the Privy Council. The appellants are undoubtedly entitled to the decree they seek. The decree of the lower Court is accordingly set aside. In place of it a decree will issue in the terms of r. 2 of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code ordering foreclosure of the property mentioned in the plaint in default of payment by the defendants by the 5th of January 1923 of the sum of Rs. 9,618-6-0, plus all the costs incurred by the plaintiffs in the lower Court and in this appeal.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in the suit, out of which this second appeal arises, are Jains belonging to Amritsar. The property in dispute is a house and a half share in a shop, which belonged to one Kanshi Ram and after his death came into the possession of his widow, Musammatt Uttam Devi. She adopted a boy, named Amin Chand, son of Gopi Mal, and executed a deed of adoption, Exhibit D-5, dated the 29th April 1907, adopting him as a son to her husband and herself. She died in May 1907 and shortly before her death she executed a Will, Exhibit D-6, dated the 20th of May 1907, by which she appointed Gopi Mal, father of Amin Chand, to act as a guardian of his person and property in her place. The boy then remained under the care of his natural father but died as a minor in November 1913, after having been ill for a considerable period. The property was at that time in the possession of Gopi Mal in his capacity as a guardian of the deceased minor. Certain persons, including Ishar Das, plaintiff in the present case, claimed shares in the property as collaterals of Kanshi Ram, deceased. This matter was referred to arbitration by both the parties and the arbitrators gave an award treating Ishar Das, etc., as collaterals and giving them certain specified shares. This award was not, however, accepted, for one reason or other, by the parties, and was not acted upon. On the 19th December 1913 the plaintiff Ishar Das brought the present suit against Gopi Mal and others for possession of one-fourth share of the property left by Kanshi Ram. Some of the defendants were collaterals other than the plaintiff, who were made pro-forma defendants, because they did not join him in bringing the suit. Gopi Mal, the contesting defendant, denied the alleged relationship between the plaintiff and Kanshi Ram and further pleaded that the widow was the sole owner and had passed a complete title to Amin Chand and that he was now entitled to succeed Amin Chand as his heir. He also pleaded that he had spent Rs. 3,261-0-0 on the minor and this amount was a charge on the property and no one could get any part of the property without paying the above sum. The Trial Court held that the plaintiff was a reversioner of Kanshi Ram, but he was not entitled to succeed to the property left by Amin Chand, because the property would now pass on to the natural heirs of the latter. It, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit who appealed against this decision. The learned District Judge agreed with the Trial Court in holding that the plaintiff was a collateral of Kanshi Ram and also came to the conclusion that the collaterals of Kanshi Ram were entitled to succeed to the property and not the natural heirs of Amin Chand. It remanded the case, therefore, under O. XLVI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, for a decision on Issues Nos. 5 and 6, which ran as follows and had not been decided by the Court of first instance.

5. What is plaintiff's share in the properties in question? On plaintiff. 6. Whether (Gopi Mal and Kheman Mal) defendants Nos. 1 and 2, spent any monies for Musammatt Uttam Devi or Amin Chand, and if so whether these create a first lien on the property in dispute? On defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The report of the learned Subordinate Judge on these issues was made on 6th April 1920, to the effect that the share of the plaintiff amounted to one-fourth according to the pedigree-table. Exhibit P. 1 relied on by him, and that Gopi Mal was not entitled to the money claimed by him on account of expenses incurred, as such expenses were not a charge on the property. The learned District Judge has agreed with the view taken by the Subordinate Judge and has accepted the appeal of the plaintiff and passed a decree as prayed for in the plaint. Defendant Gopi Mal and Kheman Mal have come up to this Court in second appeal and we have heard Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf of the appellants, whose arguments may be divided in the following four heads:—

1. It is not proved that the plaintiff was a collateral of Kanshi Ram as the pedigree-table relied upon by the plaintiff has not been properly proved.

2. That by virtue of the adoption of Amin Chand by Musammatt Uttam Devi under the Jain Law the property must pass on to the heirs of Amin Chand instead of going to the collaterals of Kanshi Ram.

3. That the appeal of the plaintiff in the lower Appellate Court had really abated for want of substitution of any one as the representative of the plaintiff in time after his death during the pendency of the appeal and, therefore, the learned District Judge has erred in not dismissing it.

4. That in any case Gopi Mal was entitled to be re-imbursed for money spent out of his pocket in his capacity as a trustee and the Court below had erred in simply declaring that the money was not a charge on the property and giving no finding as to the amount actually due.

We will take up the above points seriatim. As regards the first point it is urged that the oral evidence adduced to prove the relationship consisted of the statements of P. W. No. 1, P. W. No. 3 and P. W. No. 4, who had very little first hand knowledge and whose evidence was of no value. It is added that the inference drawn by the Courts below from the facts that there was an admission of the status of Ishar Das and other collaterals as such in the reference to arbitration made by the parties is not a reasonable inference and cannot at any rate prove the pedigree-table as propounded by the plaintiff. We think, however, that the finding of the relationship between Ishar Das and Kanshi Ram must be treated as a finding of fact which cannot now be questioned. The following remarks were made on this point by the learned District Judge in his order dated the 5th January 1918, remanding the suit for decision on the fifth and sixth issues:—

"The evidence produced by the plaintiff in support of the pedigree-table is certainly somewhat scanty, but in 1907 the dispute was referred to arbitration though the award was never acted upon, and the arbitration proceedings amount to an admission of the plaintiff's relationship on the part of the defendants."

The relationship has been held to be established on the material above alluded to, by the Courts below. Meagre though the material may be, it is not open to us to interfere with this finding and we may add that the inference that they drew from the reference to arbitration is reasonable and legitimate. We, therefore, agree with the Courts below that it has been proved that Ishar Das was a collateral of Kanshi Ram and was entitled to one-fourth share of the latter's property, according to the pedigree table attached to the plaint.

Concerning point No. 2, emphasis is laid on the fact that the parties are Jains and their law differs in many respects from Hindu Law and that an adoption among them is a purely secular matter devoid of religious significance and that, therefore, Musammatt Uttam Devi, who is a Jain widow, and, as such, was an absolute owner, passed such a title to Amin Chand when she adopted him, that after him his property should go to his father or other natural heirs of his. Mr. Moti Sagar refers to Manak Chand v. Munna Lal (1) where it is laid down that an adoption among Jains is more akin to the Kririma than to the Dattaka form of adoption, and that a person adopted under the Kririma form is not transferred completely from his natural family to the family adopting him but can retain his ties with his natural relations. We are not very favourably impressed by this argument of the learned Counsel. There is nothing in Manak Chand v. Munna Lal (1) to show that Jains cannot adopt in the Dattaka form or that an adopted son among Jains can, in no case, become a member of the family of his adoption. In this particular case there can be no doubt so far as the intention of Musammatt Uttam Devi was concerned that she wanted to make the adoption as complete as possible and to bring Amin Chand into the family of her husband. She mentions in the deed of adoption that Gopi Mal has two other sons and has given his son Amin Chand to her and that she has adopted him as a son to her husband and to herself and that the boy should henceforth be treated like a son born to them. Under these circumstances, we think that the learned District Judge has rightly held that in the present case collaterals of Amin Chand were entitled to succeed to the property.

Coming to the question of abatement, we think there is no force in the contention. Ishar Das died after the case had been remanded by the District Judge under O. XII r. 25. On the 21st November 1918 an application was made to the Sub-Judge stating that the plaintiff died about 11 days back and praying that his legal representatives may be brought on the record. It is contended that this application should have been made to the District Judge, who was really seized of the case, and who actually proceeded to decide this application on 10th October 1919, but by that time the period within which the substitution could legally be made had elapsed and, therefore, there was no proper substitution. We do not see, however, that now that the learned District Judge has substituted Panna Lal and Khairati Ram as the representatives of Ishar Das, and it was open to him to extend the time for substitution of representatives, that we can or should interfere with his discretion in second appeal.

The only point that remains to be considered is that of expenses incurred by Gopi Mal. It is argued that he was appointed guardian of the person and property of the minor and thus stood in a fiduciary relation to the minor and should be regarded as a trustee and, under section 32 of the Indian Trusts Act II of 1882, is entitled to reimbursement of expenses. There is no doubt that he would be entitled to such reimbursement if it was established that he was a trustee, but, we are not satisfied that the position of trustee was created by the Will dated 10th May 1907, appointing him as guardian of the minor. Mr. Badri Das, who appears for the respondents, argues that Gopi Mal would be governed by the Guardians and Wards Act, as a guardian appointed under a Will, and there is no provision in the said Act entitling him to any such position as to claim reimbursement as a trustee. We have very carefully considered the arguments on this point, advanced by Counsel on both sides, but think that it is open to serious doubt that a trust was created by the Will above referred to, or that a guardian of a minor does in effect become a trustee. He may be a quasi-trustee for certain purposes, e.g., for money received by him on behalf of his ward, but it is not clear that he can incur expenses to any extent he likes without seeking the intervention of any Court in the hope that he would be allowed to create a charge on the property of the minor to that extent. In this particular case the greater part of the expenses is said to have been incurred owing to the illness of the minor and it is difficult to say whether all that expense was incurred by Gopi Mal in his capacity as a guardian or on account of natural filial affection. Moreover, he has admittedly been in possession of the property for many years and, has appropriated the mesne profits, and, according to the terms of his written statement, appears to have made no allowance for the sums so received, by him. We think that, under the circumstances, it cannot be said that the expense incurred by him was a charge on the property of which a proportionate share must be paid by the representatives of Ishar Das before they get possession of his share under the decree. If Gopi Mal has an equitable claim he can enforce it by a separate suit against the representatives of Ishar Das and against the other heirs of Kanshi Ram deceased.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 3rd October 1908 defendants Nos. 5 to 10 and Abdulla the father of defendants Nos. 11 and 12 mortgaged a house situated in Munhai Mohalla Jubbulpore to Gangadhar and on the 28th October 1911 sold it to defendant No. 4 Bansidhar. On the 9th January 1913 Gangadhar's son Sitaram who was the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 mortgaged the above mortgage of 1908 and a house of his own situated in Bhaldarpura Jubbulpore to Laxman Rao and Sonu. Sonu assigned this mortgage to Bhaiyalal. The plaintiffs are Bhaiyalal's representatives. The present suit purports to be based on both the above mortgages and the plaintiffs claim in default of payment of the debt due on the mortgage of 1913 the sale of both the houses. Defendant No. 4 denied the plaintiff's right to the sale of the Munhai Mohalla house. The issue framed on this plea was "whether the plaintiff as sub-mortgagee cannot sue on Abdulla's mortgage?" The lower Court's finding on this issue is as follows:—"The plaintiffs as sub-mortgagees can simply obtain an order for sale of the rights of Abdulla's mortgagees under the mortgage-bond dated October 3, 1908 and this is my finding on Issue No. 8. The plaintiffs are entitled to have an order for the sale of the rights of Abdulla's mortgagee, under the mortgage-bond dated October 3, 1908. Strictly speaking, the plaintiffs are not entitled to have the property of Abdulla sold." The lower Court has passed a decree directing the sale of the Bhaldarpura house and of the rights of the mortgagee Gangadhar in the Munhai Mohalla house.

The plaintiff appeals and urges that an account should have been taken of the mortgage of 1908 and that an order directing the sale of the Munhai Mohalla house should have been passed.

In Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (1) it was ruled that a sub-mortgagee is entitled to sue for and obtain a sale of the property mortgaged to him, namely, the mortgagee rights of the sub-mortgagor. In Zaki Hasan v. Deo Nath Sahai (2) this was held to be in accord with the principle recognized by the Madras High Court in *Muthu Vijia Raghunatha Ramachandra v. the original mortgagee on the date of the sub-mortgage to claim such relief. In Ram Subhag v. Nar Singh (7) Stanley, C. J., referring to this ruling observed that there was a good deal in the judgment of Subramania Aiyar, J., in support of his view which commended itself to him. In Bansi Lal Bhagat v. Durga Prashad (6) it was observed: "One of the objects which a Court of Equity ought always to have in view is to minimise the number of cases which may arise out of the relation between the parties to a mortgage. The view taken by the Allahabad High Court would involve the necessity of two suits, a suit on the sub-mortgage and, after the foreclosure of the interest of the sub-mortgagors, a suit on the original mortgage; whereas, according to the practice which is followed in the Courts of Equity and the Madras High Court, the equities between the parties may be adjusted in one suit by allowing the sub-mortgagee to bring the property mortgaged to sale for the amount of the original mortgage." Gokul Dass v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. (8) is a case where the suit was brought by an equitable sub-mortgagee against the original mortgagor. In English Law the sub-mortgagee is allowed to enforce the original mortgage against the original mortgagor and the form of a decree in a suit of that kind is given in Seton on Judgments and Orders, 6th Edition at page 2073.

I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to ask for a sale of Abdulla's house in the present case. The pleas, therefore, that arise in connection with the mortgage of 1908 must be decided. If anything is found due on this mortgage, the usual decree for sale must be passed against the mortgagors, defendants Nos. 5 to 12. They will be directed to pay to the plaintiff the amount found due on this mortgage not exceeding the amount due on the plaintiff's mortgage of 1913. The balance, if any, will be directed to be paid to the original mortgagee's heirs, defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The case is remanded to the lower Court to be dealt with advertance to the above remarks. Mr. Arabi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff claims damages for the loss of one bale out of a consignment of six bales of cotton yarn despatched by him from Lakhimpur to Gola Gokaran Nath by the Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway. The consignment was sent on the 26th January 1922 under a Risk-Note in Form B, which provided that the Railway Company shall not be responsible for any loss, destruction, deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment from any cause whatever, except for the loss of a complete consignment or one or more packages, forming part of a consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration, or to theft by, or to the wilful neglect of, its servants or transport agents or carriers employed by them, provided that the term "wilful" neglect shall not be held to include fire, robbery from a running train, or any other unforeseen event or accident. There was another Risk-Note in Form A which declared that the bales were in slack condition, and the Railway Company would not be responsible for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination, and for any loss arising therefrom from the same.

The consignment was placed in a Road Van attached to a mixed train, which was supposed to have left Lakhimpur on the 26th January 1922 at 9.30 P.M. The doors of the Road Van were enclosed with bolts or cotter pins; but were neither locked nor sealed. There were two intervening stations, on which the guard on duty is supposed to have examined the doors, and found them in proper condition; but whether he did so or not rests merely on his evidence, which is not supported by any independent testimony. "When the train reached Gola Gokran Nath at about 10 P.M., one of the station staff called out that the door of the Road Van was open and, on examination, two bundles of cotton yarn, belonging to two different consignments, were found missing. One of them formed part of the consignment in suit.

The Court below found, that the Railway Company was guilty of wilful neglect in not locking the Road Van, or otherwise properly securing it against theft and decreed the claim accordingly for damages suffered by plaintiff. It is urged here on behalf of the Railway Company, that a Road Van is not locked but its doors are secured by bolts, because goods have to be loaded and unloaded at intermediate stations, and that the guard on duty is required to examine the bolts at every intermediate station.

If such a practice prevails, it is not consistent with the security which the Railway Company is bound to provide for the goods entrusted to its custody for transit because the guard may not always be alert in the discharge of his duty. There may, moreover, be at times temporary stoppages in the way or at some distance from the Railway Station, due to the signal being not down, or to some other cause and the security afforded by the bolting of the doors may prove utterly insufficient. If by any inadvertence the bolts are not sufficiently well-secured, theft may also be otherwise possible. The right of a Railway Company to limit its liability in consideration of a reduction of the freight by special agreement has been recognised in Hazari Lal v. Secretary of State for India (1) and G. I. P. Railway Company v. Jitan Ram-Nirmal Ram (2) and as observed in the East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmali-Behari Lal (3) and Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company v. Ranchhodlal-Chhotalal & Co. (4) the burden of proving wilful neglect by the Railway Administration or its servants lies on the plaintiff; but in the circumstances above mentioned, wilful neglect may be inferred from the fact that the steps taken to secure the goods against loss by theft were inadequate. In Bengal and North-Western Railway Company v. Haji Mut-saddi (5) damages were awarded because the wagons carrying goods were not locked during transit; and the fastening of the doors was considered absolutely insecure and ineffective. A theft is not the same thing as a robbery from a running train, because the latter imports the idea of the use of force.

The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

A suit for partition of an item of joint family property is unsustainable where the plaintiff has already brought a suit and obtained a decree for partition as regards another item.

A suit for partition of joint family property is a comprehensive ascertainment of the assets, including immoveable property belonging to the family and the liabilities to be satisfied out of those assets. [p. 430, col. 1.]

The effect of the provisions contained in section 11, Explanation IV, and O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code is that ordinarily only one suit for partition will lie. The cause of action in a partition suit of joint family property must be regarded as exhaustive of the whole property available for division so far as its existence is known at the date of the plaint, even where the properties are situate within the jurisdiction of more Courts than one. [p. 431, col. 1.]

Sections 16 and 17 of the Civil Procedure Code do not override the principles of the provisions of section 11 and O. II, r. 2 of the Code. They simply provide for the machinery to enable litigants with property in more than one jurisdiction to adhere to these principles. [p. 431, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—In this case the question is whether the present suit is sustainable for one item of what is admittedly joint family property, in view of the fact that the plaintiff has already brought a suit and obtained a decree for other items.

We cannot follow the learned Judge in deciding in the plaintiff's favour, on the sole ground that the property now claimed as in possession of the 7th defendant is alleged by him to be his by purchase and prescription, whereas in the previous suit it seems to have been referred to in the plaint as in the possession of the 7th defendant as a tenant. In either case the joint family character of the property was in question, and it was on account of that character that reference to it was made before and the claim to it is made now. We cannot see how the ground on which the 7th defendant may be withholding it from the co-parcenary is material to the plaintiff's duty to have included it in the previous suit.

To turn to the grounds of decision adopted by the learned District Munsif, it cannot be disputed that a suit for partition of joint family property is a comprehensive ascertainment of the assets, including immoveable property, belonging to the family and the liabilities to be satisfied out of these assets. In our opinion, the contention that generally only one suit for partition will lie represents settled law. That is the only view reconcilable with the terms of section 11, Explanation IV and O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The ground on which the plaintiff would distinguish the present case and exclude it from the purview of those provisions, is that the property dealt with in his previous suit was situated within the jurisdiction of one Court, whereas the property now in question is situated in that of another. It is no doubt the case that the first of those Courts is in the Bombay Presidency whilst the second in the Bellary District of this Presidency. But we have not been shown how that difference of Presidency is in any way material. The plaintiff's argument is that sections 16 and 17 of the Code give him the option to bring either two suits in the two Courts for the property in the jurisdiction of each or one suit in whichever Court he prefers for the whole property, and that he has simply exercised his option in choosing the former alternative. That, however, takes no account of the broader principle involved in section 11, Explanation IV and O. II, r. 2 or of the meaning to be attached to the expression "cause of action" used in them. The cause of action, as already observed, in a partition suit of joint family property must be regarded as exhaustive of the whole property available for division, so far as its existence is known at the date of the plaint. We have not been shown any authority for holding that the principles of the provisions of the Code last mentioned are over-ridden by those of sections 16 and 17 or that sections 16 and 17 are not simply the machinery provided to enable litigants with property in more than one jurisdiction to adhere to those principles. The decision quoted Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (1) no doubt refers to the Mofussil, but as the learned Judges observed, the words of sections 11 and 12 in the Code then in force enabled the plaintiff to sue in one Court in respect of property situated in more than one, only with the permission of the Saddar Court, the position then being identical with that which now obtained on the Original Side of the High Court, where permission is necessary before a suit can be brought in respect of property outside as well as in the Original Side Jurisdiction. Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (1), therefore, and other cases relating to the original jurisdiction of this and other High Courts are accordingly beside the point. In Mansaram Chakravarti v. Ganesh Chakravarti (2) the property was held in common. There was, therefore, no question of the necessity for an exhaustive settlement of assets and liabilities, which a suit for partition of family property entails. Ram Harakh v. Ram Lal (3) is based mainly on, Subba Rau v. Rama Rau (1) and with all respect we differ from the learned Judges in the view we take of that case and are unable to follow them in the remainder of their judgments. In these circumstances, we cannot hold that the position of the suit properties in two jurisdictions makes any difference in the application of the principle involved in O. II, r. 2.

Reliance is next placed on the mention by the plaintiff of the property now in dispute in his previous plaint, that mention being accompanied by a statement that he reserves his right to sue for it and that he would enforce that right in other proceedings. Such statements are not uncommon in plaints and are made properly and naturally, when the property in question is not immediately divisible and the plaintiff desires to put on record that he will claim it in the future. But in the case before us we have not been shown how his statement could have any effect, since, he could not exclude the application of the principle above referred to by merely saying that he would not respect it.

The remaining argument addressed to us in support of the lower Appellate Court's decision is that the property now claimed, was excluded from the previous suit in consequence of the negligence or fraud of the plaintiff's guardian. There is no such allegation in the plaint in the present suit, and none was made in the appeal to the lower Appellate Court. We are not prepared to consider a new case of that description for the first time in the second appeal.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the lower Appellate Court's decision being set aside and the District Munsif's decision restored with costs throughout.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Patna, dated the 19th February 1921, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, Barh, dated the 31st October 1919.

Mr. Shiveswar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal and B. C. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The allegations in the plaint are these: The plaintiffs are Istim-rari Mokarraridars and Thikudars of Mouza Saidpur Soniawan. In the village there is a plot of gair mazrua land belonging to the plaintiffs, an area of 1.5 acres with which the defendants have no concern. Since the 5th of March 1919 the defendants had been digging and taking out earth from this land without leave of the plaintiffs and without any right. The plaintiffs claimed a declaration, that the defendants had no right to dig and take earth out of this land and an order of the defendants to fill up the ditch, and damages and an injunction. The defence, so far as is now material, is that the plaintiffs are not the whole body of proprietors of the village and the suit is, therefore, bad for defect of parties; and that the defendants, who are seven tenants of the village, and their ancestors, have been from time immemorial digging and taking earth from the land in suit, whenever required, without leave of the proprietors, and that they have a right to do so; that their houses are situated near the land in suit and the village is visited by flood each year whereby their houses are damaged, and they dig earth from the land for their repairs.

The Munsif held that although the plaintiffs were not proprietors of the whole village, they were in possession of it; but their lessors ought to have been made parties to the suit because two of the leases, under which the plaintiff held, reserved to the lessors all cases of dispute about title; and that by reason of the provisions of O. I, r. 9, the suit was nevertheless maintainable. The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the plaintiffs represent the entire body of landlords.

The learned Counsel for the defendants, who are the respondents in this appeal, relied on the decision in Madon Mohan Chattopadhyaya v. Akshoy Kumar Baruri (1) and contended that no decree on an easement could be passed in the absence of some of the servient owners. That was a case in which the persons claiming the easement were plaintiffs. Here the plaintiffs are the servient owners and, although those proprietors, who are not parties, may not be bound by the decree, there is nothing to prevent the Court from adjudicating on the rights of the parties actually before it.

On the question of substance the Munsif believed the witnesses for the defence, that the defendants had been digging and taking earth from this land without protest by the proprietors for more than 20 years. He also held that it was natural for them to dig earth from this land near their houses to repair them and that they had a right to do so. He further held that although there were embankments on the sides of the ditch in suit, which would be damaged if the ditch were dug to the depth of two men's height, yet as the ditch was only breast deep, or the depth of one man's height, the plaintiffs had sustained no injury. He, therefore, dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that the village community can exercise common rights in respect of the disputed land and that the common use that is made of this land is to take earth from it for the purposes of occasional repairs of their houses when damaged by a heavy flood; that the plaintiffs had no exclusive right of possession on the land and that the embankments were in no danger of collapse. He dismissed the appeal.

It is now contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the taking of the earth is not an easement but a profit a prendre and cannot be acquired by custom which would be void for unreasonableness as tending to the entire destruction of the property; that no decided case recognise any right to take away the subject-matter of an easement of custom, and that the Subordinate Judge has not considered whether the custom is reasonable or not. In Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (2) it was held that on proof of enjoyment of a right of pasturage over the waste land of the village from time immemorial there could be no difficulty in the way of the Court in finding a legal origin for the right. In Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Gandauri Singh (3) it was observed as follows at page 337* "It is true that we have been shown no case which recognises a profit a prendre in gross by custom, but the only obstacle in recognizing profit a prendre in favour of fluctuating bodies is that the exercise of the custom would operate to destroy the subject-matter of the right, and if in this case it can be established that the exercise of the right by the Sonthal and Ghatwals was not, under the circumstances, unreasonable, I see no reason why we cannot find in favour of the custom." There is no uncertainty about the custom. The only question is: whether the alleged custom is reasonable or not. I see no ground for saying that a custom by which earth is taken from a piece of waste land to repair houses in a village after inundations is unreasonable. On the contrary, it seems to me an eminently reasonable custom that the people of the village should take earth from a ditch which serves no other purpose, in order to repair their houses. It has not been shown that it is destructive of the subject-matter. The findings of the Courts below do not indicate any such result as probable; and, in any case, the contingency seems too distant to justify the Courts in summarily putting an end to the right, as was said in Mohidin v. Shiwlingappa (4).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 13th December, 1916.

Mr. Saleem, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned District Judge has held that a mortgage and a gift are void against the Receiver under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907). The transactions were effected about 6½ months before the petition for insolvency was presented, and more than two years before the order of adjudication was passed. The District Judge considered that section 36 of Act III of 1907 is governed by section 16 (6) of the same Act, and that, consequently, the transactions could be annulled since they took place within two years of the date of the presentation of the petition.

The main question raised in this appeal is, whether the District Judge was correct in this view of the law, and since there was some conflict of authority upon the point the learned Judge before whom the appeal came up for hearing has referred the case to a Division Bench.

At the time when the order of reference was passed there appear to have been only two judicial decisions dealing with the matter in issue. In Bhagwant v. Munim Khan (1) the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur held that section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act governed section 36 and that the two years mentioned in the latter section mean the two years before the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition. In Jokhan Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad (2) the opposite view was taken by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. There have since been two cases decided in accordance with the view expressed by the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur, viz., Rakhal Chandra Purkait v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (3), a decision of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court and Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (4) a decision of a Division Bench of the Madras High Court. The latter decision has also been approved in Sheo Nath Singh v. Munshi Ram (5), though in that case there was no question as to the annulment of a transfer under section 36 of the Act.

The weight of authority, therefore, favours the view taken by the District Judge, but after a careful consideration of the judgments in the cases cited above we consider that the correct exposition of the law is that given in Jokhan Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad (2). Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) provides that a transfer of property may be annulled if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of transfer, and in order to support the decision of the lower Court it must be held that the transferor is adjudged insolvent when the petition for insolvency is presented. Under section 16 (6) an order of adjudication shall relate back to and take effect from the presentation of the petition on which it is made, but this cannot mean that for all purposes the date of adjudication is to be taken as identical with the date of presentation of the petition. If there were any doubt on the subject it would be removed by the difference in the phraseology employed in sections 36 and 37 of the Act. Section 37 allows the annulment, in certain cases of transfers in favour of creditors "where the transferor is adjudged insolvent on a petition presented within three months after the date of the transfer." If the framers of the Act intended that the period provided by each section should terminate on the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency it is obvious that the words "once a petition presented" which occur in section 37 either should have been inserted also in section 36 or on the supposition that section 16 (6) would apply, should have been omitted altogether.

and in only one of the decisions in the respondents' favour, viz., Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (4) is any reference made to it. The decision in Bhagwant v. Munim Khan (1) is based upon the wording of the corresponding English Act and upon the debate which took place in the Legislative Council when the Indian Act was passed. Section 43 of the English Act of 1883 is the section which is said to have led to the provision contained in section 16 (6) of the Indian Act, while sections 47 and 48 of the English Act are the sections which correspond to sections 36 and 37 of the Indian Act. While, however, section 37 of the Indian Act of 1907 is almost a literal reproduction of section 48 of the English Act, sections 16 (6) and 36 of the Indian Act differ materially from the corresponding sections of the English Bankruptcy Act. Under section 43 of the latter Act, "the bankruptcy of a debtor, whether the same takes place on a debtor's own petition or upon that of a creditor or creditors, shall be deemed to have relation back to, and to commence at, the time of the act of bankruptcy being committed on which receiving order is made against him, or, if the bankrupt is proved to have committed more acts of bankruptcy than one, to have relation back to, and to commence at, the time of the first of the acts of bankruptcy proved to have been committed by the bankrupt within three months next preceding the date of the presentation of the bankruptcy petition; but no bankruptcy petition, receiving order, or adjudication shall be rendered invalid by reason of any act of bankruptcy anterior to the debt of the petitioning creditor." Section 47 runs as follows:—

"(1) Any settlement of property not being a settlement made before and in consideration of marriage, or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith for valuable consideration, or a settlement made on or for the wife or children of the settlor of property which has accrued to the settlor after marriage in right of his wife, shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of the settlement, be void against the trustee in the bankruptcy, and shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt at any subsequent time within 10 years after the date of the settlement, be void against the trustee in the bankruptcy unless the parties claiming under the settlement can prove that the settlor was at the time of making the settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement, and that the interest of the settlor in such property had passed to the trustee of such settlement on the execution thereof."

"(2) Any covenant or contract made in consideration of marriage, for the future settlement on or for the settlor's wife or children of any money or property wherein he had not at the date of his marriage any estate or interest, whether vested or contingent in possession or remainder, and not being money or property of or in right of his wife, shall, on his becoming bankrupt before the property or money has been actually transferred or paid pursuant to the contract or covenant, be void against the trustee in the bankruptcy.

"(3) 'Settlement' shall for the purposes of this section include any conveyance or transfer in property."

Though it appears that the framers of the Indian Act of 1907 had these sections in mind when they drew up sections 16 (6) and 36 of Act III of 1907, the difference in language is so great that we think it would hardly be safe to conclude that they intended section 16 (6) to govern section 36. Assuming, however, that we are mistaken on this point, we conceive that the meaning of the Act is not to be interpreted with reference to what its framers intended to do, but with reference to the language which they did in fact employ.

The learned Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur appears to us also to have been wrong in placing reliance on the debates which took place in the Legislative Council. In Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premal Mullik (6) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that, proceedings of the Legislature in passing a Statute are excluded from consideration on the judicial construction of Indian, as well as of British Statutes. The Calcutta decision Rakhal Chandra Purkatt v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (3) is based mainly upon the consideration that, if the contrary view were adopted, the provisions of section 36 might be defeated by delay in the insolvency proceedings. This, however, is not a matter which can be taken into account when the meaning is plainly expressed.

"It matters not in such a case what the consequence may be when by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning anything is enacted by the Legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous." (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Edition, page 5).

In the Madras case Santharanarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (4) reference has been made, as mentioned by us above, to the argument based on the difference in the language of sections 36 and 37 of the Act, but the reason given for rejecting this argument appears to us, with all due respect, to be unsound. According to the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., the Indian Legislature aimed at brevity in framing section 36 and "as section 16 (6) precedes section 36 it seems to have considered the words, 'adjudged insolvent' to be sufficient as indicating that the date was the date from which the adjudication takes effect by the force of section 16 (6)."

This amounts merely to an admission that the framers of the Act committed a mistake and to an explanation as to how the mistake came to be committed. If the framers of the Act were really so careless as not to notice what the difference between the language of sections 36 and 37 implied we must again observe that the Act cannot be interpreted with reference to what they intended to do. We accordingly hold that section 16 (6) of the Act does not govern section 36, and it follows that the transactions which are in dispute in this case cannot be annulled. We accept the appeal, and set aside the order of the District Judge. The appellant will be given his costs in both Courts against the Receiver.

Contract—Offer and acceptance—Auction-sale of Government property, subject to Collector's confirmation—Highest bidder, rights of—Refusal of Collector to confirm, effect of.

An auction-sale was held by a Tahsildar of a house belonging to Government under a sale notification containing a stipulation that the sale would be subject to confirmation by the Collector. The highest bidder at the auction duly paid the sale price and the report of the sale was forwarded by the Tahsildar to the Collector with a note that the auction was concluded in favour of the highest bidder. The latter was allowed to occupy the house on condition that he would quit it when required. More than two years after the sale the Collector passed an order declining to confirm the sale. In a suit to eject the highest bidder from the house:

Held, that there was no concluded contract of sale and that the transaction amounted merely to an offer which was never accepted by the Collector; and that the order of the Tahsildar that the auction had been concluded in favour of the highest bidder had not the effect of altering the original condition of the sale which was subject to the Collector's confirmation. JUDGMENT.—In this case a house was put up for sale by Government and the auction was held by the Tahsildar of Madura. First defendant was the highest bidder and the report of the sale was forwarded to the Collector for confirmation. First defendant deposited 15 per cent. of the purchase-money on the day of sale and the balance one month later. The sale was on the 15th of July 1915 and it was neither confirmed by the Collector nor cancelled until late in 1917. Apparently, the first defendant on several occasions, applied to the Collector for the grant of sale-certificate and for the possession of the house. On one occasion, he was informed that the matter had been referred to Government and orders were awaited. Finally, in 1916, at his own request, first defendant was allowed to occupy the house on condition that he would quit it whenever required. The present suit has now been brought to recover possession from the first defendant who refused to quit. The Government declined to confirm the sale in first defendant's favour, but he now contends that he is entitled to possession as the sale was completed.

MUTHU PILLAI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The real question for our consideration here is, what was the effect of the transaction of the 15th of July 1915, namely, the auction held by the Tahsildar? It is contended for the first defendant that it was a completed contract and, on that assumption, the greater part of his argument has been addressed. It is contended for Government that there was no completed contract but that the transaction before the Tahsildar amounted to merely an offer which the Collector could, or need not accept as he pleased. The sale notification contained a stipulation that the sale would be confirmed on receipt of the Collector's order of confirmation, and, after holding the auction, the Tahsildar wrote at the foot of the bidding list: "The auction was concluded in favour of Muthu Pillai" (i. e., the first defendant). It is argued for the first defendant that the meaning of "the auction was concluded in favour of Muthu Pillai" is that there was concluded agreement to sell and that the right was reserved in the Collector to rescind such agreement on reasonable grounds, and reliance is placed on Chitibobu Adenna v. Garimalla Jaggarayadu (1). The facts of that case are, however, somewhat different to the present one, for when the sale was held there would appear to have been no prior stipulation as to what was going to happen, and, finally, the Amin who conducted the sale recorded the following: "first defendant bid the last bid for Rs. 150 and as no other bid for more than that, it (the sale) has been confirmed in the name of the highest bidder, subject to the approval and orders of the special agent." Subsequently, apparently, the sale was approved by the special agent. Here we see that there was a distinct statement that the sale had been confirmed and was merely subject to a subsequent approval by the special agent, and, in these circumstances, it was held that there was an acceptance by the principal of the offer and, therefore, the contract was concluded. In the present case, however, there has been no such communication to the first defendant and he was distinctly informed that the sale would not be confirmed until the orders of the Collector had been received; so that the order of the Tahsildar saying that the auction had been concluded in first defendant's favour cannot have the effect of altering that condition, namely, that the sale would not be confirmed until the orders of the Collector were obtained. In the present case no such orders were obtained and the sale was not confirmed. No doubt, there was a very great delay on the part of the Collector in making up his mind whether the sale should be confirmed or not and it would probably have been open to the first defendant, after waiting for a reasonable time, to refuse to be bound by the contract. That was not what he wanted to do; he wished to hold by the contract, and was always pressing for the confirmation of the sale, and it is quite clear from his conduct that he was under the impression that the sale had not been concluded, for we see that he frequently put in petitions asking for the confirmation of the sale and pointing out the difficulties in which he was placed. On this evidence, we are satisfied that there was no concluded contract on the 15th of July and that the offer made by the first defendant was never accepted. That being so, the whole of the argument addressed to us on the supposition that there was concluded contract need not be considered now.

The only other two points which remain for consideration are (1) the rate of interest which has been allowed to the first defendant upon the money which he deposited, and (2) the amount of rent which has been awarded to Government for first defendant's occupation.

As regards interest, the first defendant in his early petitions always asserted that he had borrowed at 12 per cent, but when the case came into Court he alleged that he had borrowed at 18 per cent, and he produced one document which showed that on a certain occasion he did borrow Rs. 2,000 at 18 per cent. In view of his former assertions that he borrowed at 12 per cent this last statement is obviously false and it throws a good deal of doubt on the allegation that he was compelled to borrow at all. In any case, the lower Court has considered what would be the reasonable rate of interest and has awarded 6 per cent and we are not prepared in appeal to interfere with this finding.

As regards the rate of rent, we have on the one side the opinion of the Tahsildar and the Kurnam of Madura town that the proper rent is Rs. 35 a month, whereas the first defendant says that it is only Rs. 20. The first defendant has admittedly leased out a portion of the house, but he has not adduced any evidence to corroborate his statement that the whole house would fetch only Rs. 20. The only ground on which we could interfere would be that Rs. 35 seems to be somewhat high rate of interest on the capital, but there is no evidence as to what the usual rate is in Madura, and, therefore, we must accept the lower Court's finding that Rs. 35 is the proper rent. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Interpretation of Statutes—Rule of Interpretation—Retrospective effect—Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 49 (1), whether retrospective.

Unless an intention to the contrary is clear, an Act is to be construed as operating only on cases or facts which come into existence after the Act, and not retrospectively to cases which had come in existence before the Act. As a general rule, mere alterations in forms of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings. [p. 440 col. 12]

The provisions in section 49 (1) of the C. P. Tenancy Act relating to the lapsing of the tenancy rights granted by an ex-proprietor in the sir land cannot have retrospective effect over tenancy rights created before the passing of the Act. [p. 440, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 38 of 1921, dated the 14th May 1921.

Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-appellants in 1910 leased certain of their sir fields to the defendants for 18 years. In 1917 the plaintiffs' share of the village in which these fields lay was sold in execution of a decree, and the plaintiffs became occupancy tenants, but, according to sub-section (5) of section 45 of the Tenancy Act, 1898, the defendant's rights were not affected. On the 30th November 1920 after the Tenancy Act of 1920 came into force, the plaintiffs sued for possession of the fields on the ground that, according to sub-section (1) of section 49 of that Act, the defendants' tenancy right had elapsed.

“Notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, and, save where sanction has been given in accordance with the provisions of this Act, a proprietor, who temporarily or permanently loses, whether under a decree or order of a Civil Court or a transfer or otherwise, his right to occupy any portion of his sir-land as a proprietor, shall, at the date of such loss, become an occupancy tenant of such sir land, and any tenancy right granted by him in such sir land for a period exceeding 5 years, without the sanction of a Revenue Officer, shall thereupon lapse.” The words from “and any tenancy right” to the end of the sub-section are new; there was no such provision in the former Tenancy Act. The First Court held that the provision was retrospective and decreed the suit, the learned District Judge on appeal took a contrary view and reversed the decision. The only question before me is which view is correct,

HINDUSINGH v. MANGAL.

The learned District Judge, after discussing the law as to the interpretation of Statutes and the reasoning of the First Court, says:—"But a point is to my mind fatal to the plaintiffs' case and that is, that the section and sub-section (1) refer to a proprietor. I do not think that the meaning of the word 'proprietor' can be strained to include people who have ceased to be proprietors for more than three years before the Act comes into force. Were ex-proprietors to be considered, mention would have been made of them. Were the opposite assumption correct, every malguzar who has evaded the old Tenancy Act whether he has done so for his own benefit, or been forced into evasion by the ruthless creditors, by executing a long lease of his sir-land, would be able to come forward after an indeterminate number of years and claim protection of the passing of the new Act. The plain meaning of the section is, that where a proprietor loses his proprietary right in sir after the Act comes into force, he becomes an occupancy tenant of such sir land, and if he has granted away tenancy rights, either before or after the Act comes into force, for more than five years, such rights shall lapse. The object of the section is unmistakeable, and is open to prevent the evasion of section 45 of the Tenancy Act of 1898, and to safeguard the malguzar for the future, but I cannot read into it the intention of restoring malguzars who have evaded the Act in the past to the position they held before they tried to defeat the object of the Tenancy Act of 1898."

It is to be observed that sub-section (5) of section 45 of the Tenancy Act of 1898 enacted that the accrual of occupancy tenant right under sub-section (1) would not affect the rights of an ordinary tenant of the sir land at the time of such accrual. At the time of the accrual the defendant was an ordinary tenant for the term of eighteen years, and if the new provision were to have retrospective effect, it would mean that he would be deprived of rights which were expressly preserved for him by the former Act.

It is also to be observed that under the old Act a Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to give or withhold sanction to a lease of the sir land for a period exceeding five years. Such jurisdiction has for the first time being conferred by the last part of sub-section (1) of section 49 of the Act of 1920. By Notification No. 20T, dated the 16th June 1920, rules have been made for the regulation of the procedure of Revenue Officers in dealing with applications to grant tenancy rights for a period exceeding five years. If retrospective effect is given to the new provision, in the sense desired by the plaintiffs, it would mean that a lease would lapse because it was not sanctioned, although no such sanction could possibly have been applied for, granted or refused, a result which appears to be absurd. When holding that the new provision applies to leases granted before the new Act came into force, in cases where occupancy rights accrued to the proprietor after the Act came into force the learned District Judge has overlooked this consideration.

The law as to the retrospective effect of Statutes has been succinctly put by Ismay, J. C., in Kala Tihari v. Narayan (1): "It is a general rule that all Statutes are to be construed to operate in future, unless from the language a retrospective effect is clearly intended. It is chiefly when the enactment would prejudicially affect vested rights or the legal character of past transactions that the rule in question operates. Every Statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already passed, must be presumed, out of respect to the Legislature, to be intended not to have a retrospective operation (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, page 257). These principles have been embodied in section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. As a general rule, mere alterations in forms of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings, but where a change in procedure is complicated with a change of existing rights the rule could not I think be held to apply." Again, in Seth Nerbudda Prasad v. Raja Seth Gokuldas (2) he observes:—"Now, whenever the intention is clear that an Act shall have a retrospective operation it must unquestionably be so construed, however unjust and hard the consequences may be. On the other hand, unless an intention to the contrary is clear an Act is to be construed as operating only on cases or facts which come into existence after the Act is passed." The same principle was recognised by Brockman, J. C., in Nilkant v. Ghulya (3) and this is not a case of a Statute affecting only the procedure and practice of the Courts, such as was dealt with in Shankargir v. Ramchandra (4). The new provision is most certainly one, as I have shown above, that would prejudicially affect vested rights and the legal character of past transactions. I am of opinion that the latter portion of sub-section (1) of section 49 of the Tenancy Act cannot possibly have the retrospective effect which the plaintiffs contend should be attached to it, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Risk-Note Form B—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 151, 152, 161—Liability of Railway—"Loss", meaning of—Burden of proof.

Under sections 151 and 152 of the Contract Act, read with section 72 of the Railways Act, the liability of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway is that of an ordinary bailee; that is to say, if the Railway Administration take as much care of the goods bailed to them, as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value, as the goods bailed, they will not, in the absence of special contract, be responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods.

The onus is, however, on the bailee to show that he is exonerated from liability for loss to the bailor. [p. 441, col. 2.]

Under the Risk-Note Form B the burden of proof lies in the first instance upon the Railway Administration to prove that there was such loss as is contemplated by the first part of the Risk-Note and when they have done so, the onus is shifted upon the bailor to show that the loss is due to the wilful neglect of the Railway or their servants as provided in the latter part of the Risk-Note. [p. 441, col. 2.]

The loss referred to in section 72 of the Railways Act is the loss suffered by the consignor or the true owner whether such loss occurred by reason of misdelivery or non-delivery. [p. 442, col. 2.]

Hill, Sawyers & Co. v. Secretary of State, 61 Ind. Cas. 926; 2 L. 133; 3 L. L. J. 297, relied upon.

The Risk-Note Form B applies not only when the goods have been lost by the bailee in the sense that he cannot trace them but also when they are lost to the owner because the bailee fails to deliver them to him in breach of his contract for any reason whatsoever. [p. 442, col. 2.]

A bailor cannot, by merely suing for compensation for non-delivery, take the case out of the Risk-Note. [p. 442, col. 2.]

Application against a decision of the Second Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 27th March 1922.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and S. N. Bose, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. Dayal and Brijkishore Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiff filed the suit out of which the present application arises, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, alleging that, on the 22nd October 1920, his agent at Bombay delivered to the first party defendants, the Great-Indian Peninsular Railway Company, seven bales of twist for despatch by goods train to Gaya, a station belonging to the second party defendants, the East Indian Railway Company; that out of these bales one bale, valued at Rs. 406-4-0, was not delivered at Gaya, and that the plaintiff believes that it was lost within the jurisdiction of the second party defendants. He accordingly claims, for the value of the goods and for the estimated profits and for interest, a total sum of Rs. 485 as compensation.

G. I. P. RY. CO. v. JITAN RAM-NIRMAL RAM.

At the trial the plaintiff did not press his claim against the second party defendants. The suit, therefore, proceeded against the first party defendants only, who, among other things, pleaded that as the goods were booked at owner's risk under a Risk-Note in Form B as prescribed in the Indian Railways Act the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation at all. They further contended that there was no wilful neglect on their part or theft by any of their servants.

The Subordinate Judge held that, as the suit was one for compensation for non-delivery of goods, he was bound by the decision of a Judge of this Court in Agent, East Indian Railway Co. v. Ajodhya Prasad (1) and he decreed the claim less the sum of Rs. 40 claimed for profits, that is to say, he gave a decree for Rs. 445 exclusive of costs.

The present application is made under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act by the first party defendants.

It is clear that this is not a suit in tort; it is a suit in contract and the only question is, what is the liability of the defendant carrier.

Under sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act, read with section 72 of the Indian Railways Act, the liability of the Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway is that of an ordinary bailee, that is to say, if the Railway Administration take as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality, and value as the goods bailed, they will not, in the absence of special contract, be responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods.

Section 161 of the Indian Contract Act prescribes that, if by the default of the bailee, the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time, the bailee is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction or deterioration of goods from that time.

Further, the Indian Railways Act of 1890, by repealing sections 7 and 10 of the Carriers Act (Act III of 1865), and by also enacting in section 72 (3) that nothing in the Common Law of England or in the Carriers Act of 1865 regarding the responsibility of common carriers with respect to the carriage of animals or goods shall affect the responsibility of a Railway Administration, leaves no room for doubt that the liability of the Railway Company must be measured and determined solely by the tests formulated in sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act.

The onus, therefore, being upon the bailee to show that he is exonerated from the liability for loss to the bailor, the question is, whether there is any special contract here which relieves him from such liability.

The bailee pleads such a contract, namely, the Risk-Note in Form B, the execution of which by the consignor has been established. It is in the form prescribed by the Indian Railways Act, and the material portion runs as follows:—

"Risk-Note Form B.

"I, the undersigned, do in consideration of such lower charge agree and undertake to hold the said Railway Administration harmless and free from responsibility for any loss, destruction, or deterioration of or damage to the said consignment from any cause whatsoever, except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of his servants, provided that the term wilful neglect be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train, or any other unforeseen event or accident."

It is clear that, upon this special contract, the burden of proof lies, in the first instance, upon the defendants, that is to say, they must first prove that there was such loss as is contemplated by the first part of the Risk-Note, and when they have done so the onus will be shifted upon the plaintiff to show that the loss is due to the wilful neglect of the defendants or their servants as provided in the latter part.

An attempt had been made to show that by suing for compensation for non-delivery, the plaintiff has taken the case out of the Risk-Note, which applies only to loss by the bailee and involves the notion of an involuntary or unwilling parting with the thing with reference to which the word is used, and that the goods cannot be said to be lost if the carrier detains them wrongfully or wilfully or negligently delivers them to another. Reliance is placed for this view upon Morritt v. North Eastern Railway Co. (2), Changa Mal v. Bengal N. W. Railway Company (3).

Now, the English decisions do not apply because they are based either upon the Common Law or the English Carriers Act and are not in pari materia with the Indian Railways Act, and as for Changa Mal v. Bengal N. W. Railway Co. (3) the point for decision there was whether the period of limitation was governed by Art. 30 or Art. 31 of Schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 which enactment also was not in pari materia.

Moreover, Changa Mal's case (3) has now been overruled. In that case a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that the term "loss" in Art. 30 of the Indian Limitation Act, Schedule II contemplates an actual losing of the goods by the carrier himself, and, therefore, when the carrier delivers the goods to a wrong person it cannot be said that he has lost the goods, and they also held that Art. 31 did not apply because misdelivery was not non-delivery. But the recent Full Bench decision of the same Court in Hill, Sawyers & Co. v. Secretary of State (4) is authority for the view that misdelivery is loss within the terms of section 80 of the Indian Railways Act and it supports the view that the loss referred to in section 72 and other relevant sections of Chapter VII of the Indian Railways Act is the loss suffered by the consignor or the true owner whether such loss occurred by reason of misdelivery or non-delivery.

To the same effect are the Madras and Southern Maharatta Railway Company, Limited v. Hariadoss Banmali Doss (5), Madras and Southern Maharatta Railway Company, Limited v. Mattai Subba Rao (6) and Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company v. Ramchandra Jagannath (7).

It has been argued that if loss to the owner was meant then there was no necessity for any reference to liability for destruction of the goods. This is true. Destruction must always be included in loss and the draftsman of the Risk-Note has merely availed himself of the device of first stating the generality and then, without prejudice thereto, reciting the particulars. The word destruction is surplusage but it does not alter the sense. In my opinion, therefore, the Risk-Note will apply not only when the goods have been lost by the bailee in the sense that he cannot trace them but also when they are lost to the owner because the bailee fails to deliver them to him in breach of his contract for any reason whatsoever; and I cannot admit that by merely suing for compensation for non-delivery the plaintiff can take the case out of the Risk-Note. He seeks, however, to ground an argument on Art. 31 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act and points out that if "non-delivery" had been included in "loss" there would have been no necessity for amending this Article in 1899, so as to cover both non-delivery and delay in delivery. Apart from the objection that the Indian Limitation Act can afford no guide for construing the Indian Railways Act, there was clearly some necessity for the amendment as the object of the Legislature was to prescribe the same period of limitation for claims for non-delivery as Art. 30 which referred to suits against carriers for losing goods and which could not cover suits for non-delivery.

Although in the present case the English Authorities cannot be of great assistance, there is one recent case which is both pertinent and instructive. I refer to Smith, Limited v. Great Western Railway Co. (8). In that case six pairs of boots were forwarded in a package weighing 19 lbs. for carriage by Railway from Birmingham to Wilton. The parcel was consigned to the defendant Railway Company but was not delivered. The Risk-Note ran as follows:—"In consideration of your charging such lower rate we agree to relieve you from all liability for loss, damage, misconveyance, misdelivery, delay or detention of or to such goods, except upon proof that such loss, damage, misconveyance, misdelivery, delay, or detention, arose from the wilful misconduct of your servants." The Railway Company declined to account for the loss, and the Appeal Court held that such refusal did not justify the Court in inferring that the loss arose from the wilful misconduct of the defendants' servants. That decision was affirmed by the House of Lords and the following passage in the judgment of Lord Buckmaster in Smith, Limited v. Great Western Railway Co. (9) might almost have been delivered in respect of the present Risk-Note. "It has been suggested on the part of the appellant that it must be read as though it contained exceptions in favour of the Railway Company with a proviso reserving to the consignor rights in a certain event and that it was consequently incumbent upon them to prove that the goods had disappeared owing to the specified facts, and when that was proved it would become necessary for the consignor to establish that he had the benefit of the proviso, or, in other words, that the loss had arisen owing to the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants. I am unable so to regard this clause; it is in my opinion a clause which throws upon the trader, before he can recover for any of the goods, the burden of proving in the first instance that the loss sustained arose from the wilful misconduct of the Company's servants. It is perfectly true that this results in holding that the apparent protection afforded to the trader is really illusory; it practically gives him no protection at all, for it is often impossible for a trader to know what it is that has caused the loss of his goods between the time when he delivered them into the hands of the Railway Company's servants and the time when they ought to have been delivered at the other end of the journey. The explanation of the loss is often within the exclusive knowledge of the Railway Company, and for the trader to be compelled to prove that it was due to wilful misconduct on the part of the Railway Company's servants, is to call upon him to establish something which it may be almost impossible for him to prove. Nonetheless, that is the burden that he has undertaken, and the question is whether in this case he has afforded any evidence which calls for an answer on the part of the Railway Company." Both in the Court of Appeal and in the House of Lords the plaintiffs, Smith & Co., strongly relied on Curran v. Midland Great Western Railway Company of Ireland (10), and contended that there was a prima facie presumption that the goods were in the possession of the carrier till he showed the contrary and that the unexplained detention would be wilful misconduct for which an action would lie. Now, in Curran's case (10) the Railway Company undertook to carry some pigs from Sligo to Manchester and failed to deliver some of them. There was a Risk-Note which recited that the Company shall be free from liability including liability for loss, injury or delay unless such injury or delay shall be occasioned by the intention or wilful neglect or misconduct of their servants, and the Court held that burden of proof was on the defendant and the inference from non-delivery and refusal to give any explanation was that the pigs were still in the possession of the defendant and that there was wilful misconduct. In discussing this case Lord Buckmaster proceeded as follows:—"Now, my Lords, in that case there had been no answer given at all on the part of the Railway Company to the request for information as to what had happened, but in the present case the evidence that was before the learned County Court Judge included the answers to interrogatories, in which the defendant Company had said that they had no knowledge as to whether the goods had been handed to them at Wilton, and that they believed that the same were lost and never arrived at Wilton. It is impossible to place such evidence on an exact parallel with the evidence which warranted the Chief Baron in assuming the possession of the pigs as a fact in the custody of the defendants, and then inferring from that possession that the refusal to give any explanation of their whereabouts or their existence was an act of wilful misconduct. My Lords, I desire to say nothing further about that authority, because for these reasons I do not think that it deals with the same facts as those in the present case, and it may be that on some later occasion the actual words of that judgment may come up for consideration." Lord Sumner and Lord Wrenbury following Lord Buckmaster agreed that if it were necessary to discuss Curran's case (10) on any future occasion it would have to be examined with great care.

In my opinion, Risk-Note B is no less harsh than that to which Lord Buckmaster was referring. It may perhaps be not inequitable inasmuch as the trader enters into the contract with his eyes open and in consideration of a cheaper rate, but it cannot be denied that he undertakes in most instances a crushing and almost insuperable burden.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff next takes a point for which there is some recent authority. He urges that it is not sufficient for the defendant to plead, he must call evidence to satisfy the Court that the goods are not still in the possession of the defendant and in support he cites Ghelabhai Punsu v. East Indian Railway Co. (11) and Jamnadhhar Baldevdass v. Burma Railway Co. (12). It is true that in both these cases the Court held that a mere pleading was not sufficient, but with very great respect I think that the decisions were based on the authority of Curran's case (10) which was distinguished, if not doubted, by the House of Lords in Smith, Limited v. Great Western Railway Co. (8). Indeed, the matter really does not turn on evidence. It is a question of the construction of the Risk-Note, and if loss due to non-delivery is covered by the document then there is an end of the matter and nothing further is required from the defendant. The general rule is that, where a contract contains an exception and a proviso, the party who desires to take the benefit of the former must not only plead it but prove it, and that when that has been done, the other party who desires to take the benefit of the proviso, which is in reality an extrinsic covenant by way of defeasance must prove that the subject matter is not within the exception. That, however, is not the position in the present case.

Moreover, in the present case the plaintiff admits in his plaint that the goods have been lost; and as the defendant does not in any way repudiate the contract but on the contrary sets up the Risk-Note in his defence, no presumption can arise that the goods are still in his possession simply because he says that he cannot give any account of the manner in which they have disappeared.

The question that remains, therefore, is, has the plaintiff satisfied the burden which rests upon him to show that the loss has been caused by the wilful neglect of the defendant. The quantum of evidence required for this purpose must necessarily vary according to the nature of the goods, and it has been observed elsewhere that the loss of an elephant might be difficult to explain except on the hypothesis that there had been wilful neglect, but in the present case our task is simplified because there is clear and apparently reliable evidence that while the goods were lying on the platform at Bombay the plaintiff's agent asked a subordinate in the service of the first party defendants to remove them into the godown but was told in reply that after a Railway receipt had been given to the consignor he had no business to make any such request. There is also evidence that after the institution of the suit a goods clerk informed the plaintiff that one of the bales had not been despatched. There is no rebutting evidence on the side of the defendants and, in my opinion, it has been established that there was wilful neglect on their part and, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree.

The application will, therefore, be dismissed with costs. As this is a case which has Custom v. Personal law—Succession—Beri Khatri of Jagraon.

The Beri Khatri of Jagraon are governed by Hindu Law and not by custom in matters of succession. [p. 447, col. 2.]

First appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 1st June 1914, dismissing plaintiff's claim with costs.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S. and Mr. Prem Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 1st of February 1908, one Gauri Shanker, a Beri Khatri of Jagraon, died, leaving a widow Musammat Kishen Devi, and a daughter Musammat Bhagwanti. Musammat Bhagwanti was married to Rattan Chand and had borne him a son named Fateh Chand. On the 6th of August 1911, Balmukand and his two brothers, sons of Uttam Chand, first cousins of the deceased Gauri Shanker, instituted a suit against Musammat Kishen Devi and Musammat Bhagwanti, Rattan Chand and Fateh Chand, alleging that they (plaintiffs) were by custom entitled to succeed to Gauri Shanker's estate on the death of his widow Musammat Kishen Devi and alleging that the said Musammat Kishen Devi was wasting the estate, and praying that a Receiver be appointed to manage the property and that a perpetual injunction be issued against Musammat Kishen Devi prohibiting her from alienating or otherwise disposing of her late husband's property. A declaration was also asked for to the effect that such alienations that had been made by Musammat Kishen Devi in favour of her son-in-law Rattan Chand should not affect the plaintiff's reversionary rights.

The defendants, while admitting the plaintiff's relationship to Gauri Shanker, alleged that the parties were governed by Hindu Law under which plaintiffs had no rights whatever, the property devolving on Gauri Shanker's daughter and her issue after the death of Musammat Kishen Devi. It was also pleaded that during the lifetime of Musammat Kishen Devi no Receiver could be appointed and that no such acts of waste had been specified as would justify the issue of an injunction.

Plaintiffs also alleged that Gauri Shanker had left a Will in their favour. The defendants denied either the existence of any such Will or Gauri Shanker's power to make one either by law or custom.

The Trial Court settled the following issues :—

1. Have the plaintiffs got a cause of action against defendants Nos. 2 and 3?
2. Is this claim of a speculative nature?
3. Have the plaintiffs got a locus standi to bring this suit?
4. Do the plaintiffs follow any custom by which they exclude daughter and daughter's son from inheriting the late Gauri Shanker's property?
5. (a) Can the plaintiffs exclude mother of the deceased? and if not
(b) Can they bring this claim during her existence?

BAL, MUKAND v. KISHEN DEVI.

6. Did the late Gauri Shanker execute a Will in favour of the plaintiffs and if so, could he do so by law or custom?

7. Is Musammatt Kishen Devi in any way guilty of such waste and mismanagement as should justify the interference of the Court towards the better management and protection of the estate?

8. Does the renewal of hundis worth Rs. 14,000 amount to an alienation, and, if so, can that fact be made a basis of any relief?

9. To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?

But in deciding the case it confined itself to the points raised in Issues Nos. 1 to 6.

The main issue for decision was Issue No. 4 and on this the Trial Court after going exhaustively into the evidence, oral and documentary, adduced by the parties came to the conclusion that plaintiffs had failed to prove the custom set up by them and held that the parties were governed by Hindu Law under which the daughter succeeded to her father's estate on the death of Musammatt Kishen Devi.

On Issue No. 6 the Trial Court held that the execution of the Will had not been proved. On these findings the plaintiff's suit was dismissed and they have preferred an appeal to this Court in support of which we have heard Mr. Tek Chand while Mr. Moti Sagar has addressed us on behalf of the respondents.

The appeal came up before a Division Bench of this Court on the 10th of February 1920, when an order of remand was passed in order to enable the parties to produce evidence on the questions "which portions, if any, of the property in dispute are ancestral," and for recording of the statements of certain witnesses for the plaintiffs whose evidence had been disallowed by the Trial Court.

The order of remand has been complied with, but Mr. Tek Chand before us definitely conceded that he was unable to attack the finding of the Court below as to the execution of the Will. Similarly, he has not referred us to any of the evidence relating to the nature of the property left by Gauri Shanker and contends that the custom which he seeks to prove governs equally ancestral and self-acquired property. The only question argued at the Bar relates to the existence of the custom set up by the plaintiffs-appellants and somewhat varied during the pendency of the litigation. They appear at first to have relied on a general custom prevailing amongst all Khattris throughout the Province in addition to a special custom on the same lines governing their own particular family belonging to the sub-caste of Beris. Subsequently, on appeal, the existence of the general custom was not pressed and all that Mr. Tek Chand has endeavoured to show is that there is a family custom governing this section of Beris and he relies on instances of the same custom amongst other branches of Khattris merely by way of analogy. The custom set up, as stated by Mr. Tek Chand was that near collaterals exclude daughters and their issues both as regards self-acquired and ancestral property left by a sonless proprietor. The instances relied on by the plaintiffs have been dealt with in detail in the judgment of the Trial Court and have been summarised at page 180 of the printed book. Mr. Tek Chand admitted the correctness of the Trial Court's criticism of the instances referred to in columns 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the said summary, but has taken us through the instances mentioned in column 1. He has contended that these 66 instances have been wrongly held to relate to cases where the property was that of a joint family. We find that the evidence relating to these 66 instances is vague and is not borne out by any documentary evidence and we agree with the Court below in thinking that these instances do not bear out the contention of the appellants and that it is by no means established that even if the statements made by the witnesses called in support of these instances be true and correct, there had been such separation in the families concerned as would exclude the natural rule of inheritance by survivorship of the collaterals under the Hindu Law. If among Khattris generally, or amongst the various sub-castes of the Khattris to which these instances belong, near collaterals exclude daughters and their issue, we should expect a mass of documentary evidence including copies of Revenue Records to be available in order to establish beyond all doubt that in the cases of landed proprietors who form a large section of the more prosperous Khattris, this custom prevails. In the absence of any such evidence, these vague statements often made by one witness only regarding each particular instance are of extremely little value in discharging the heavy onus which lies upon plaintiffs when they attempt to prove that they are not governed by Hindu Law.

Next, Mr. Tek Chand referred to instances among the Beris themselves. These are summarised and dealt with at pages 176-178 of the printed book. It was admitted that the first two instances were of no value. Mr. Tek Chand, however, contended that the remaining instances have been proved and support his case. After giving due weight to Mr. Tek Chand's criticism we consider that the Trial Court's view is correct and that the existence of the custom set up has not been established among the Beri Khattris.

Three instances were referred to as having occurred in this very family. Of these Mr. Tek Chand gave up two, namely, the succession to Goverdhan Das and Kirpa Ram. He, however, contended that the case of Nihal Chand satisfactorily established the custom set up. Nihal Chand died some 30 years ago and in connection with his estate certain litigation took place in 1884. Nihal Chand had left two widows, a daughter and daughter's son. His uncle Govind Das and his cousin Uttam Chand and Ramji Das brought a suit against the widows and the daughter's son (but not the daughter) asking for a declaration that the said daughter's son had not been adopted by Nihal Chand and was not entitled to inherit the estate. The defence set up was that the adoption had actually been made, and, though invalid under Hindu Law, was good under custom. It was further pleaded that the daughter's son in any event excluded the collaterals. The case was decided in favour of the then plaintiffs, it being held that the collaterals had established a custom by which a daughter's son was excluded or rather that they had established a general custom governing the Khattris as a whole in spite of the fact that not one single instance had been adduced of a collateral excluding a daughter's son amongst the Beris, and it was held that the then defendants had failed to establish any exception in favour of their contention. The more natural and the sounder way of approaching the question was not adopted, namely, to see whether the plaintiffs who alleged this peculiar custom amongst the Beri Khattris had proved that it existed amongst the Beri Khattris. Anyhow, it was decided, and the decision was upheld by the Chief Court, that the plaintiffs, as collaterals, had established their right to oust the daughter's son. To this litigation, it may again be noted, the daughter was no party and it is still open to her to bring a suit to establish her right to her father's property, as one of the widows of Nihal Chand is still alive and the decision in this previous case operates in no way as res judicata against her. It is on this case that plaintiffs rely as their sheet anchor and they contend that it is of such overwhelming value as to be sufficient to establish the custom on which they rely on its own authority alone and even without the analogous cases which they say have occurred amongst Khattris generally throughout the Province. They contend that so far as their family is concerned the existence of this custom is thus proved for all time. With this view we cannot agree and Counsel for the respondents has quoted a mass of authority showing that one instance by itself cannot establish a custom. We find, therefore, that this case though no doubt an instance and a valuable instance as occurring in this family is by itself wholly inconclusive and does not establish the existence of any family custom. Besides we find, for the reasons given above, that amongst other branches of the Beri sub-caste it is not established that collaterals exclude daughters and their issue, and although there, doubtless, have been instances, amongst Khattris throughout the Province and more especially amongst Kapurs of Hafizabad, of agricultural custom being followed on various points instead of the strict Hindu Law, even amongst decided cases there have been more instances to the contrary, as detailed in the list given at page 183 of the paper-book, these all being published decisions of the Chief Court, and where the onus rests heavily on the plaintiff of establishing the existence of a custom which overrides the Hindu Law, it is necessary that he should produce evidence far more convincing, far more abundant and far more directly applicable than has been done in this case. As the plaintiffs had failed to establish their contention it is unnecessary to consider and discuss the evidence relied upon by the respondents, for, in the absence of any custom to the contrary, the parties are governed by the strict Hindu Law.

Finding that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their claim we dismiss the appeal with costs. The cross-objections are dismissed as not having been referred to by the learned Advocate.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Shamarr Chand, for the Appellants.
Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only point in this appeal is whether a sum of Rs. 110 which was allowed as being for necessity by the Trial Court and disallowed by the learned District Judge should or should not be treated as having been taken for necessity 13 years before the suit contesting the alienation was brought, limitation having expired against the other reversioners but not against the ex-minor plaintiff. The total consideration is small, being only Rs. 356 out of which Rs. 246 have been allowed by both Courts. The sum of Rs. 110 is shown as having been taken because of famine and it must be totally impossible after a lapse of 13 years to prove exactly what such a small sum as this was spent on. Various rulings have been quoted by Counsel, but every case depends upon its own facts and there appears to me to be a vast difference between the taking of a considerable sum for expenses which must have lasted a considerable time and concerning which, therefore, it should be possible to give some account and the taking of a sum of Rs. 110 many years before. The most helpful ruling quoted is to be found in Radha Ram v. Khushi Ram (1), a very recent case in which it was held that where it is necessary to purchase food and clothing and pay for it subsequently, and such payment becomes technically necessity it is equally regular to borrow the sum necessary to purchase such supplies and it is not absolutely essential that a man should first run into debt and then borrow to pay his debts. Considering the smallness of the sum taken, the fact that, it is recited that it was on account of scarcity, that it is not shown that the vendor had any land beyond the small area which he sold, though there is the vague statement of one witness to the effect that he had a great deal of land—and the fact that it is only at this late stage, and, obviously, as an after-thought that the present plaintiff has brought this suit, the other collaterals having taken no action in the interval, I think that sufficient evidence of necessity has been produced and I find, therefore, that the whole of the consideration was for necessity. I accept the appeal and restore the decree of the Trial Court.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920)—Local rules—Rule 4 (1)—Election petition—Failure to make deposit within time, effect of—Delay due to party's neglect—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Court assuming jurisdiction under wrong view of law—Revision.

Sub-rule (1), r. 4 of the rules framed by the Local Government for the conduct of election enquiries under the Madras Local Boards Act, requiring a deposit of Rs. 200 to be made within the time prescribed, is mandatory in character and, unless the direction contained in the sub-rule is complied with, the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed to enquire into the petition. [P. 450, col. 2.]

In the case of an objection petition against an election under the Madras Local Boards Act filed on the very last day allowed for its presentation, the Vakil who was entrusted with the petition, stated to the Court that he had Rs. 200 to pay, but did not actually tender the money, nor did he ask the Judge to take the deposit himself. In accordance with the usual practice, he went to the challan clerk to obtain a challan to pay his money into the Imperial Bank. That being the luncheon interval, the challan clerk was not there. He returned soon after, and issued the challan for payment of the money into the Bank. The money was forthwith sent to the Bank, but it reached too late and could not be deposited on that day. It was deposited on the next day. In these circumstances, the question was, whether the maxim actus curiæ neminem gravabit (the act of the Court should not prejudice any one) applied so as to make the deposit a valid one:

Held, that the maxim had no application, for as the Vakil only went to the challan clerk at a time when the latter was allowed to go for his tiffin, it could not be said that the failure to pay the money in time was due to any action taken by the Court.

Where a Court assumes jurisdiction on a wrong view of the law, its order is liable to be set aside by the High Court in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 452, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 3rd October 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in Original Petition No. 12 of 1922.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Aiyangar for the Petitioner:—A petition to set aside an election held under the Local Boards Act has to be presented to the District Judge or Subordinate Judge within 14 days from the date of the declaration of the result, and the petitioner has to deposit with the petition at the time of presentation as security for costs of the same, the prescribed amount in cash. In this case, the 14 days had elapsed during the time the Court was closed and the petition was put in on the re-opening date. On that date the deposit of Rs. 200 was not made. The learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in applying the maxim actus curiæ neminem gravabit (the act of the Court should not prejudice any one), as in this case the failure to make the deposit was only sought to be explained by the absence of the challan clerk in his place during the luncheon interval. This is not an action or inaction of a Court officer which prejudiced the petitioner in the lower Court as the clerk was privileged to be absent during lunch interval. Further, when it was found that it was too late to make the payment into Court, the application ought to have been made to the Subordinate Judge, himself to take the money under r. 133 of the Civil Rules of Practice.

No such application has been made in this case, though the Vakil for petitioner had made a similar application in the lower Court on the same date in respect of another matter. The mere fact that a challan had been obtained in time does not render a deposit made out of time a valid one.

The rules are mandatory as they direct that where the deposit is not made at the time of the presentation the petition shall be dismissed.

The cases referred to in the judgment of the lower Court Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (1), Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (2), Aravamudu Ayyangar v. Samiyappa Nadan (3) and Gajadhar Das v. Ram Sumiran Dube (4) are cases where the deposit could not be made on account of the action of the Court officer, or on account of the fact that the Court itself was closed. The petitioner was grossly negligent and the default is entirely his own.

Mr. E. V. Sundara Reddiar, for the Respondents:—It is not disputed that the petitioner had the deposit amount in Court on the last day for the presentation of the petition. The challan was obtained at 2-45 P. M. on the same day and but for the delay in the issue of the challan due to the inaction of the challan clerk, a Court Officer, the deposit would have been made on the same day. Whatever may be the practice in the High Court, in the Mofussil Courts the clerks had no prescribed intervals for luncheon. The principle that no man shall be prejudiced by an act of the Court has been properly applied to this case. The Civil Rules of Practice have not been made applicable under the rules to the trial of election petitions and the omission to make an application under rule 133 of the said Rules cannot, therefore, be held to prejudice me. In Koilkpillai Samban v. Sapparamuthu Samban (5) it was held by this Court that the issue of challan itself will amount to sufficient deposit under certain circumstances and in the present case that has been sufficient deposit. In Gajadhar Das v. Ram Sumiran Dube (4) it has been laid down that the proper test in these cases is, whether the petitioner had the deposit amount in Court with him on the day.

The order of the lower Court is correct. In any case the error, if any, is merely one of law and the Court will not in such cases interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code in revision.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition is based upon r. 4 of the rules framed by the Local Government for the conduct of enquiries with reference to election to District Boards, etc., under the Madras Local Boards Act, XIV of 1920, published in the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 14th June 1921. It is contended that r. 4, sub-rule (1), was not complied with inasmuch as the deposit of Rs. 200 required under it, was not made within time and that under sub-rule (2) the Court was bound to dismiss the petition and sub-rule (3) did not apply as the provisions of sub-rule (1) were not complied with.

The facts on which this question arises are as follows:—The petitioner before me was elected as a member of the Taluk Board of Cuddalore. An objection petition was filed to his election by the counter-petitioner urging certain grounds against its validity. The election was held on the 12th of May and the result published on 15th of May. According to r. 2 of the above-mentioned rules, 14 days are allowed for an objection petition to be presented against the validity of the election. The 14 days in this case having elapsed during the time the Court was closed, the petition was actually put in on the re-opening date, 17th July. It is not contended that the petition was not in time; but on the 17th of July no deposit of 200 Rupees was actually made. It would appear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and from the affidavits filed before him that the Vakil who was entrusted with the filing of this petition had with him a sum of Rs. 200 to deposit. He went to the Sub-Judge in the middle of the day, seven minutes past two as the learned Sub-Judge says, and presented the petition and stated to the Sub-Judge that he had 200 Rupees to pay, but he did not actually tender the money, nor did he ask the Judge to take the deposit himself. In accordance with the usual practice he went to the challan clerk to obtain a challan to pay his money into the Imperial Bank. That being the luncheon interval, the challan clerk was not there. He returned soon after, and issued the challan for payment of the money into the Bank, at 2-45 P. M. It is the counter-petitioner's case, and there is nothing to show that it is untrue, that the money was sent to the Bank through one Narayanasami Reddi. But the Bank being about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles or three miles from the Court-house, he was not able to reach the Bank in time to make the deposit before 3 P. M. as required by the Bank's rules and the officers of the Bank accordingly declined to accept the money that day. The money was paid into the Bank only the next day. In these circumstances, the question arises, whether the Sub-Judge was right in applying the principle of actus curiae neminem gravabit (the act of the Court should not prejudice any one) to this case. The Sub-Judge has applied that principle but I regret I am unable to agree with him, for it cannot be said that, in this case, the failure to pay the money in time was due to any action taken by the Court.

The learned Vakil for the respondent says that the challan clerk was not in his seat when the petitioner's Vakil went to him at the luncheon hour, he lost time and was unable to make the payment in the Bank according to its rules and the fault is the clerk's. But this argument cannot be accepted, for the time during which the Vakil went to the challan clerk was the time when the clerks were allowed to go for tiffin. It cannot be said that the clerk committed any fault in going away for his tiffin and being absent at the time. He seems to have granted the challan as soon as he returned. The Vakil certainly knew that he could not expect the clerk to be in his place of work during the luncheon time.

There is nothing that the Judge did that has been pointed out to me as having prevented the respondent from complying with the rule, by making the deposit in time. It is not stated that any application was made to the Judge that he should take the money himself, under r. 133 of the Civil Rules of Practice.

The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to certain authorities as justifying his view. I shall deal with them now. The case in Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (1) is the first case cited. That was a case under O. XXI, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. In that case it was found that the agent of the judgment-debtor was ready to deposit the money in Court but he was not able to do so as the Judge had left the Court before time whose signature had to be obtained as the presiding officer for the challan to be paid. That was clearly a case where, owing to the action of the Judge himself by leaving the Court before the Court hours were over, the party was actually prevented from complying with the rule requiring the payment into Court within the time fixed. To that case the maxim clearly applied, but that is a different case altogether from the present one. To apply the maxim it must be possible to hold that the failure to comply with the rule of law was due to the action of the Court and not to any default of the party. The other cases cited are also of a similar kind. The case in Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (2), which followed the ruling in Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (1), was a case where the Treasury Officer refused to receive the money. The amount was large and, though the money was tendered before 3 P. M., the hour fixed before which payment had to be made into the Treasury according to the Treasury Rules, the Treasury Officer refused to receive the money because he thought that there was a period of three days more to pay it in. In that case the First Court had come to the conclusion that the money was tendered after 3 P. M. but the learned Judges in appeal reversed that finding and found that the money was tendered before 3 P. M., and that it was due altogether to the Treasury Officer's fault that the money was not paid in the Treasury and, therefore, the principle was applied that the party should not be prejudiced by the mistaken action of the officer. The Madras case cited Aravamudu Ayyangar v. Samiyappa Nandan

MULA RAM v. JIWANDA RAM:

(3) was a case where the Court was actually closed on the date when the payment was to be made. Their Lordships held that payment on the following day was a proper payment. That case has clearly no application to the present case. The last case cited is reported as Gajadhar Das v. Ram Sumiran Dube (4). In that case, it would appear on the facts, that the money was tendered both to the Revenue Court and to the Civil Court, but both Courts declined to receive it and the non-payment in time was due to the action of the Courts. Some of the observations perhaps go a little too far but the decision is fully in consonance with the principles enunciated in the other cases cited. The learned Vakil for the respondent drew my attention to a recent decision of Mr. Justice Ramesam in Koilpillai Samban v. Sapparimuthu Samban (5), but there the question was one under section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and the point the learned Judge had to consider was, whether, in the circumstances of the case, proper ground had been shown for excusing delay. There is no question of excusing delay in the present case. The position here is clear. The Act expressly lays down that unless the deposit is made at the time of the presentation of the petition it shall be dismissed and again says that only on compliance with the provisions of sub-rule (1), the Judge shall proceed to enquire into the petition. The language is very clear and mandatory in its character and unless the condition is complied with, the petition must be rejected.

I would add, in conclusion, that when the petitioner found that he could not pay the money into the Bank on the 17th, it was easy for him to have returned to the Court as he had ample time to do so and to have tendered the money to the learned Sub-Judge himself under r. 133 but nothing of that sort was done. The non-payment of the money is, therefore, clearly not due to any action of the Court but to the default of the petitioner. Now, in these circumstances, it seems to me clear, that this is not a case to which the maxim applies. The Subordinate Judge having assumed jurisdiction to enquire into the petition on a wrong view of the law, section 115, Civil Procedure Code, applies. Acting under that section, I set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and reject the first respondent's election petition. There will be no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. XXI, r. 54—Attachment—Proclamation—Fraudulent transfer—Substantial portion of consideration fictitious—Whole transfer, whether affected.

In order to constitute a valid attachment the proclamation described in the second portion of r. 54 of O. XXI, of the Civil Procedure Code must be carried out. [p. 453, col. 1.]

Where it is found that a transfer made by a judgment-debtor was made in bad faith with the object of delaying, defeating and obstructing the decree-holder and that the transferee aided and abetted him and a substantial portion of the consideration is found to have been fraudulent and fictitious, the whole transfer must be treated as fraudulent and effected with the object of defeating the decree-holder. JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that on 6th June 1915 a prohibitory order under O. XXI, r. 54, regarding the land in suit was served upon Bahadri, judgment-debtor, at the instance of his decree-holder Mula Ram. On the 7th August 1915 a very peculiar lease was executed by Bahadri in favour of one Jiwanda Ram in accordance with which the land in question was leased for a period of 20 years on an annual rental of Rs. 80 a year. In pursuance of that lease mutation was effected, the order showing that the whole of this sum of Rs. 1,600 was alleged by the lessee to have passed at the time of the execution of the lease, Rs. 1,000 in the form of credit in his own account and the balance of Rs. 600 partly in cash payment at the time of the registration, and partly in payment to previous creditors of the transferor.

After presenting an unsuccessful objection the lessee, Jiwanda Ram, has now brought this suit for a declaration that the land cannot be attached by the decree-holder, Mula Ram, in execution of his decree. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court on the finding that the whole of this transfer was tainted with fraud, that, at any rate, so far as Rs. 600 were concerned, it was not proved that any part of this consideration had passed, and that, therefore, on the principle laid down in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act the alienation was void against the previous attaching creditor. This finding has been set aside on appeal by the learned District Judge who has given a somewhat sketchy finding to the effect that Jiwanda Ram was a bona fide creditor of Bahadri presumably to the extent of Rs. 1,000 but has given no finding whatever as to the passing of the consideration for the smaller items totalling Rs. 600.

On second appeal it is urged that the prohibitory order constituted a sufficient attachment and made section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to this case. This point has been dropped as it is clearly established by Sinnappan v. Arunachalam Pillai (1) that in order to constitute a valid attachment the proclamation described in the second portion of r. 54 of O. XXI must be carried out.

The second point urged is that, in the absence of a finding as to the payment of

Rs. 600, it is open to this Court to come to a finding itself and if it be held that the items in question did not pass and that they are fraudulent and fictitious, then the decree-holder, Mula Ram, is entitled to avoid the whole transaction and to proceed against the land in execution. In the absence of any finding by the learned District Judge we have considered the evidence on the subject or, rather, the absence of any evidence, and we find ourselves in complete agreement with the Trial Court. A sum of Rs. 210 is entered as having been paid before the Sub-Registrar at the time of registration, but no endorsement was made to this effect, and the Sub-Registrar himself has not been produced. Similarly, a sum of Rs. 270 is shown to have been paid to Amir Chand but Amir Chand has not been produced nor has any receipt been tendered. It is stated that Sukh Dial was also paid in satisfaction of a decree which he held, but no copy of that decree has been produced. We find that no portion of Rs. 600 is proved to have passed and, taking every thing into account, the very peculiar nature of the deed, the peculiar conduct of the parties and more especially of the present plaintiff in anticipating the payments which were to have extended over 20 years, the fact of which there is no denying, that so far as the transferor is concerned he acted throughout in bad faith and with the object of defeating, delaying and obstructing his decree-holder, we find that not only was the transferor acting in fraud of his creditor-decree-holder but that the transferee had the knowledge of the fact and aided and abetted him in doing so. The only question remaining is how far the whole transfer is effected on its being shown that a very substantial portion is fraudulent and fictitious. The law on this point has been clearly laid down in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar (2). That case dealt, it is true, with moveable property, but the principle there enunciated was accepted in the case of immoveable property also in Palaniappa Mudali v. Official Receiver of Trichinopoly (3) and Subroya Goundan v. Perumal

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Receipt evidencing part payment towards mortgage-debt—Registration, if compulsory.

A receipt which states that the mortgagor had paid a certain sum on account of a mortgage but which does not recite that this sum was all that was due under the mortgage and that the effect of the payment was to extinguish the security, is not compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act and is consequently not inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. [p. 455, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case-law reviewed.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 23rd August 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Krishnagar, dated the 4th August 1919.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant:—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a simple mortgage. The plaintiff's case is that by verbal arrangement subsequent to the mortgage, there was payment and the mortgage-debt was cleared. Both Courts decreed the suit. My point is that the receipt is not admissible in evidence inasmuch as it is not registered as is required by section 17 of the Indian Registration Act. See Imdad Husain v. Tasadduk Hosain (1), Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2) and Parashram v. Ganpat (3). My next point is that, no evidence could be given as to modification of verbal arrangement. The learned Judge holds that the receipt does not extinguish the right of the mortgage and is not, therefore, registrable. I submit that is erroneous. See section 17, Indian Registration Act; section 60, Transfer of Property Act; Lakshman v. Damodar (4), Dina Nath v. Lachmi Narain (5).

Babu Probodh Kumar Kar, for Maulvi A. K. Fazlul Haq, for the Respondent.—The receipt does not recite the mortgage-debt. I submit it was not compulsorily registrable. The case in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2) is distinguishable. I submit the learned Judge has taken the correct view of the law. Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for redemption of a mortgage executed in his favour by the plaintiffs on the 26th February 1912. The case for the plaintiffs is, that on an adjustment between the parties, it was settled that, after remission, Rs. 200 would be accepted in full satisfaction of the sum due under the mortgage. The plaintiffs allege that this sum was paid on the 30th May 1917 and though the defendant granted a receipt, he has not returned the mortgage-bond. The plaintiffs accordingly ask for redemption and for delivery of the deed. The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiffs and have decreed the suit. On the present appeal, it has been contended that the receipt could not be admitted in evidence, as it was not registered in accordance with section 17 of the Indian Registration Act. The contention in substance is that the receipt was an instrument which purported or operated to extinguish an interest in immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 and was compulsorily registrable. We are of opinion that this argument is not well-founded.

The receipt states that the defendant had paid Rs. 200 on account of the mortgage; but it does not recite that this sum was all that was due under the mortgage and that the effect of the payment was to extinguish the security. It cannot be maintained on these facts that the receipt was compulsorily registrable. Reference has been made to the decision in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2) which was followed by this Court in Kailash Chandra Nath v. Sheikh Chhenu (6). The decision of the Full Bench in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2) is an authority for the proposition that an instrument to come within section 17 (b) of the Registration Act must in itself purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish some right, title or interest of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards in immoveable property, while to come within section 17 (c), it must be, on the face of it, an acknowledgment of the receipt or payment of some consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinguishment of such a right, title or interest. The receipt then before the Court did not fulfil this condition and was held admissible without registration. On the other hand, in Parashram v. Ganpat (3), the receipt not only acknowledged payment of money, but also stated that "the mortgagee would have no longer any interest remaining in any way in the mortgaged premises and would execute a new sale-deed on stamp." It was held that this was a receipt which fell within section 17 of the Registration Act and was compulsorily registrable. The distinction between the two classes of cases was explained in Lakshman v. Damodar (4) where Ranade, J., set out the law as follows:—

"The receipt was what it professes to be, a settlement of accounts. It does not purport to extinguish the mortgage-debt, and it, therefore, comes under the protection of the exception (n) to clause (b) of section 17 of the Registration Act. Even before that clause was added by Act VII of 1888, this Court had always held that a receipt given by a mortgagee to the mortgagor for sums paid on account of the mortgage are not inadmissible in evidence for want of registration; Shidlingapa v. Chenbasapa (7), Basawa v. Kalkapa (8), Annappa v. Ganpati (9). The Madras and Calcutta High Courts have taken the same view: Venkayyar v. Venkatasubbayyar (10), Sheikh Gugunfur Ali v. Mahomed Yaseen (11). The Allahabad High Court took a different view in Dalip Singh v. Durga Prasad (12), where it held that receipt for sum paid in part satisfaction of a mortgage must be registered, though, at the same time, it held that the payment may be proved by parole evidence. To the same effect was the decision in Imdad Husain v. Tasadduk Hosain (1). Subsequently, however, in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2) the Full Bench of that Court has held that endorsements or receipts of payments passed by mortgagees to mortgagors did not fall within section 17, and unless where they are so framed and worded as to purport expressly to limit or extinguish an interest in immoveable property, they did not come within the section and did not require registration."

The receipt in the case before us falls within the latter category. The receipt by itself would not be sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to a decree for redemption. The plaintiff had to establish in addition that there was a settlement of accounts between the parties and that they had agreed that the mortgage-debt would be wiped out on payment of Rs. 200. The receipt only established a payment of Rs. 200, but not the adjustment and remission. The receipt by itself did not purport or operate to extinguish a debt of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards and was admissible in evidence without registration.

The result is, that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

A deed of compromise which recites that a house belonging to a person and in his possession and enjoyment shall be enjoyed by him with power to make a gift or sale of the same, does not purport to create or modify title to immoveable property since it contains only a statement of fact. Such a document does not require registration under section 17 of the Registration Act and is admissible in evidence either as a contract to acknowledge an existing title or as evidence in the nature of an admission. Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and K. Venkataraghavachari, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Radhakrishnayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Trial Judge in this case, which is a claim by a grandson against his grandmother, was asked to take into consideration a document which purports to be a deed of compromise dated 28th December 1918. In that document, there is a statement that House No. 27 in Thatha Muthiappan Street belonging to the said Ranganayakamma, that is the grandmother, and another house with which nobody in this case is concerned, which are in possession and enjoyment of the said Ranganayakamma from the date of the purchase, shall be enjoyed by the said Ranganayakamma with power to make gift and sell away. The learned Vakils have argued this case with great preciseness and Mr. Krishnasami Iyer for the appellant does not ask us to say that there is any magic about this document because it is in the nature of a nominal settlement which would excuse it from registration. It has been held by the learned Trial Judge on the argument of the respondent that it does require registration and to test that, I must look at the section of the Registration Act which is material, and that is section 17. By section 17 (1) (b) among documents which require registration are non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immoveable property. Now it is said that this part of the document is a declaration of right in immoveable property and that, therefore, by virtue of section 49, the document would create no rights in the property in question. It is said, on the other side, that this is not a document which purports to create or modify in any way anybody's title to immoveable property. It is simply a statement of fact, as I said in the course of the argument, that Johnson's house is Johnson's house. To my mind this matter cannot be put better than in the words of West, J., in the case of Sakharan Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji (1), where the learned Judge says thus: "Here, however, the document is not itself one which declares a right in immoveable property, in the sense probably intended by section 17. There 'declare' is placed along with 'create', 'assign', 'limit', or 'extinguish', a

(1) 5 B. 232; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 154.

RANGANAYAKI AMMAL v. VIRUPAKSHIE RAO NAIDU.

'right', 'title' or 'interest' and these words imply a definite change of legal relation to the property by expression of Will embodied in the document referred to. I think this is equally the case with the word 'declare'. It implies a declaration of Will, not a mere statement of fact, and thus a deed of partition, which causes a change of legal relation to the property divided amongst all the parties to it, is a declaration in the intended sense, but a letter containing an admission, direct or inferential, that a partition once took place, does not declare a right within the meaning of the section. It does in one sense 'declare' a right, that is the existence of the right is directly or indirectly stated by the writing, but it is not the expression or declaration of Will by which the right is constituted." I wish to associate myself with all that the learned Judge says on the point. It does not appear to me that any of the later decisions, whether of the Privy Council or of the other High Courts in India, have, in any way, modified it, and indeed in one case in which in its initial stage I was concerned, the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (2), it appears to me that the judgment of the Board entirely recognises and proceeds on the principle laid down in the Bombay case by West, J. Now it is said by Mr. Krishnasami Iyer that the document is conclusive of the rights of the parties if not as to moveable property, certainly as to immoveable property and he relies mainly on the decision of Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3), a Privy Council case. The passage he relied on is a sentence which runs as follows:—"In the present case, Khairati Lal acquired no right from the daughters of Daulat for 'the compromise', to use their Lordships' language in Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (4), 'is based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is.'" Turning to Rani Mewa Kuwar v. Rani Hulas Kuwar (4), I find their Lordships say at page 166, after the sentence quoted in Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna Narain (3): "The claim does not rest on contract only but upon a title to the land acknowledged and defined by that contract which is part only of the evidence of the appellant to prove her title and not all her case." That seems to me to allow that the document is admissible in evidence either as a contract to acknowledge an existing title or perhaps as evidence in the nature of an admission. At any rate, in my opinion, it is only part of the case of the appellant and it is not a conclusive document on which we can declare rights with regard to immoveable property.

With regard to moveable property in the suit, no doubt the registration objection would not apply, but I gather from the learned Judge's judgment that, besides the plea of want of registration, it was alleged that the document was executed by the next friend in consequence of a misrepresentation made to her and of her negligence. That being so, I think we must send the case back for re-hearing although the learned Judge has dealt with most of the other evidence. We think that, for this Court satisfactorily to deal with the matter, we ought to have the opinion of the learned Judge on the force of the evidence as a whole and it may be that, considered in the light of documents which we have now held admissible, his former opinion as to the rest of the evidence would perhaps require modification and we think that this is a process which ought to be gone through by the Court of the first instance.

We, therefore, remand the case for re-hearing. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal and the costs incurred in the Court below will be in the discretion of the Trial Judge.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, in Civil Appeal No. 222 of 1920, dated the 16th July 1921.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first ground of appeal, which is divided into four sub-heads, is to the effect that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in confirming the findings of the First Court that the mortgage-deed in suit was validly attested. The learned District Judge merely says that he has to decide whether it is more probable that the attesting witnesses had turned hostile or that the attestation was validly carried out and that he thinks that the lower Court has come to a correct decision. A Court of First Appeal should have recorded a fuller judgment than this. But I cannot interfere on this ground, since the decision of the lower Courts is the only one that can possibly be arrived at on the evidence. The mortgage-deed purports to have been attested by three persons, Kesoram, Surta and Pirthisingh, all of whom signed under the heading "witnesses." Of these three, Kesoram and Surta have been called as witnesses. Surta says that he saw the executant Ramchand affix his signature, and that Kesoram was present when the deed was executed. Kesoram says he did not see the deed executed, but attested it at the request of one of the mortgagees. The Munsif held this witness to be hostile to the plaintiff, and his grounds for so holding are sound. The third witness Chuni Lal, the other mortgagee, deposes that all three attesting witnesses were present when the deed was executed; his evidence has been accepted, and even if Kesoram was not present, which version has not been accepted, the deed was validly attested by two attesting witnesses. There is thus no force in the first ground of appeal.

The fifth ground of appeal calls in question a concurrent finding of fact regarding re-payments with which I cannot interfere in second appeal.

The 2nd, 3rd and 4th grounds raise a question of law. The defendants, other than those representing the original mortgagor Ramchand, alleged that the 1st and 2nd defendants were not Ramchand's only heirs and contended that the suit should be dismissed as all the necessary parties had not been joined. On the issue framed on these points the learned Munsif observed: "The evidence of D.W. No 1 shows that there are other heirs of Ramchandra. I find that Ramchandra has other heirs besides the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They are necessary parties but as they have not been made parties their interest in the property, if any, would not be affected." In appeal the District Judge, after referring to rulings cited on behalf of the parties, remarks: "I, therefore, hold that the other heirs of the original mortgagor are not necessary; parties to the present suit, and their not having been joined does not prevent the plaintiff from getting a decree for recovery of the full amount due from the sale of the mortgaged property included in the suit."

RAJAGOPALA AYYANGAR v. RAMANUJA AYYANGAR.

I have been unable to find any published ruling of this Court dealing with the legal question involved. In Khawaja Kutbuddin v. Shriram Saligram, First Appeal No. 38 B of 1919, it was held by Kotwal and Macnair, A. J. Cs., where the rights in the mortgaged property have been split up owing to the death of the mortgagor that a plaintiff claiming foreclosure who omits to implead all the heirs of the mortgagor throws an undue burden on the shares of the persons impleaded, and that the decretal amount must be reduced by an amount proportionate to the shares of the persons omitted, whose shares would not be liable to foreclosure. In that case, as in the one now in the appeal, it would seem that the plaintiff sought to make the whole of the property mortgaged liable for the whole of the mortgage-debt, although some of the heirs of the mortgagor were not parties to the suit. The learned Judge cited the case of Ponnusami Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Naichan (1), where the facts were different: the mortgagor released a part of the mortgaged property and sought to realize the whole of the mortgage-debt from the remaining property, without making the holders of the released property parties to the suit. Cases directly to the point are Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh (2) and Alam Singh v. Gokal Singh (3). In the first case it was ruled that when a mortgagee sued for the recovery of the whole of the mortgaged property but by an oversight omitted to implead certain persons who had acquired a share in the property subsequent to the mortgage in suit so much of the claim should be decreed as was proportionate to the interest of the persons who were before the Court. In the second case the same procedure was followed. Similarly, in Budhmal Kevalchand v. Rama Yesu Sangle (4), where the mortgaged property fell into the hands of two purchasers in half shares, only one of whom was sued, it was held that the mortgagee could claim only half the mortgage-money. In the present case the allegation is that the 1st and 2nd defendants are heirs of only portion of the property mortgaged, and that their part interest in the property mortgaged cannot be made liable for the whole of the mortgaged-debt. For the respondents reliance is placed on Perumal Pillai v. Raman Chettiar (5), but that case is not to the point; a case where the plaintiff had released part of the mortgaged property and all the persons interested in the equity of redemption of the property in suit were joined as parties. It appears to me that the proper course is to ascertain what is the interest held in the property mortgaged, which is also the property in suit, by all the defendants, not merely the 1st and 2nd defendants as compared with the interest in the property still possessed by the heirs of the original mortgagors not joined. As only the interests of the defendants can be sold, the amount decreed should be proportionate to that interest. The appeal is remanded for further hearing with reference to the above remarks. Costs will be costs in the suit and there will be no refund certificate.

of documents—Burden of proof, whether affected—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Interlocutory order—Revision.

Where one party calls for and inspects documents with the other party the latter is entitled, under section 163 of the Evidence Act, to have such documents exhibited, but such exhibiting is always subject to proof of execution and genuineness.

Section 163 of the Evidence Act does not render proof of the documents to be exhibited unnecessary or alter the normal incidence of that burden. A Court which diverts from the normal course in such a case and wrongly throws the burden of proof on the party inspecting instead of on the party relying on the documents commits a material irregularity and the order is liable to be set aside in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Quære.—Whether section 163 of the Evidence Act is applicable to documents produced under the discovery procedure or only after the trial has begun.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and sections 107 and 108 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, dated the 30th October 1922, in Original Suit No. 59 of 1916, and petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing transfer of Original Suit No. 59 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, to the file of the District Court, Tanjore. JUDGMENT.—That the general course of the proceedings in this case has been deplorable will be clear, when it is stated that, although they began in 1914, they still are not within measurable distance of any conclusion. We, however, are particularly concerned only with the order which we are asked to revise and which was passed on 30th October 1922.

The facts, shortly, are that much earlier in the case the defendants in response to the plaintiff's petition for discovery produced certain accounts and at a later date produced further accounts. Those accounts were before the Court, and the suit being for an account of the profits of properties which had been in the possession of the defendants and their father, they would have been most material in arriving at the amount to which the plaintiffs were entitled. The plaintiff having inspected the accounts, brought to the notice of the lower Court that they did not admit their genuineness or completeness. The case standing thus, the lower Court has held that, as the accounts have been inspected by the plaintiffs, the defendants' Vakil is entitled to insist on their being exhibited in spite of the objection from the other side that they are not genuine and ought not to be exhibited without proof. The lower Court justified this with reference to section 163, Indian Evidence Act, and, if it meant simply that the defendants were entitled to have the accounts exhibited, subject to proof and that, as they relied on them, they would be bound to prove them, the plaintiffs being entitled to adduce counter evidence, we could find no fault. But the plaintiff in the first page of the affidavit of 31st October 1921 says (and it is not contradicted) that the lower Court at once called upon them to adduce evidence about the genuineness or otherwise of the said accounts. That was in no way justified by section 163 of the Evidence Act. For section 163 does not, in our opinion, render proof of the document to be exhibited unnecessary or alter the normal incidence of that burden. We do not think it necessary to decide in these proceedings whether section 163 is applicable to accounts produced under the discovery procedure or only to accounts produced after the trial has begun. It is sufficient that it includes nothing relating to the burden of proof or the necessity for the proof prescribed in the other sections of the Act.

We are, of course, unwilling in revision to interfere with an order passed by the lower Court in a pending trial and we should not do so in the present case, if it were not possible to isolate the point on which our interference is asked for. Here, however, we think that, in ruling as it did, and diverting from the usual course, in accordance with which the burden of proof was on the defendants, the lower Court committed a material irregularity which we should set aside.

The application before us for a transfer of the case is founded on the alleged perversity of the lower Court's order and procedure and on certain oral observations which it is alleged to have made. We do not think those observations, if they were made, merit serious notice; and we can find nothing except a mistake, which there is no reason for doubting was made in good faith. There is accordingly no reason for a transfer.

Our attention has been invited to the memo. by defendants dated 30th October 1922, in which the first defendant declined to supplement the evidence already given. They did so, so far as we can understand, in consequence of the lower Court's ruling just dissented from. They must be allowed, if so advised, to re-consider their refusal to adduce further evidence.

Civil Revision Petition No. 1 of 1923 is allowed to the extent stated. Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 7 of 1923 is dismissed. Costs will be costs in the cause and will be provided for in the lower Court's decree.

Auction sale—Property sold subject to mortgage-decree—Payment by mortgagor out of Court—Payment not certified to Court—Encumbrance paid off by auction-purchaser—Credit given for amount paid by mortgagor—Refund of amount—Judgment-debtor, right of.

On the sale of property subject to encumbrances the vendor gets the price of his interest, whatever it may be whether the price be settled by private bargain or determined by public competition together with an indemnity against the encumbrances affecting the land. The contract of indemnity may be expressed or implied. If the purchaser covenants with the vendor to pay the encumbrances it is still nothing more than a contract of indemnity. The purchaser takes the property subject to the burthen attached to it. If the encumbrances turn out to be invalid, the vendor has nothing to complain of. He has got what he bargained for. His indemnity is complete. He cannot pick up the burthen of which the land is relieved and seize it as his own property. [p. 463, cols. 1 & 2.] Izzatunnisa Begam v. Pertab Singh, 3 Ind. Cas. 793; 31 A. 583; 13 C. W. N. 1143; 10 C. L. J. 313; 6 A. L. J. 817; 11 Bom. L. R. 1220; 6 M. L. T. 277; 19 M. L. J. 682; 36 I. A. 203; (P. C.), followed.

Certain property was sold in execution subject to an encumbrance of a mortgage-decree for a certain sum of money. Before the proclamation of sale was issued, the judgment-debtor paid out of Court a part of the amount due under the mortgage-decree. This payment was not certified to the Court and was consequently ignored in the execution sale. Subsequently, the auction-purchaser paid off the encumbrance and was given credit by the mortgagee decree-holder for the amount received by the latter. The judgment-debtor brought a suit against the auction-purchaser for recovery of the amount and in the alternative claimed it from the mortgagee decree-holder:

Held, (1) that the auction-purchaser was under no obligation to pay the amount and the mere fact that he derived benefit from the payment did not give the judgment-debtor any cause of action against him: [p. 464, col. 1.]

(2) that in view of the fact that there was no fraud committed by the mortgagee decree-holder the judgment-debtor's cause of action as against him could only be based on the ground of negligence or on a breach of an implied agreement to certify the payment and make it effectual in execution; [p. 464, col. 1.]

(3) that as there was no period fixed by the law for the certification of the payment, failure to certify within a particular time could not be treated as negligence or as a breach of agreement; [p. 464, col. 1.]

(4) that even if there was a breach of agreement on the part of the mortgagee decree-holder, the loss was more directly due to the negligence of the judgment-debtor himself in not attending the hearing at which the sale-proclamation was prepared than to the mortgagee decree-holder's failure to certify; [p. 464, col. 1.]

(5) that, consequently, the judgment-debtor was not entitled to claim the amount from either the auction-purchaser or the mortgagee decree-holder. [p. 464, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 4th August 1921, in Transfer Civil Suit No. 2 of 1921.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. P. N. Rudra, for Appellants.

Messrs. M. Gupta and M. B. Marathe, for the Respondents.

MITSUMI BUSSAN KAISHA LD. V. PADAMRAJ FULCHAND.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, briefly stated, are that on the 2nd August 1916 Bhagwandas, defendant No. 2, obtained a preliminary mortgage-decree in Civil Suit No. 20 of 1914 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, against the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 1,22,528-1 payable by instalments with interest. On 31st August 1918 Radhakisan Gopikisan obtained a money-decree against the plaintiffs for Rs. 28,675-9-3 in the Court of the District Judge, Khandwa, and having got it transferred to Amraoti for execution attached a Ginning and Pressing Factory belonging to the plaintiffs. The Factory was sold subject to the incumbrance of the decree in Suit No. 20 of 1914. There were some objections preferred to the confirmation of the sale but they were dismissed and the sale was ultimately confirmed in favour of defendant No. 1, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Limited. The proclamation of sale had stated the incumbrance in the following terms:—

“The above (the Factory) may be auctioned subject to the encumbrance of Rs. 1,22,528-1-0 in Civil Suit No. 20 of 1914 decided on the 2nd of August 1916, on the file of the First Additional District Judge. Auction may be held subject to the encumbrance of mortgage.”

The plaintiffs state, and the defendants admit, that the plaintiffs had paid out of Court Rs. 18,000 in various sums towards the decree before the proclamation of sale was issued. It is also admitted that defendant No. 1 paid off the decretal debt and credit for the amount of Rs. 18,000 was given to him in the account of the mortgage-debt by defendant No. 2. The plaintiffs sue for this amount in the present case.

Paragraphs 9 and 10 of the plaint refer to the grounds of defendant No. 1's liability as follows:—

“9. That the plaintiffs submit that the plaintiffs were interested in the payment of the said mortgage-money, which the defendant Company, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, was bound by law to pay, and the plaintiffs thereon paid the said sum of Rs. 18,000 and as such the plaintiffs are entitled to be re-imbursed of the said sum of Rs. 18,000 and its interest of which the defendant Company enjoyed the benefit.

“10. The plaintiffs further submit that the said defendant Company enjoyed the benefit.”

Paragraphs 6 and 8 state the grounds of defendant No. 2's liability:—

“6. That before the said auction the plaintiff paid to the defendant, Bhagwandas, a sum of Rs. 18,000 towards the said mortgage. The said defendant agreed to certify the payment of the said sum to the Court.

“8. That the plaintiffs charge the defendant, Bhagwandas, with having committed fraud upon the plaintiffs in not certifying the said payments to the Court and thereby having caused loss and damage to the plaintiffs to the extent of Rs. 18,000 and interest thereon.”

Plaintiffs claim a decree against defendant No. 1 or, in the alternative, against defendant No. 2.

It is not necessary to refer to the pleas raised by the defendants.

The following facts have been found by the lower Court:—

That the plaintiffs suffered a loss by the payment not having been certified; that Bhagwandas was not guilty of any fraud in not certifying the payment; that though plaintiff, Dharamchand, did not apply to have the payment certified he did inform the Court of it before the sale was confirmed; that the damage to the plaintiffs was caused by their own silence in the matter in not certifying the payments to the Court and not by Bhagwandas' silence, and that defendant No. 1 derived benefit from the payment of Rs. 18,000 by the plaintiffs having obtained a reduction from defendant No. 2 on account of it when satisfying the mortgage-decree.

The lower Court passed a decree against defendant No. 1 on the ground of his having derived benefit from the payment. Defendant No. 1 appeals and the plaintiffs ask for a decree against defendant No. 2 if defendant No. 1's appeal succeeds.

The ground of defendant No. 1's liability stated in paragraph 9 of the plaint is not supported in this Court.

It is first contended on behalf of defendant No. 1 that there is no warrant of title in an auction-sale in execution, and defendant No. 1 took his chance of being either the gainer or the loser by the transaction of the sale and that as if he lost he had no remedy against any body, so if he gained he could not be asked to give up the benefit. The argument based upon the absence of a warrant of title, however, is not applicable, for the gain or loss in this case is not connected with the title to the property.

It is next contended that defendant No. 1 cannot be said to have benefited by the payment as he had to pay interest in addition to the principal and had, besides, bought a hazardous and insecure title. Defendant No. 1 was taking no chance as to the amount which he would have to pay on account of the incumbrance. The amount payable on the date of the sale, though not calculated and stated exactly in the proclamation, was yet ascertainable. We are of opinion that defendant No. 1 has received benefit to the extent of Rs. 18,000 from the fact that the payment of that sum was not certified to the Court. Assuming that the proper price of the property was what defendant No. 1 paid in cash, plus the amount required to discharge the incumbrance, defendant No. 1 did benefit by getting a reduction of Rs. 18,000 from the amount of the incumbrance.

Reliance is next placed on Izzatun-Nisa Begam v. Pertab Singh (1) and it is contended that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, at page 589*, apply to the circumstances of this case, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim anything from defendant No. 1. In our opinion this contention must be upheld. The case cited was one where the mortgages, subject to which the sale was made turned out to be invalid, and the auction-purchaser had to pay nothing on account of them. Here the incumbrance is only reduced to a comparatively small extent. At page 589* their Lordships say:—

gether with an indemnity against the encumbrances affecting the land. The contract of indemnity may be expressed or implied. If the purchaser covenants with the vendor to pay the encumbrances, it is still nothing more than a contract of indemnity. The purchaser takes the property subject to the burthen attached to it. If the encumbrances turn out to be invalid, the vendor has nothing to complain of. He has got what he bargained for. His indemnity is complete. He cannot pick up the burthen of which the land is relieved and seize it as his own property. The notion that after the completion of the purchase the purchaser is in some way a trustee for the vendor of the amount by which the existence, or supposed existence, of encumbrances has led to a diminution of the price, and liable, therefore, to account to the vendor for anything that remains of that amount after the encumbrances are satisfied or disposed of, is without foundation. After the purchase is completed, the vendor has no claim to participate in any benefit which the purchaser may derive from his purchase.”

The present case is sought to be distinguished from the above case on two grounds. The first is, that the benefit obtained by the auction-purchaser was by reason of a payment made by the judgment-debtor. We do not see how this circumstance makes any difference to the application of the rule as stated by their Lordships. The second ground is this. It is pointed out that the plaintiffs brought the fact of the payment to the notice of the Court, vide Exhibit P-3, before the confirmation of the sale and defendant No. 1 opposed the application for setting aside the same. By his conduct in opposing the application defendant No. 1 must be deemed to have agreed to pay the amount to the plaintiff. We fail to see how any implied agreement to pay can be inferred from defendant No. 1's conduct. He merely contended that the fact of the payment was not a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale and was raising a legal defence that he was entitled to raise. He cannot be said to have agreed to re-pay the amount if given credit for by defendant No. 2 after the sale was confirmed. In our opinion, there was neither an implied agreement to re-pay nor any estoppel on defendant No. 1's part. Admittedly, defendant No. 1 was not responsible for the incorrectness of the amount mentioned in the proclamation as due under the mortgage-decree.

The mere fact that defendant No. 1 received the benefit from the plaintiffs' payment does not entitle the plaintiff to sue for it. The question is, whether there was any obligation on defendant No. 1's part to re-pay it: Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lal Sahoo (2). We hold there was none.

We now come to the plaintiff's alternative claim against defendant No. 2. It is said that it was the statutory duty of defendant No. 2 to get the payment certified to the Court and the failure to certify was a breach of duty or of an implied agreement to certify which resulted in the right amount not being entered in the sale-proclamation and thus caused loss to the plaintiff. No doubt it was defendant No. 2's duty to certify the payment under O. XXI, r. 2, First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, but is he liable to be sued merely because he failed to certify the payment before the sale? No period is fixed by law within which defendant No. 2 was bound to certify. He had not attempted to execute his decree ignoring the payment. As a matter of fact, he admitted the payment in an affidavit dated the 11th September 1919—Exhibit P.3—before confirmation of the sale and gave credit to defendant No. 1 for it in the final account of the mortgage-decree. He committed no fraud. The plaintiffs' cause of action against defendant No. 2 may be based on the ground of negligence on his part or on a breach of an implied agreement by him to certify the payment and make it effectual in execution. Failure to certify within a particular time where no time is fixed cannot be treated as negligence or a breach of agreement, and gave the plaintiffs no cause of action. We are inclined to think that, even if there was a breach of agreement on the part of defendant No. 2, the loss to the plaintiff was more directly due to his own negligence in not attending the hearing at which the sale-proclamation was prepared and not seeing that it was properly prepared than to defendant No. 2's failure to certify. It would seem, moreover, that the implied agreement to certify was an agreement to certify it for a particular purpose, namely, to make the payment effectual in execution. There has been no breach of such agreement for the payment has not been rendered ineffectual in execution by the failure to certify.

We hold that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim the amount either from defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2. We set aside the decree of the lower Court against defendant No. 1 and dismiss the plaintiffs' claim against defendant No. 1 with costs in both Courts. The costs of defendant No. 2 in this Court will be paid by the plaintiffs. The decree of the lower Court with respect to defendant No. 1 stands.

If the description of a piece of land in a Court sale is such that it identifies the land, for instance, if the description would apply to some other land than that which it was intended to sell, the purchaser at Court-auction can get no other land than that so identified. If on the other hand, the land is clearly identified but wrongly described, the misdescription must be treated merely as an irregularity and the sale at the auction will stand good. [p. 465 col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The plaintiff claims a certain land which he says he purchased at a Court-auction. The land purchased was mortgaged by the judgment-debtor, the second defendant, to the decree-holder, who obtained a mortgage-decree and brought the land to Court-auction. The land was described probably in the mortgage as 'Nanja' 55 though it is not quite clear that the word "Nanja" in the mortgage itself necessarily applied to the number 55: but it was certainly so described in the decree, in the notice of sale and, in the certificate of sale. Before the sale and after the suit, the first defendant, the appellant, bought from the judgment-debtor, his brother-in-law, the land described as No. 55 Punja. In this village the numbers used for description of lands run consecutively irrespective of whether the land is Punja or Nanja. There is no other No. 55 in this village. The land is in fact Punja and not Nanja. In my judgment the word 'Nanja' used in the mortgage and in the decree and in the documents relating to the auction is merely an inaccurate description of the land properly described as No. 55 and thus identified and in my judgment that land was mortgaged and was the subject of the decree, and was the land that was sold. If the description of the land given is such that it identifies the land, for instance, if the description used would apply to some other land than that which it was intended to sell then, according to the judgment of the Privy Council in Raja Thakur Barmha v. Jiban Ram Marwari (1), the purchaser at Court-auction can get no other land than that so identified. If, on the other hand, the land is clearly identified, but wrongly described, the misdescription is to be treated as an irregularity and the sale at the auction stands good. As this land was the subject for the mortgage suit, although there was an error in the description of it, in my judgment, section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies, and during the pendency of that suit, the first defendant would get no title to it. Further, it was ordered in this case that the description 'Nanja' should be altered into 'Punja' and the various documents from the mortgage-deed onwards be rectified accordingly. It was argued that, under the Specific Relief Act, rectification could not be ordered where rights of third parties intervene. It is said that the purchase by the first defendant was a bona fide purchase for value without notice and the rectification cannot be made so as to affect the right which he has acquired. The answer given on this point by the Subordinate Judge is that the first defendant was not a bona fide purchaser for value. That, I think, is a question of fact, and there being evidence to support it, it is not open to this Court on second appeal to re-consider it, but I think it right to say that the fact of relationship of the first and the second defendants, the suspicious circumstances as to the consideration and the fact that the first defendant never even asked to see the title-deed before purchasing the land amply warrant the Subordinate Judge and the District Munsif in arriving at the conclusion which they did on this point. In view of what I have said about the application of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, this point does not arise.

This appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Yeotmal, dated the 29th September 1920, in Civil Suit No. 202 of 1919.

Messrs. M. Gupta and G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Bode and G. R. Deo, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a resident of Yeotmal. The defendants carry on business in Bombay as commission agents. The plaintiff sent some bales of cotton to the defendants for sale in Bombay. He alleged that the defendants did not sell the bales on the day on which they were instructed to sell them, that they described them as of a quality inferior to their real quality and that they thus failed to realise their proper value. He sued for damages occasioned by the defendants' conduct in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Yeotmal. The defendants took a preliminary objection that the suit was not triable in Yeotmal. This objection having succeeded the plaintiff appealed to this Court. Some letters which the Trial Court did not have before it were admitted in this Court and the case was remanded for the point of jurisdiction being tried after examining the parties and considering such documentary evidence as they might produce. The Trial Court has again held that the case was not triable in Yeotmal and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff again appeals.

The question to be decided is whether the cause of action or any part of it arose in Yeotmal. For this purpose the correspondence between the parties must be referred to in some detail. The correspondence opened with Exhibit D-1, a letter written by the plaintiff to the defendants on the 3rd February 1919. The plaintiff stated that he wished to send 100 bales "ready for sale" and enquired how much he could draw as advance and what would be the incidental charges. Exhibit P-4, dated the 5th February 1919, is the reply to this letter. The defendants enclosed in this letter a printed form, Exhibit P-5, containing the required information and expressed their willingness to send such further information as may be desired. On the 6th February 1919 the plaintiff wrote Exhibit D-2 asking for further information. From the terms of this letter as also from Exhibit D-3 it appears that the plaintiff had not received Exhibit P-4 when he wrote Exhibit D-2. Exhibit P-6 dated the 8th February 1919 is the reply to Exhibit D-2 and supplies the further information wanted by the plaintiff. For practical purposes, Exhibits D-1 and D-2 may be treated as one enquiry and Exhibits P-4 and P-6 as one answer thereto. Thereafter, on the 11th February 1919, the plaintiff wrote Exhibit D-3. The material part of this letter is as follows:—

"I am in receipt of your letters dated 5th and 8th instant and contents noted.

"In reply I am glad to inform you that I have sent you via Dhamangaon 122 bales full press cotton, and the Railway receipt for the same will be sent to you in a day or two. Kindly arrange for the transit insurance from Dhamangaon to Bombay and inform me accordingly.

"To-day I have drawn on you one hundi for Rs. 10,500 in favour of Sheikh Mahboob Sheikh Samusbbhai of Digras dated 15th February 1919. So kindly pay the draft and debit to my account. Please note the above hundi will be paid in Bombay on the 17th February 1919 and in the meantime that is before above date you will receive my Railway receipt for 122 bales from Dhamangaon.

"As advance you have informed me that you will pay 75 per cent. that I come to know but kindly arrange to give 80 per cent after deducting Railway fare as you give to Seth Ramkumar and Ramdial of Yeotmal and I am sending you these bales by the recommendation of them.

SHAMAL DAS V. PHANINDRA NATH ROY.

"Please note in the meantime if the market will go down I am ready to send you back. Now on receipt of this kindly inform me how many thousands hundi I may draw on you for the above 122 bales.

"Here the Railway is not open for Colaba, therefore, I am sending you bales from Bhamangaon which please note."

"Letter received. Draw hundi at 16,000 on 100 bales. Railway Transit Insurance effected."

It seems to me that the suit lies in the Court of Yeotmal. The plaintiff had informed the defendants that he had a particular item of work to be done in Bombay and asked on what terms the defendants were prepared to do that work. The defendants' letters, Exhibits P-4 and P-6, must be taken as the signification of their willingness to do that work on the terms given therein with a view to the plaintiff assenting to that work being done on those terms by them. The letters, Exhibits P-4 and P-6, therefore, constitute a proposal. Exhibit D-3 and the despatch of goods were the assent of the plaintiff to the proposal. The proposal having thus been accepted became a promise. The contract which is a part of the cause of action was thus formed at Yeotmal and the Court at Yeotmal had jurisdiction to try the suit under section 20, Civil Procedure Code.

I am not prepared to accept the defendants' argument that Exhibits D-1 and D-2 constitute a proposal and P-4 and P-6 an acceptance. The contract could not be complete until the defendants' terms of agency were accepted by the plaintiff. He had not agreed to accept whatever the defendants' terms might be without knowing them beforehand. Neither Exhibits D-1 and D-2 constitute a proposal, nor P-4 and P-6 an acceptance as interpreted in section 2 of the Contract Act. Nor do I agree with the defendants' contention that Exhibits P-4 and P-6 were mere quotations and nothing more. Reading them together with Exhibit D-1 they amount, in my opinion, to an offer to do the particular work referred to in Exhibit D-1 on certain terms. I hold that the suit is triable at Yeotmal. The plaint which is filed in this Court will be forwarded to the lower Court which is hereby directed to receive it and proceed with the trial of the case according to law. Costs to date will abide the result.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28, sub-ss. (3), (6)—Insolvency of mortgagor in possession—Mortgagee, position of.

Having regard to the provisions of section 28, clause (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the reputed ownership clause in sub-section (3) of that section can have no operation to affect the power of a secured creditor. Consequently, the principle that if goods have been mortgaged, the mortgagee is the true owner, and if he allows the mortgagor to continue in possession of the goods until his bankruptcy the goods pass to the trustee, is not applicable to a case under the Act. [p. 469, col. 2; p. 470, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of September 1921.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakraborty (with him Babu Kali Kinkar Chakraborty), for Appellant:—One Sarada entered into an agreement with the appellants by which we were to advance money to him on the security of jute kept in our godowns. We were given no control over the business but the key of the godowns was with us. In August 1920 we stopped further payments and in January 1921 Sarada applied for insolvency. The adjudication was made and a Receiver was appointed. Our dues amount to Rs. 38,500. We filed a claim as secured creditor. The learned Judge held that we were the reputed owners of the jute. Our case is that there was an agent of mine called Rajani and also a Darwan who were both to be paid by Sarada. There was nothing to show that these were my paid servants. (Reads and discusses the evidence). The principles of reputed ownership do not apply. The mortgagee is not the owner of the property. Here we allowed the insolvent to deal with the property. Section 28 (3) applies when the real owner allows the insolvent to deal with the property in such a manner as to create a belief that the insolvent was the owner of the property. Here the facts are quite different. We are secured creditors and as such are entitled to the benefit of section 28 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. See also sections 2 (1) (e), 28 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Babu Monmohan Bose (with him Babus Asiranjjan Chatterjee, Narendra Nath Chowdhury, Nalin Chundra Pal Anilendra Nath Rai Chowdhury), for the Respondents:—The principle of reputed ownership has been rightly applied. See Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. II, 177. Section 28 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act merely enables the creditor to proceed against the property of the insolvent in or out of Court as distinguished from the rights of the ordinary creditors who do not have such right. If effect be given to section 28 (6) then the clause (3) to the section would be rendered nugatory. I submit the Court below passed the proper order upon the facts and circumstances of the case.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakrabarty, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order of the District Judge of the 24-Pargunnahs in an insolvency case.

One Sarada Prosad Ghosh was a dealer in jute. He entered into an agreement with a certain person called Khettry under which the latter was to make advances to Sarada on the security of jute kept in his godown. By the agreement, the key of the godown was to be kept by Khettry but was to do the buying and selling independently and Khettry was to have no control over that. Further, Sarada was to have the delivery of the jute. In this manner Khettry used to finance Sarada until August 1920 when he stopped further advances. On the 19th January 1921 Sarada presented a petition of insolvency. The adjudication order was made on the 21st January 1921 and a Receiver was appointed.

Khettry claimed to be a secured creditor in respect of the jute which lay in the godown. His dues were about Rs. 38,500. The dues of other creditors amount in all to about Rs. 53,000 and out of this amount something over Rs. 25,000 represents the dues of traders in jute dealing with Sarada.

The question was investigated by the learned District Judge and upon a consideration of the evidence, he came to the conclusion that the jute was in the possession, order and disposition of Sarada by the consent or permission of Khettry and in such circumstances that Sarada was the reputed owner.

The evidence has been placed before us, and, so far as this finding goes, we see no reason to differ from that arrived at by the learned Judge.

Although the other creditors impugned the bona fides of the agreement with Khettry in their petitions, their Pleader in the lower Court stated that his clients recognised that the agreement, Exhibit A, was executed in good faith, with the intention that it should be given effect to but that it was not acted upon.

Khettry's case was that Rajani, the Sircar in the jute godown, was his agent, that there was a Darwan also who acted for him and kept the key of the godown for him, and that the Pay of Rajani and the Darwan was to be paid by Sarada and deducted from the amount due to Khettry. There is, however, nothing to show that it was deducted from the amount due to Khettry.

It is admitted that the Darwan had no badge and there was nothing to show that the Darwan was the servant of Khettry.

On behalf of the other creditors, a large number of witnesses have been examined and they say that Rajani was the Sircar of Sarada and that they were not aware that Rajani was the Sircar of Khettry. Most of the witnesses were, no doubt, interested as creditors; but at least three of them had only a very small amount, a few rupees, due to them and the learned Judge before whom the witnesses were examined believed their evidence which showed that Sarada was in control of the buying, selling and of delivery of the jute and upon a consideration of the entire evidence the Court below came to the conclusion that the jute was in the possession, order and disposition of Sarada by the consent or permission of Khettry and in such circumstances that Sarada was the reputed owner.

We need not discuss the evidence in detail, because we must set aside the judgment of the lower Court upon a construction of section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. We may state that this point was taken almost at the conclusion of the argument before us.

Now, section 28, clause (2) lays down: "On the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a Receiver as hereinafter provided, and shall become divisible among the creditors, and thereafter, except as provided by this Act, no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under this Act shall during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, or commence any suit or other legal proceeding, except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose."

Section 28 clause (3) says: "For the purposes of sub-section (2) all goods being, at the date of the presentation of the petition on which the order is made, in the possession, order or disposition of the insolvent in his trade or business, by the consent and permission of the true owner, under such circumstances that he is the reputed owner thereof, shall be deemed to be the property of the insolvent."

Then, section 28 clause (6) provides: "Nothing in this section shall affect the power of any secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed."

Under section 2 (1) (e) of the Act a "secured creditor" means "a person holding a mortgage, charge or lien on the property of the debtor or any part thereof as a security for a debt due to him from the debtor."

It is true that a mortgagee has been held to be the true owner and where he allows the mortgagor to be in possession of the goods mortgaged, the principle of reputed ownership has been applied, see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume II, 177, where it is stated that if the goods have been mortgaged, the mortgagee is the true owner, and if the mortgagee allows the mortgagor to continue in possession of the goods until his bankruptcy, the goods pass to the trustee.

The question is whether this principle is applicable to the case having regard to the provisions of section 28, clause (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The English Bankruptcy Act (4 & 5 Geo. V, Ch. 59) section 7 (1) lays down: "On the making of a receiving order an Official Receiver shall be thereby constituted Receiver of the property of the debtor, and thereafter, except as directed by this Act, no creditor to whom the debtor is indebted in respect of any debt provable in bankruptcy shall have any remedy against the property or person of the debtor in respect of the debt, or shall commence any action or other legal proceedings, unless with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose."

Clause (2) says: "But this section shall not affect the power of any secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed."

It may be pointed out that section 7 of the English Bankruptcy Act corresponds to section 17 of the Presidency Town Insolvency Act. The reputed ownership clause is contained in section 38, clause (c), of the English Bankruptcy Act and section 52; clause (2)(c), of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The difference between the English Bankruptcy Act on the one hand and the Provincial Insolvency Act on the other upon this point is that in the former there is only a receiving order. It is true that, under sub-section (2) of section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, such receiving order shall not affect the powers of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security; but an order of adjudication is not the same as a receiving order. Under sub-section (2) of section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the whole of the property of the insolvent vests, in the Court or in a Receiver, that is to say, under the Provincial Insolvency Act, it starts with the adjudication order and sub-section (6) of the same section lays down that nothing in the section "shall affect the power of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security, in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed."

It is contended that sub-section 28 (6) merely gives the powers to proceed against the property of the insolvent in or out of Court, as distinguished from the rights of ordinary creditors who cease to have any right to proceed against the property of the insolvent in or out of Court.

If, however, a secured creditor can proceed to realize his security or deal with it in the same manner as he would have been entitled to do had section 28 not been passed, we do not see how the reputed ownership clause in sub-section (3) of section 28 can have any operation.

It may be pointed out that the amount due to Khettry exceeds the value of the jute in the godown which has been taken charge of by the Receiver. Therefore, there can be no question of having a surplus in favour of the general body of creditors after satisfying the debts of the secured creditor (Khettry). It may be said that this interpretation of the section would be against the spirit and object of the reputed ownership clause in sub-section (3) of section 28, but having regard to the express terms of clause (6) of the section, we are bound to give effect to the provisions of that sub-section and we are constrained to hold that the order of the lower Court must be set aside and the appeal allowed. We direct that each party do bear his own costs in both Courts.

We direct that the Government Promissory-notes of the face-value of Rs. 25,000 (Rupees twenty-five thousand) deposited by the appellant as security in this Court be returned to the appellant.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption which was dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that the vendee was a co-sharer of the vendors from before the date of the sale sought to be pre-empted, and that the plaintiffs had no preferential right of purchase. The sale in question was effected by defendants

MAHABIR PANDE v. MATHURA PRASAD.

Nos. 2 to 8 in favour of Mathura Prasad on the 16th July 1919. It comprised a one-third share out of certain superior proprietary rights in Mahal Tikra of the village Kundhana Khurd. One of the vendors, Jagpat Singh, had, prior to that sale, conveyed by gift 7 biswas out of plot No. 199 khassra, forming part of the same mahal, to Mathura Prasad on the 15th July 1919. That deed was registered along with the sale-deed on the 17th July 1919.

The plaintiffs had admittedly no share or interest in Mahal Tikra. They are under-proprietors in another mahal in the same village, and claim to be entitled to pre-emption by reason of their being members of the village community. Their claim was resisted by the vendee on the ground that he was a co-sharer in Mahal Tikra. The deed of gift above-mentioned was filed by him in support of his alleged pre-existing title. The plaintiffs denied that any such gift had been made. The Trial Judge, however, found that the execution of the deed of gift had been proved, and that the mutation of names had been effected on its basis. The land comprised in the deed of gift is said to have been granted to Mathura Prasad for the purpose of planting a grove, but no grove has yet been planted. The learned Judge, however, finds that the deed of gift had been acted upon, that the vendee had obtained possession and mutation of names on its basis.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs, that they had no opportunity of establishing that the deed of gift was a fictitious and fraudulent transaction, because no issue was directed on that point. The issue framed by the Trial Court, namely, whether the defendant-vendee had a preferential right of pre-emption against the plaintiffs was, however, sufficient to cover the matter in controversy, and the plaintiffs had an ample opportunity of controverting the gift relied on by the vendee and showing that it was a fraudulent and fictitious transaction. It is also urged on their behalf, that the deed of gift was invalid because it was granted by one of the members of a joint family without the consent of the other male members. The family evidently comprised three male members including the donor. One of them, Raj Hans Singh, filed a written statement wherein he admitted the title of the defendant-vendee as a co-sharer in Mahal Tikra to a preferential right of purchase as against the plaintiffs. The remaining male member, Sheo Shanker Singh, is the son of the donor. He did not appear to contest the sale or the gift. The inference, therefore, is that they have no objection to the sale or gift, and as the said deed of gift has been found to have been acted upon, and was followed by the mutation of names in favour of the donee, it is not open to the plaintiffs to question its validity. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), the Law of the Mitakshara recognises that the joint family property can be made the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener with the consent, express or implied, of the other co-parceners. By the sale now sought to be pre-empted, to which all the male members of the family were parties, such rights as the family possessed in the property sold were conveyed to Mathura Prasad: and it was stated that the family had no interest left therein.

If the members of the family never sought to repudiate the deed of gift, it can afford a good basis of title to the person in whose favour the gift was made and the gift cannot be regarded as void or voidable. In Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council regarded a sale effected by a member of a joint Hindu family as not necessarily void, but only voidable, if an objection was taken to it by the other members of the joint family. The decision in Lachhman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (3) does not apply, because the mortgage in that case became void on its having been challenged by the other members of the family who were no parties to it. On the same principle, where a sale effected by one member of a joint family is set aside at the instance of another member, because the whole of its consideration was not taken for family necessity, no mesne profits were awarded inasmuch as the sale in such a case is not void ab initio but becomes void from the date when it is avoided and such amount as was taken for legal necessity is re-paid. A reference has also been made to the decision in Raghubar Pande v. Gokul Prasad Patak (4) and Gajodhar Bakhsh v. Gauri Shankar (5). But the question for consideration in the former case was whether certain members of a joint Hindu family could be made to re-pay the consideration which had been paid by a vendee for the sale of an interest in the joint family property effected by certain other members: and in the latter, all that was laid down was, that when a mortgage was effected by certain members of the family and repudiated by others and no family necessity was proved, it became void as against them from its very inception.

In any case, the view taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2), which has been followed by this Court in Ram Bhajan Lal v. Chhote (6) and Shambhu v. Nand Kumar (7), governs the decision in the present case, and the other members of the family must be deemed to have consented to what was done by Jagpat Singh, when they followed the deed of gift and the sale-deed to be registered together at one and the same place.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 19-H, proceedings under—Costs, award of.

A Court has no power to award costs in a proceeding under section 19-H. of the Court-Fees Act for ascertaining the valuation of properties in respect of which Letters of Administration have been granted. There is no provision for the realisation of any costs which may be incurred in connection with such an enquiry. [p. 473, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rule against an order of the District Judge, Faridpore.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Chaudhury (with him Babus Dinesh Chandra Ray, Phanindra Lal Moitra and Bansori Lal Sarkar), for the Petitioners:—The testator, Kisor Lal Sarkar, died on 22nd December 1914. The application for Probate was made on 15th March 1922. One of the sons objected to the inclusion of a house at Deoghar which was subsequently given up. Then there was an enquiry by the Collector under section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act. The Collector required additional Court-fees to be deposited. On moving the District Judge the amount was reduced. The Court-Fees Act is a complete Act in itself. The Court below has awarded costs. There is no provision for costs in the Act. Refers to section 35, Civil Procedure Code. The provisions of the Code do not apply. Refers to section 27, Land Acquisition Act: In the goods of James Raley Augustus Stevenson (1).

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakrabarty (with him Babu Surendra Nath Guha), for the Secretary of State:—The enquiry was a part of the proceedings under the Probate and Administration Act. Refers to section 55 of the Probate and Administration Act.

[CUMING, J.—Look at section 99 of the Act.]

But enquiry has to be held in case of further valuation. The Collector will call upon the parties to pay costs. The Collector has power to award costs.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ray Chaudhury, in reply:—The Collector may only recover costs as part of the land revenue. He cannot execute the decree for costs as he was no party to the proceedings.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of a reference under section 19 of the Court-Fees Act, 1870.

It appears that, after Letters of Administration had been granted to the petitioner, a question arose as to the valuation of the properties in respect of which they were granted. The Collector made a valuation, which was not accepted by the petitioner. The Collector thereupon moved the District Judge to hold an inquiry into the true value of the properties under sub-section (4) of section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act. The District Judge modified the Collector's valuation, and directed the petitioner to pay Rs. 191 annas 6 pies 6 as costs of the inquiry into the question of valuation.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the Court had no power to award costs in a proceeding under section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act.

There does not appear to be any provision in the Act for awarding costs in such a proceeding. Section 19-J provides that any excess fee found to be payable on an inquiry held under section 19-H, sub-section (6) may be recovered from the executor or administrator as if it were an arrear of land revenue by any Collector in any part of British India. There is no provision for the realisation of any costs which may be incurred in connection with an inquiry under section 19-H, and this indicates that the Act does not contemplate the awarding of costs in such a proceeding. Only the excess fee is to be realised as an arrear of land revenue under the Statute. The costs cannot be so recovered as there is no provision for it and we do not see how the Collector, who is no party to the Probate proceeding, can recover the costs from the executor or administrator as an ordinary suitor, in the absence of any provision to that effect in the Statute.

Reliance is placed on behalf of the opposite party on section 53 of the Probate and Administration Act which lays down that the District Judge shall have the like powers and authority in relation to the granting of Probate and Letters of Administration and all matters connected therewith as are by law vested in him in relation to any civil suit or proceeding depending in his Court. But the granting of Probate is not affected by the valuation proceedings under section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act, as section 19-I, sub-section (2), lays down that the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration shall not be delayed by reason of any motion made by the Collector under section 19-H, sub-section (4).

It is contended, however, that the words "and all matters connected therewith" include proceedings under section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act. We do not think that they do. We think that those words have reference to matters such as the revocation of Probate, the production of accounts, and similar other matters. A proceeding under section 19-H merely decides a revenue dispute between the Collector and the holder of Probate.

We are of opinion that the Court has no power to award costs in a proceeding under section 19-H of the Court-Fees Act. The order of the Court below is accordingly set aside and the Rule is made absolute.

We make no order as to costs.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Saugor, dated the 2nd August 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 71 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant had a decree final for sale of immoveable property. The last application for execution was filed on the 1st September 1920, and the question whether it is within time depends on whether or not the last previous application, made on the 18th February 1918, was an application for execution in accordance with law within the meaning of clause 5 of Art. 182 of the Limitation Schedule. The application was for Form C to be sent to the Collector for sale of the property mortgaged and no inventory of the property was needed as the decree showed what property was to be proceeded against. Nevertheless, the Court passed the following order on the 21st February 1918:—"Decree-holder No. 2 in person. There is no inventory of the property at the foot of the application in accordance with order and is rejected as such with costs on applicant."

2. The decree-holder acquiesced in this order, that is to say, he did not appeal against it. In dealing with the present application for execution the Executing Court held that the application of February 1918 was not in accordance with law and dismissed the execution application as time-barred. The District Judge held that the application of 1918 was in accordance with law and directed the execution to be proceeded with. Neither Court adverted to the effect of the Munsif's order quoted above. The learned Counsel for the appellant, the judgment-debtor, concedes that the application of 1918 was according to law and that the Munsif's order was wrong, but he contends that as the Munsif rejected the application as not being in accordance with law, his decision is final and cannot be re-opened.

3. This is not a case where the application was returned for amendment, but was not re-presented. There is a conflict of authority as to whether or not in such cases there was a decision that the application was not in accordance with law. The facts here are quite different; the application was definitely rejected as not being in accordance with law. That is to say, it was rejected under r. 17 (1) of O. XXI which provides that "the Court shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of rules 11 to 14 as may be applicable to the case have been complied with; and if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application, or may allow the defect to be remedied then and there or within a time to be fixed by it."

4. Sub-rule (2) provides that where an application is amended under the provisions of sub-rule 1, it shall be deemed to have been an application in accordance with law. It seems to follow that if an application is rejected under sub-rule (1) it is rejected because it is not "in accordance with law" which are also the words used in Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Schedule. Therefore, the Munsif rejected the application because he decided that the application was not "in accordance with law." No doubt, the order of rejection was a wrong one; the application fell under sub-rule (2) (j) (ii) of r. 11, of O. XXI, being for the sale of property, without attachment, and rule 13 prescribing a description of the property applies only where there is an application for attachment. Still less does rule 12, which prescribes an "inventory" of moveable property to be attached, apply. Nevertheless, the Munsif had jurisdiction to decide that the application was not according to law, and we have to see whether his decision can be re-considered now.

5. In Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that though orders in execution proceedings do not come directly within the language of what is now section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, yet such orders, if not appealed from, are binding on the parties in subsequent proceedings on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so called. In UMAPATI SAMANTA v. SHEIKH MOSEETULLA.

Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (2) their Lordships held that when a competent Court had decided, even though wrongly, that an execution application was not time-barred, that order could not be questioned in subsequent execution proceedings. In Joyanuddin Khan v. Jamiruddin Sarkar (3) it was held that when an application had been rejected on the ground that it was not in accordance with the decree the application could not be regarded as one in accordance with law and one that would save limitation. In arriving at the conclusion that a rejection means that the application was not in accordance with law the same arguments were used as I have employed in paragraph 4 above.

6. Finally, it must be considered whether the question is affected by the fact that the order of the Munsif was passed against the decree-holder without any notice having been issued to the judgment-debtor. In the case dealt with in Vyapuri Koundan v. Chidambara Mudaliar (4) the Court without issuing notice to the judgment-debtor directed the decree-holder to amend his execution application by reducing the amount claimed, and the decree-holder did not appeal against the order or amend his petition which was accordingly rejected. It was held that the decree-holder was debarred from claiming the larger amount in a fresh execution application and it was observed that the fact that the defendants were not called on to appear and answer the plaintiff's claim was immaterial, and the bar of former adjudication cannot be avoided by a party who had the opportunity of pleading his case and of appealing.

7. For all these reasons, I am of opinion that the order of the Munsif that the application of the 18th February 1918 was not in accordance with law must be regarded as final. I set aside the order of the District Judge and restore the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 18th April 1921, dismissing the execution application as time-barred.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4 (3)—Guardian of minor—Consent, whether essential—Invalid appointment of guardian—Decree against minor, whether void or voidable.

No person can be appointed a guardian ad litem of an infant without his consent.

When a guardian has not been validly appointed in respect of a minor defendant, he is not a party to the suit and is not bound by the decree made against him. The decree is void and not merely voidable. [p. 476, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Bankura, dated the 29th of January 1920, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Bishenupur, dated the 26th February 1918.

Babu Peary Mohun Chatterjee, for Appellants:—I beg to submit that the guardian did not file her consent, she did not show any willingness to act as a guardian. Refers to Narsing Narain v. Jahi Mistry (1) and Krishna Chandra Mandal v. Jogendra Narain Roy (2). She was appointed guardian after arguments were heard. So the judgment and the decree of the Court below will have to be modified. The plaintiff cannot be entitled to a decree as regards the share which belonged to the three infants.

Babu Rishindranath Sarkar, for the Respondents:—The decree cannot be void but is voidable at the instance of the minors in a separate suit: Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (3). The presumption is that guardian was properly appointed. There was no affidavit, no application to show that the guardian did not give her consent. The plaintiff did all that he could for the appointment of the guardian. The presumption as to proper appointment of guardian is in my favour unless it is rebutted.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—She could not be appointed guardian unless she gave her consent.]

According to Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (3) the appointment must be presumed to have been properly made unless the contrary is proved. There is nothing in the record to show that the appointment was not properly made. The decree can be set aside by the minors but not at the instance of a third party.

Babu P. M. Chatterjee, replied briefly and cited Surendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (4).

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for recovery of possession of land on declaration of title. The property belonged admittedly to one Sobban who had mortgaged it to the plaintiff. The plaintiff instituted a suit on the 1st August 1913 to enforce his security. The parties, defendants to that suit, were the representatives of the mortgagor who had died meanwhile. These representatives were his widow, his eldest son who was sui juris and three infant sons. The mother of the infants was apparently proposed for appointment as a guardian ad litem and we shall assume for our present purpose that the requisite notice was duly served upon her. There is no evidence to show that she entered appearance and accepted the guardianship. At the trial the suit was defended by the eldest son alone and there was no appearance on behalf of the widow either for self or as guardian of her infant sons. The trial was concluded, the arguments were heard and the judgment was reserved. Thereafter, an order was recorded in the order-sheet to the effect that the widow be appointed guardian ad litem of her infant sons. The suit was then decreed on contest against the eldest son and ex parte against the other defendants. This decree was made on the 25th February 1914. The decree was executed and at the sale which followed the plaintiff became the purchaser. In the interval the appellant had purchased the property from the representatives of the mortgagor on the 4th November 1913 and they resisted the plaintiff when he proceeded to take possession. This is the genesis of the present suit. The Court of first instance decreed the suit and that decree has been affirmed by the District Judge. On the present appeal it has been contended that the decree cannot be maintained beyond 11-32nd share and that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree in respect of 21-32nd share which belonged to the three infants. In our opinion this contention is well-founded.

It is now firmly established that no person can be appointed a guardian ad litem of an infant without his consent. In the present case, the mother of the infants was appointed without her consent. She never entered appearance and it is consequently needless to consider what the position would have been if she had defended the suit on behalf of the minors without a formal order for appointment. In the events which have happened, it is plain that the infants were not represented at all and they were in no sense parties to that litigation. Consequently, they were not affected by the mortgage-decree. This view is in accord with the rule enunciated in Narsing Narain v. Jahi Mistry (1) and Krishna Chandra Mandal v. Jogendra Narain Roy, (2) and Surendra Nath Bose v. Aghore Nath Bose (4).

We have been pressed to hold, however, that the decree against the infant was not void but voidable, and that only at the instance of the infants themselves. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar Deari (5). But that case cannot be treated as good law in view of the later decision of the Judicial Committee in Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (6), namely, that when a guardian has not been validly appointed in respect of a minor, he is not a party to the suit and is not bound by the decree made against him. This view is in no way inconsistent with the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Waliam v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (7), Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (3). In Waliam v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (7) the person who acted as guardian ad litem was not formally appointed, but he was recognised as guardian ad litem by the Court. In these circumstances, the Judicial Committee held that after such recognition and such representation of the interest of the infant, it was too late to dispute his appointment. In Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (3) objection was taken on the ground that there was no affidavit filed before the guardian was appointed. It was ruled that the absence of the affidavit did not invalidate the appointment of the guardian. The case before us, however, is of an entirely different description. Here the record of the mortgage-suit makes it abundantly clear that the infants were really no parties to the suit and are not bound by the decree made therein.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part. The decree made in favour of the plaintiff will be restricted to 11-32nd share of the property which represents the interest of the widow and the eldest son of the mortgagor. Each party will pay his own costs throughout the litigation.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48 (1) (b), O. XX, r. 11, O. XXIII, r. 4—Execution of decree, application of—Compromise—Decree made payable by instalments—Dismissal of execution application—Dismissal order, whether one "directing payment of money"—Limitation, whether extended.

The provisions contained in O. XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code are, by virtue of r. 4 of the Order, inapplicable to any proceeding in execution of a decree or order [p. 478, col. 1.]

To render the provision contained in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to a case there must be an order directing the payment of money on a certain date. Such an order can only be passed under O. XX, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 478, col. 1.]

Before any order can be passed under O. XX, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, the application on which it is made must be within time. [p. 478, col. 2.]

Jholi Sahu v. Bhubun Gir, 11 C. 143; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 854 and Perumal Naicker v. Davood Rowther, 34 Ind. Cas. 393, referred to.

In execution of a decree the parties filed a compromise whereby the decretal amount was to be paid by instalments and on default in payment of a certain number of instalments the decree-holder was to be at liberty to execute the decree for the full decretal amount. The Executing Court thereupon dismissed the execution proceedings, but did not embody the terms of the compromise in its order.

Held, that the order made by the Court did not amount to a subsequent order directing payment of money at a certain date within the meaning of section 48 (1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to extend the period laid down by the section after which a decree cannot be executed. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 21st April 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Ferozepore, dated the 18th November 1919.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Razaq, for Mr. Zafurulla Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th of March 1906 one Banarsi Das obtained a decree against Ramzan, etc., for Rs. 796-14-3 and costs. On the 7th of August 1907, Banarsi Das proceeded to execute this decree and applied to the Court for the attachment and sale of certain lands belonging to the judgment-debtors. Notice was issued to them and on the 28th of August 1907 they asked for and obtained time in order to come to a settlement.

On the 18th of November 1907 a compromise was filed in Court by the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors according to which it was agreed that the decretal sum should be paid in half-yearly instalments of Rs. 50, the first payment to be made in Hari 1965. It was also provided that, in the event of there being a default in four payments, the whole sum would be recoverable at once.

The parties' statements were recorded and the following order passed:—

"In accordance with the compromise the proceedings be filed as unsatisfied, as the decree-holder says; that he will now act on the new contract."

BANARSI DAS v. RAMZAN.

On the 29th of May 1912 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree alleging that there had been default in the payment of four instalments which gave him the right to recover the whole amount at once. Before notice was issued the Court, on the 5th of July 1912, passed an order to the effect that the application was within time having regard to the instalments agreed on as well as having regard to the decree itself. It was also held that the decree-holder was bound by the terms of the compromise and that default had not then been made of the necessary four instalments. The proceedings were finally filed on the 25th of July 1912.

On the 10th of February 1919 the decree-holder filed the present application for execution which the Courts below have held to be barred by limitation as having been made more than 12 years from the date of the decree, i.e., 20th March 1906. Against this decision Banarsi Das has come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Fakir Chand and I have heard Mr. Abdul Razaq for the judgment-debtors-respondents. The amount alleged to be due was Rs. 468-14-3.

For the appellant it has been urged that the order of the Court, dated 18th November 1907, amounted to a subsequent order "directing payment of the decretal amount on certain dates in accordance with the compromise that had been sanctioned and that such an order was covered by section 48 (b), Civil Procedure Code. It was also contended that a compromise was not barred by O. XXIII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code. In the latter contention I am unable to agree, as O. XXIII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to section 375 (a) of the Code of 1882, is explicit in its terms and specially declares O. XXIII to be inapplicable to any proceedings in execution of a decree or order.

It remains to be seen how far the order of the 18th November 1907 can be regarded as extending the period of limitation. Section 48 of the present Code is similar in terms to section 230, paragraphs 3 and 4 of the Code of 1882. To render section 48 (b) applicable, there must be an order directing the payment of money on a certain date and such an order could in this case have only been passed under section 210 of the old Code. It has been urged that although the order passed on the 18th November, 1907, is not explicit in its terms, nevertheless it should be regarded as one having been made under section 210. Mr. Fakir Chand referred to Kedar Nath Banerjee v. Kulman Sardar (1), in which it was laid down that in construing pleadings, judgments and decrees in this country, the most liberal construction must always be accepted. With this dictum I have no quarrel, but it seems to me that before any order could be passed under section 210 (new O. XX, r. 11) the application on which such an order is made must be within time. It is true that in Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir (2), very liberal construction was placed on an order under section 210 and that ruling was cited with approval in Perumal Naicker v. Davood Rowther (3). It was, however, pointed out in the later ruling that the learned Judges responsible for Jhoti Sahu v. Bhubun Gir (2) had apparently lost sight of the provisions of Article 175 of the Limitation Act. While I would be quite prepared to give the widest possible construction to the order in this case, (dated 18th November 1907), it seems to me that it cannot be regarded as an order passed under section 210, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as the Court on that date had no jurisdiction to pass an order under that section more than six months having elapsed from the date of decree.

It was next contended by Mr. Fakir Chand that, inasmuch as the compromise had been acted on, the judgment-debtors were estopped from denying their liability, and reliance was placed on Bunwari Lal v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (4). That decision, however, does not appear to me to afford the appellant any assistance, for it appears that the agreement in that case was accepted by the Court and embodied in the decree, although from the report of the case all the facts are not ascertainable. I am, therefore, unable to hold that by the filing of this compromise the time for execution of the decree was in any way extended.

Finally, it was argued that the order passed in 1912 referred to above must be regarded as res judicata although it was passed ex parte, and in support of this contention my attention was drawn to Periakaruppan Chetty v. Chidambara Tambiran (5). Doubtless there are instances where an ex parte order may operate as res judicata, but I am unable to see that in 1912 any order was passed which can be regarded as extending the time. All that that order, as I read it, amounts to is that the parties are bound by the compromise arrived at, and it is not denied by the judgment-debtors-respondents, that they are not bound by the terms of the settlement of the 18th November 1907.

It seems to me that the question is really concluded by a decision of this Court reported as Nanak Chand v. Anant Ram (6). As pointed out by the learned District Judge the facts in that case and in the present one, are almost identical and following that decision I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 11—Appeal against decree for possession in favour of several persons—Death of one of several respondents—Representative not brought on record within time—Appeal, whether entertainable.

Where an Appellate Court is called upon to set aside a decree for possession of land in favour of several persons one of whom has died and his representative-in-interest has not been brought on the record within the time allowed by law, the appeal is infructuous and cannot be entertained inasmuch as even if the appeal were to succeed, the representative-in-interest of the deceased respondent would not be bound by the judgment of the Appellate Court and would be at liberty to execute the decree in its entirety as one of several joint decree-holders.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakraburty (with him Babus Brojo Lal Chakraburty, Krishnakamal Moitra and Narendra Kumar Bose), for the Respondents:—I have a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. The appeal is infructuous inasmuch as plaintiff No. 4 who died in 1920 has not been substituted. They obtained a Rule which was discharged. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will remain in favour of the representatives of the dead plaintiff. See Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1).

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta (with him Babu Probodh Kumar Das), for the Appellants:—The appeal will proceed inasmuch as the plaintiffs are jointly entitled to the property. Hence decree is not separable.

SECOND APPEAL NO. 2670 OF 1917.

This appeal is directed against a decree for possession and mesne profits, made in the following terms: "The plaintiffs will recover their possession of 2 annas 17 gunidas 2 kara 1 kranti share in the Mehal with mesne profits and interest at 6 per cent from which their share of the purchase price of Rs. 1,366-9-16-2-2 will be deducted. The plaintiffs will also be entitled to recover their costs throughout from defendant No. 1 with interest at 6 per cent, except the costs incurred in the Court of first instance."

WALLI V. KHUDA BAKHSH.

In this appeal, which has been preferred by the first defendant, the respondents are the plaintiffs. One of these plaintiffs, Taran Krishna Bhomik, died on the 4th January 1920 during the pendency of the appeal. No steps were taken to set aside the abatement within the time allowed by law; and in answer to a Rule obtained to amend the record, it was pointed out by the respondents that the Rule had been granted on a petition which contained statements substantially untrue. The Rule was thereupon discharged. The position is, that we are now called upon to set aside a decree for possession which enured to the benefit of four persons, one of these persons is dead and his representative-in-interest has not been brought on the record. In these circumstances, it is impossible for us to hear the appeal against the decision of the District Judge. Even if the appeal were to succeed, the representative-in-interest of the deceased plaintiff would not be bound by our judgment and would be at liberty to execute the decree in its entirety as one of several joint decree-holders. The appeal has consequently become infructuous. This view accords with that adopted in the case of Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (1) which follows a long line of decisions in this Court. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. The cross-objection is not pressed and is, therefore, dismissed.

SECOND APPEAL NO. 790 OF 1918.

This judgment, it is conceded, will govern the other appeal Second Appeal No. 790 of 1918 which is also dismissed with costs.

Defendant, a Government tenant, agreed, for consideration received, to pay to plaintiff half the produce of certain land and in default to pay a sum of money annually. Defendant having made default plaintiff sued to recover the amount payable under the agreement:

Held, (1) that the agreement did not transfer any of the tenancy rights of the defendant to the plaintiff, nor could it be said to create a charge thereon, and that, therefore, it did not offend against the provisions of section 19 of the Colonisation of Government Lands (Punjab) Act; [p. 481, col. 2.]

(2) that the agreement did not create any rights in the future produce of the land in the plaintiff and, therefore, did not require registration under section 17 of the Registration Act; [p. 481, col. 2.]

(3) that the suit was not one for the recovery of interest but for compensation for the breach of the agreement to pay a share of produce and fell within the purview of Article 115 and not Article 63 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 481, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 19th June 1919, reversing that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 12th April 1919.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and M. A. Ghani, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal by Wali and his two brothers, the sons of Jalal, from the order of the District Judge, of Shahpur, decreeing plaintiff-respondent's claim for Rs. 1,400. Jalal was a Government tenant under Act III of 1893 and it appears that Khuda Bakhsh, respondent, advanced him various sums of money in order to enable him to comply with the terms of his tenancy. The tenancy was what is called a horse-breeding one, and Jalal had to keep a mare for the purposes of breeding. On the 9th of March 1906 Jalal executed two documents in favour of Khuda Bakhsh (P-3 and P-4). Exhibit P-3 was a bond in which he admitted that he owed Khuda Bakhsh Rs. 798-11-0 and promised to pay the same to him on demand without interest. Exhibit P-4 was an agreement by Jalal in favour of Khuda Bakhsh in which he stated that he owed him Rs. 798-11-0 for which he had given him a bond. He went on to say that he would pay Khuda Bakhsh half the produce of the square which was in his name in Chak No. 98. If he made default in giving the produce, Khuda Bakhsh would be entitled to realise the sum of Rs. 798-11-0 together with Rs. 200 on account of munafa annually. So long as Jalal paid the batai, Khuda Bakhsh was not to be entitled to realize the principal sum due. Jalal is said to have complied with the terms of the agreement and to have paid Rs. 200 annually to Khuda Bakhsh. After his death, the tenancy was entered in the name of Wali as appears from the agreement P-5. On 6th March 1912 Wali executed the two deeds, P-5 and P-6, in favour of Khuda Bakhsh. P-6 was a bond in which the executant acknowledged the debt of Rs. 798-11-0 due from his father but it contained no promise regarding payment. P-5 is an agreement which refers to the previous agreement of 1906 executed by Jalal and goes on to say at the end:—"Now, upon the death of my father, Jalal, the square has been entered in my name. Therefore, I am executing a new agreement according to previous conditions and I promise that I shall accept and agree to the former conditions which my father agreed to." In this deed it is stated in the preamble that one of the conditions which his father agreed to was that if he failed to pay half share of the produce yearly, he would pay Rs. 400. The first Court found that the deeds were duly executed but that the plaintiff's suit was barred by time. The lower Appellate Court held that the suit was not barred by time and that it was really one for interest and was governed by Art. 63 of the Limitation Act. It also held that the agreement sued upon was not in contravention of section 19 of Punjab Act V of 1912, and that it did not require registration. On these findings the suit was decreed.

WALI V. KHUDA BAKHSH.

The first point taken in appeal is, that the agreement is contrary to the provisions of section 19 of Punjab Act V of 1912, and is, therefore, void. In our opinion the decision of the lower Courts on this point is correct. It cannot, we consider, be said that under the agreement either of 1906 or of 1912, the tenant transferred or charged any of the rights or interests vested in him under the Government Tenants Act, 1893. All that the executant of either of these agreements did was to agree, for consideration received, to pay to Khuda Bakhsh half of the produce of certain lands and if he failed to pay the produce to pay a sum of money annually. Neither agreement transfers any of the tenancy rights to Khuda Bakhsh nor can it be said to create a charge thereon.

The next point urged was, that the registration of the agreement is compulsory as it created or declared rights in immovable property of the value of more than Rs. 100. Here, again, we agree with the lower Courts that registration was not compulsory. The agreement does not create any rights in the future produce in favour of Khuda Bakhsh. All that it does is to promise to pay a share of the crops or a certain sum of money.

The point of limitation was only raised by appellants' Counsel to this extent that he urged that the suit was governed by Art. 115 and not by Art. 63 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. It cannot be said that the suit is one for interest. The agreement did not provide for the payment of interest at all. The suit is clearly one for compensation for the breach of the agreement to pay a share of produce and falls within the purview of Art. 115 and the limitation is three years. Plaintiff can, therefore, recover three years arrears of the sum promised to be paid.

It was next urged that the terms of the agreement executed by Wali in 1912 are unconscionable and that Khuda Bakhsh being a Lambardar exercised undue influence in order to make him execute it. Now, undue influence was never pleaded. It is quite clear that under the deeds of 1906 Khuda Bakhsh had a good cause of action against the estate of Jalal and this was a sufficient consideration for Wali to execute a fresh agreement. It is clear, however, from a perusal of P-5 that Wali agreed to the same conditions as his father had agreed to. Now, his father agreed to pay half the produce or Rs. 200 a year, whereas in the preamble of P-5 it is recited that Jalal had agreed to pay Rs. 400 a year if he failed to pay a share of the produce. This was a mis-statement of fact which has not been considered by either of the lower Courts. We, therefore, hold that while Wali executed the agreement (P-5) he only agreed to be bound by the same conditions as his father, one of which was to pay Rs. 200 a year if he did not pay the share of the produce. Khuda Bakhsh is, therefore, entitled to receive from him Rs. 200 yearly and not Rs. 400 as claimed.

The next point is, whether Wali's brothers Malli and Gullu are liable. In our opinion they are not liable. The agreement (P-5) shows that Wali was entered in the records as tenant in place of his father and it is quite clear that Wali executed the agreement on his own behalf alone and not on behalf of either of his brothers. The decree against Malli and Gullu must, therefore, be set aside as a whole. The plaintiff is entitled to recover from Wali Rs. 600 in lieu of three years' share of produce and from this sum has to be deducted Rs. 65 annually on account of Gangwal land less Rs. 15-12-0 land revenue. Wali is, therefore, entitled to a net reduction of Rs. 49-4-0 annually from the Rs. 200 due by him.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff as against Malli and Gullu in toto and reduce the decree against Wali to one for Rs. 452-4-0. Plaintiff has made an extravagant claim and has also, it appears, acted fraudulently in getting Rs. 400 per annum instead of Rs. 200 entered in the agreement (P-5). We are, therefore, not prepared to allow him any costs and we direct that the parties bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 8, 13, O. XVII, r. 3—Dismissal for default—Appeal—Procedure—Jurisdiction, want of—Objection whether can be taken by way of appeal.

Where after striking issues in a suit the Court passed the order, "The plaintiffs are absent. The suit is dismissed with costs."

Held, that the order was one under O. IX, r. 8 and not under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Prativadi Bhayankaram Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramula, 43 Ind. Cas. 566; 41 M. 286; 34 M. L. J. 24; 23 M. L. T. 1; (1918) M. W. N. 92 (F. B.), referred to.

An order under O. IX, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code can be displaced only by an order under O. IX, r. 13, or by a successful appeal from an order under the latter rule.

Gilkinson v. Subramania Ayyar, 22 M. 221; 8 M. L. J. 287; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 158 and Parbati v. Torisi Kapri, 20 Ind. Cas. 1; 18 C. L. J. 128; 18 C. W. N. 604, relied upon.

It is the practice of the Madras High Court to allow an objection to be taken to an order on the ground of want of jurisdiction by way of appeal.

Appeal against an order, dated the 9th July, 1921, of the Court of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, at Mayavaram, in Appeal Suit No. 108 of 1920 (A. S. No 569 of 1920 of the District Court, Tanjore) preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 296 of 1918.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Sankara Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the District Munsif, after framing issues, ended his judgment, "The plaintiffs are absent. The suit is dismissed with costs." The respondents, plaintiffs before us then brought a regular appeal against the dismissal by the District Munsif. The Subordinate Judge dealt with this as a regular appeal, allowed it and remanded the case for fresh disposal after taking any evidence which might be adduced by both sides. That order is objected to here as without jurisdiction in the supplementary grounds of appeal which have been filed before us. It is, we believe, the practice in this Court to allow an objection to be taken to an order on the ground of want of jurisdiction by way of appeal. In any event, in the present case we should be ready to treat the appeal as a petition for revision and use our revisional powers.

The objection to the lower Appellate Court's disposal of the matter as an appeal is that the dismissal by the District Munsif was, we must hold with reference to the wording of his order, under O. IX, r. 8; and could, therefore, be displaced only by the District Munsif under O. IX, r. 13, or a successful appeal from an order under that provision. This is in accordance with Gilkinson v. Subramania Ayyar (1), no doubt a decision under the former Code, and also with Parbati v. Toolsi Kapri (2) a decision under the Code now in force. We respectfully follow these decisions.

The argument of the plaintiffs-respondents before us is only that the dismissal was really under O. XVII, r. 3. It does not appear to us in view of the wording of the District Munsif's judgment to have been so; and there is nothing before us on which we can find that there were facts to bring what happened within O. XVII rather than O. IX. In any case, the decision in Prativadi Bhayankaram Pichamma v. Kamiseti Sreeramulu (3) is clear that it was open to the District Munsif in case of default, and we must consider this as a case of default by the plaintiffs, even after the first hearing, to apply the provisions of O. IX. Taking this view we allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decision of the District Munsif with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Property misdescribed in plaint—Court, power of, to correct.

Where through an accidental mistake the property in a suit is misdescribed in the plaint, and the misdescription is carried forward in the decree and dakhlanama, the Court has jurisdiction under section 152, Civil Procedure Code, to correct the mistake.

Civil revision from an order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 7th October 1922.

FACTS.—One Musammatt Kausalia Kunwar, a Hindu widow, in possession of the property of her husband, Likha Singh, in certain villages, having died, there was a dispute regarding the inheritance among Likha Singh's reversioners. The defendants having succeeded in having their names mutated in the Revenue Courts, the plaintiffs sued them for recovery of their share, and succeeded in getting a decree. In the plaint, however, through error the property was described to be situated in Mahal Likha Singh instead of Mahal Kausalia Kunwar which was the description given in revenue papers. The same description of the property found place in the decree and the dakhlanama. At the time of mutation of plaintiff's names, the Revenue Court objected to the entry being made until the property was correctly described in the Civil Court decree. Thereupon the plaintiffs applied to the Civil Court under section 152, Civil Procedure Code, for the necessary correction being made in the plaint decree and dakhlanama, and filed an affidavit explaining that the mistake was committed owing to wrong information and to the fact that the property originally belonged to Likha Singh. The Court below rejected the application with the remark that "the applicant has not produced any papers in support of the application nor has satisfied if there is any law justifying the amendment of the plaint at this stage. File." Hence the Civil Revision.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—It is very unfortunate that the learned Judge did not appreciate the substance and importance of the application which was made to him. There has been an unfortunate error—for our purpose it does not matter very much—in the paper record of the case owing to a misdescription of a certain locality in the plaint. That error, unless corrected after discovery, must necessarily be carried forward into the decree and either injuriously affect the rights of the plaintiff or misrepresent the true state of facts. In either case a Court, when that condition of things is present, has jurisdiction under section 152 of the Code to correct it. The application was a perfectly proper one made under the right section and describing in paragraph 5 the nature of the accident which had led to the misdescription. It was supported by the affidavit of one Surjan Singh, the plaintiff himself. There was no possible legal objection which could be raised to the application. Unfortunately, the learned Judge has decided:

(1) that the applicant had not produced any paper before the Court, whereas he had produced a very important paper, namely, his affidavit;

(2) that he had not satisfied the learned Judge that there was any law justifying the amendment of the plaint.

Section 152 is the widest possible law justifying the amendment of any particular proceedings due to mistake of this kind. The matter must go back to the learned Judge with directions to correct the plaint in accordance with the application of the plaintiff and, after notice to the other side, to correct the decree and, unless anything has happened between the plaintiff and the decree to affect his judgment on the substance of the dispute, the decree must follow the corrected plaint.

Pre-emption—Pre-emptor, whether bound by personal covenant between vendor and vendee.

A pre-emptor stands in the shoes of the vendee and is bound by all the conditions and obligations by which the vendee is bound, but these conditions and obligations must be found in the deed of sale and cannot be looked for in any subsequent document (though entered into immediately after the execution of the sale-deed) which does not create any interest in the land sold.

A pre-emptor is not, therefore, bound by a personal agreement to re-convey, entered into by the vendee in favour of the vendor after the execution of the sale-deed.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 23rd November 1921, affirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 3rd March 1921.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 29th January 1913 one Ali Bakhsh sold certain lands to Allah Dad for Rs. 650 and executed a deed of sale which was duly registered.

On the same day an agreement was executed by Allah Dad in favour of Ali Bakhsh under which he undertook to re-convey the said lands to Ali Bakhsh if he repaid him the sum of Rs. 650 within a period of 10 years. This document was drawn up on an eight-annas stamped paper but was not registered.

One Ghulam Muhammad brought a suit for possession of the lands so sold claiming to be entitled to pre-empt and was granted a decree.

On the 7th February 1920 Ali Bakhsh brought a suit against Ghulam Muhammad and Allah Dad asking for a decree for specific performance of the agreement to re-convey entered into by the original vendee, Allah Dad, urging that it was binding on the pre-emptor, Ghulam Muhammad.

The Trial Court held that the agreement was entirely separate from the sale and did not in any way affect it, and that it was not binding on Ghulam Muhammad being a personal covenant affecting Ali

HURNANDRAI FULCHAND v. PRAGDAS BUDHSEN.

Bakhsh alone. It also held that the document was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that the bona fides of the transactions was doubtful. The plaintiffs' suit was, therefore, dismissed and he appealed to the District Court.

The learned District Judge, without going into the question of the admissibility or otherwise of the said agreement, held that the pre-emptor was only bound by the liabilities and obligations created by the deed of sale and upheld the decree of the Trial Court.

Ali Bakhsh has now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Ghulam Rasul. It seems to me that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct. The sale of the land was an out and out one as evidenced by the deed. No doubt the pre-emptor stands in the shoes of the vendee and is bound by all the conditions and obligations by which the vendee is bound. It seems to me, however, that these conditions and obligations must be found in the deed of sale and cannot be looked for in any subsequent document which does not create any interest in the lands sold.

In the present case it is admitted that the agreement does not create any right, title or interest in the land and is purely a personal covenant. It is on this ground that immunity from registration is claimed for the document.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul, however, contended that it was the intention of the vendor and vendee to create a mortgage by conditional sale, but that as that was illegal and prohibited by the law in the Punjab, this device was entered into. If I am to be guided by the intention, then it seems to me that I am bound by the finding of the learned District Judge on the question and he has held that the parties intended and effected a sale.

In any event, I am of opinion that the sale was a complete transaction in itself and that any subsequent agreement (though entered into immediately after the execution of the sale-deed) cannot be read into the conveyance so as to vary its terms and in fact conditions or obligations which would be binding on the pre-emptor. In this view I am supported to some extent by the decision of a Division Bench of this Court reported in Muhammad Mir v. Faizul Hassan (1), as also by Gurunath Balaji Mutalik v. Yamanappa Nalarao (2). I consider the agreement in this case only created a covenant personal to the vendee, Allah Dad, and quite separate from the sale transaction itself, and was, therefore not binding on Ghulam Muhammad. I accordingly dismiss this appeal, but as no one has appeared for the respondents. I make no order as to costs.

Construction of document—Contract for sale of goods—Breach—Frustration of contract—Business bargain, interpretation of.

Where an agreement for the sale of future goods, to be manufactured at and obtained from named Mills, provides that "the same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the Mills," these words cannot be construed as if they were "the same are to be taken delivery of, if and when the same may be received from the Mills," for that is to convert words, which fix the quantities and times for deliveries by instalments, into a condition precedent to the obligation to deliver at all and virtually to make a new contract. [p. 486, col. 2.]

If a contract is for the sale of a fixed quantity of goods, to be manufactured and obtained from named Mills, and less than that quantity is delivered within the time fixed, the sellers must either find in the contract some matter of excuse or discharge or they must pay damages. If sellers fail to perform the contract, because the Mills execute an order placed with them by the Government in preference to the one by the sellers, it does not amount to a discharge or frustration of the contract. [p. 485, col. 2.]

HURNANDRAI FULCHAND V. PRAGDAS BUDHSEN.

To interpret a business bargain, expressed in the language of commerce, it is no doubt important to appreciate the methods and the point of view of business-men, but this is merely a prudent way of qualifying the mind to construe their words, and so to determine their meaning, and is a very different thing from postulating that reasonable men would have been likely to agree to one kind of liability and not to another, and from thus concluding that, whatever the words of the contract say, that kind of liability, and that alone, is the obligation of the contract. JUDGMENT.—Though there is some difference between the various texts of the agreement, on which this action was brought, there is no doubt as to its substantial terms. It is an agreement for the sale of future goods, to be manufactured at and obtained from named Mills. It provides for the quantity and descriptions of these goods, for the prices at which the different descriptions are sold, and for the time and rate of the delivery. To some minor and independent provisions and to the fact that some of the words are interlineated, no importance attaches. The agreement is simple and of a common type, and the whole question in dispute is, whether it is an absolute contract to deliver the whole of the goods mentioned, or whether the sellers are relieved from their obligation to deliver a part of them in the events which happened.

In the text adopted by the Courts below the provision as to delivery, after the words which complete the description of the goods, viz., "goods under manufacture are sold," runs as follows: "the same are to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the Mills. Delivery is to be caused to be given in full by the 31st December in the year 1918." An endeavour was made in argument to treat these words as a further part of the description of the subject-matter of the contract, so as to confine the goods to such as might be received from the Mills during the remainder of the year 1918. In their Lordships' opinion this attempt failed. The goods to be manufactured are already very elaborately described and the goods which are to be delivered are the 864 bales so described. It was also suggested that the words "as and when same may be received from the Mills" should be construed, as if they were "if and when the same may be received from the Mills." This is to convert words which fix the quantities and times for deliveries by instalments into a condition precedent to the obligation to deliver at all, and virtually makes a new contract. The words certainly regulate the manner of performance, but they do not reduce the fixed quantity sold to a mere maximum, or limit the sale to such goods, not exceeding 864 bales, as the Mills might deliver to the defendants during the remainder of the year.

If the contract is for a fixed quantity and, as was the case, less than that quantity was delivered within the time fixed, the sellers must either find in the contract some matter of excuse or discharge, or they must pay damages.

The High Court of Bombay found this excuse in the fact that the Mills failed to perform their contract to manufacture and deliver the goods to the respondents in the circumstances of the case. As a matter of fact, the Mills remained in existence and at work, and the looms which could otherwise have manufactured goods deliverable under this contract were fully occupied in making goods for the Government of India. The utmost that the evidence on this point amounts to is to be found in the following evidence given by a witness from the Mills:—

"I know of contracts with the defendants up to March 1918, delivery was up to date. After that Government contract work began, and defendant's dhoties were not proceeded with. The Mills were commandeered by Government. I had no personal knowledge of what took place between the agents and Government."

No evidence was given of the powers of Government to require their contract work to take precedence of other contract work, nor do the judgments of the High Court allude to the existence of such powers. No evidence was given that the Mills were requisitioned. It is clear that the Government did not take possession of them and, in spite of the use of the word "commandeered," it is the plain result of the evidence that the Government placed an order with the Mills for goods to be manufactured, and it was executed in preference to the order of the defendants. Whether the manufacturers' motives were patriotic or commercial does not matter. It was not suggested that there would be anything illegal in the receipt of these goods by the defendants, if they could have got them, or in the delivery of them over to the plaintiffs. Accordingly, having failed to perform their bargain the respondents must pay damages.

The High Court of Bombay appear to have been guided by considerations which seem to their Lordships to have been mistaken. They interpreted the contract by asking themselves what it was likely that a reasonable business-man would have bound himself to do; they thought that there had been what is called "frustration of the contract;" and they held that the case fell within the principle of Taylor v. Caldwell (1) and that a condition of things had failed to subsist at the time of performance, which had been mutually contemplated by the parties and finally agreed to be essential to the obligation of the seller to deliver.

On the first point the learned Judges, no doubt by inadvertence, expressed a different proposition from that which they must have had in mind. To interpret a business bargain, expressed in the language of commerce, it is no doubt important to appreciate the methods and the point of view of business-men, but this is merely a prudent way of qualifying the mind to construe their words, and so to determine their meaning, and is a very different thing from postulating that reasonable men would have been likely to agree to one kind of liability and not to another, and from thus concluding that, whatever the words of the contract say, that kind of liability, that alone, is the obligation of the contract. As a matter of fact, there is nothing surprising in a merchant's binding himself to procure certain goods at all events. It is a matter of price and of market expectations. No doubt, it is a speculation, but many dealings even in cotton goods are of that character.

(1) (1863) 3 B. & S. 826; 32 L. J. Q. B. 164; 8 L. T. 356; 11 W. R. 726; 27 J. P. 710; 122 E. R. 309; 29 R. R. 573.

As to the doctrine of "frustration," the High Court of Bombay had not the advantage, at the time, when the appeal was heard before them, of several discussions and decisions which have taken place in England since then in the House of Lords as well as in the Court of Appeal. The adventure, of which the commercial purpose is suggested to have been frustrated, is, of course, the purchase and sale of these goods between the parties to this contract, and this adventure was not frustrated. All that happened was, that the defendants failed to perform their contract. When they have paid the damages, one commercial purpose at any rate will, so far from being frustrated, have been fulfilled. Their Lordships think it unnecessary to enlarge upon the recent authorities.

The Mills from which the goods were to come, no doubt were contemplated as continuing to exist, though it does not follow that, in a bargain and sale such as this, the closing or even the destruction of the Mills would affect a contract between third parties, which is in terms absolute; but the Mills did continue to exist and did continue to manufacture the goods in question, only they were made for and delivered to somebody else. This is completely outside the principle of Taylor v. Caldwell (1) (supra) or of the Coronation cases [Krell v. Henry (2)], Civil Service Co-operative Society v. General Steam Navigation Company (3).

The parties having failed to agree on the damages, the case must be remitted to the Court of the Trial Judge to assess them and to increase the amount adjudged to the plaintiffs accordingly, the appeal being allowed with costs here and below, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A petition of insolvency presented more than three months after the date of the act of insolvency on which it is grounded is incompetent under section 6 (4) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. Neither section 5 nor section 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable to a petition presented under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. [p. 489, col. 1.]

Section 78 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 has not the effect of empowering the Court to extend the period of limitation in respect of a petition presented under the Act of 1907 more than three months after the date of the act of insolvency on which it is grounded. [p. 490, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—The provision contained in section 6 (4) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 is quite independent of the Limitation Act and is absolute. [p. 489, col. 2.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The intention of the Law of Limitation is not to give a right where there is none, but to interpose a bar after a certain period to a suit to enforce an existing right. [p. 491, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Godaveri, at Rajahmundry, in Insolvency Petition No. 37 of 1919.

Mr. T. S. Raghunatha Row, for the Appellant.—An insolvency petition was presented by a creditor to the Court of District Munsif of Razole. That Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. It was thereafter presented to the District Court which had jurisdiction but by that time it was more than three months from the commission of the act of insolvency. At the time the petition was presented, Act III of 1907 was in force.

Neither section 5 nor section 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable to such a case. See Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinna-rayana (1). Section 78 of the new Act (Act V of 1920) does not govern the case, as the new Act had not come into force at the time of the presentation of the petition. See Mohender Prosad Singh v. Nand Prosad Singh (2) and Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3).

Where the right to put in a petition under the old Act is barred, the right cannot be revived. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act applies. See Arayil Kali Amma v. Pelappakkara Manakal Sankaran Nambudripad (4) and Tirumalaisami v. Naidu Subramaniam Chittiar (5). Even if section 5 is held to be applicable where proceedings are prosecuted in a wrong Court, it is not sufficient ground for excusing the delay. See Trasi Deva Rao v. Paramesh-raya (6).

Mr. G. Lakshmanna, for the Respondents.—Section 78 of the new Act (Act V of 1920) applies. Where the period of limitation expired prior to the passing of the new Act and there were no proceedings concluding the rights of the parties, the provisions contained in the new Act can be availed of.

If the Court to which petition was originally presented had insolvency jurisdiction but not of a specific character, any order passed by such a Court could not be said to have been made without jurisdiction. It was only an order made in excess of jurisdiction.

Section 5 of the Limitation Act applies. There was good cause for excusing the delay in this case and the District Judge was right in entertaining the petition. The application to excuse delay was filed on 21st February 1921 after the new Act had come into force and a fresh insolvency

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This is an appeal against an order of adjudication under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The insolvency petition, from which originated the District Judge's proceedings, was one presented by a creditor under section 6 (4) of Act III of 1907.

It was first presented on June 28th, 1919, to the District Munsif of Razole who had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Having been returned by that Court on September 22nd, 1919, it was re-presented to the District Court on October 1st, 1919, which had jurisdiction under section 3. One of the pre-requisites for the valid presentation of a creditor's petition is that contained in sub-clause (c) to clause (4) of section 6, namely, that the act of insolvency which forms the ground of the application should have occurred within three months of the date of presentation of the petition. The act of insolvency put forward in this case as the basis of the petition was a transaction of sale of the debtor's property on March 31st, 1919, alleged to have been made with the intent of defeating his creditors. The Razole District Munsif had been invested under section 3 of the Act with jurisdiction only over debtors' insolvency petitions. When this creditor's petition was presented to a Court having jurisdiction, more than three months had elapsed since the commission of the act of insolvency upon which the petition was grounded. Thus the petition was liable to be rejected as out of order. But the District Judge, on a petition to excuse delay being presented on February 21st, 1921, acted under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and, holding that there was "sufficient cause" for the petition not being presented earlier, excused the delay and proceeded to enquire into the merits of the case. In Kopparthi Lingayya v. Praveeti Chinnarayana (1), a Full Bench of this Court laid down that the general provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, which include section 5, were not applicable to petitions under the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907).

After the pronouncement, however, a new Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) was passed and came into force on February 25th, 1920, the old Act being simultaneously repealed.

The new Act contained a new provision (section 78) which runs thus:—

"The provisions of sections 5 and 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to appeals and applications under this Act, and for the purpose of the said section 12, a decision under section 4 shall be deemed to be a decree."

The question of law to be decided now is, whether the District Judge acted legally in excusing the delay upon sufficient cause being shown and admitting a petition which at the date of its presentation failed to comply with one of the conditions of a legal presentation under the Act in force at the time when it was presented.

I hold for two reasons that he had no power to excuse the delay.

In the first place, section 6, clause (4) of Act III of 1907, which was applicable on the date (October 1st, 1919) when the insolvency petition was presented, makes the occurrence of an act of insolvency within three months of the date of presentation one of three conditions precedent to a lawful presentation.

If any of these conditions are unfulfilled, the petition is an incompetent one.

The English Bankruptcy Act of 1914 contains a similar provision in section 4 re-produced from the Bankruptcy Acts of 1883 and 1890.

"A creditor shall not be entitled to present a bankruptcy petition against a debtor unless

(a) * * * *

(b) * * * *

(c) The act of bankruptcy on which the petition is grounded has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition."

This provision appears to be quite independent of the Statute of Limitations in both countries and to be absolute. This view can be held consistently with what was said in Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinnarayana (1). I was one of the Referring Judges in that case, and the first thing we had to decide was, whether the appeal to the High Court was in time. This depended on the questions (1) whether the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the District Judge's order could be excluded under section 12 of the Limitation Act, and (2) if not, whether we had power under section 5 to excuse the delay.

The difficulty caused by the last date for the presentation of the creditor's application to the District Court having fallen on a date when that Court was closed for the vacation could have been overcome by the application of section 10 of the General Clauses Act, if the District Judge had not been of opinion that a question of limitation was involved.

Whether the District Judge's opinion was right or wrong did not require consideration till it was decided whether the appeal was in time.

When the amendment of the Provincial Insolvency Act was under the consideration of the Legislative Council, this High Court drew the attention of Government to the Full Bench decision in Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinnarayana (1), and I feel no doubt that it was in order to meet the doubts and difficulties that had been experienced in admitting appeals against orders of Insolvency Courts that the Legislature in passing the new Insolvency Act of 1920 introduced section 78 which made section 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act applicable to appeals and applications while omitting other general provisions of the Limitation Act such as sections 4 and 14.

Secondly, assuming for the purpose of argument that section 5 purports to provide a period of limitation for the presentation of insolvency petitions, and that the sections in the body of the Limitation Act which deal with the computation of periods of limitation can be invoked for extending a period of this kind, under the law prevailing when this petition was presented the District Judge had no power to apply section 5, as the Full Bench had declared it to be inapplicable to petitions and appeals under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The introduction of Act V of 1920 with its new section 78 did not alter the law prevailing at the date of the presentation of the petition which alone governed the question of its admissibility. The law in force when the District Judge passed his order has no bearing on this question, for section 6 of the General Clauses Act prevents the repeal of the previous Act having the effect of reviving a petition that had become barred before the later Act came into force, or affecting the rights and liabilities of creditors and debtors under the earlier Act. Section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, which is the appropriate section for excluding time spent in prosecuting another proceeding in a Court which had no jurisdiction to entertain it has not been made applicable to insolvency petitions either by the Act of 1920, or previously. Consequently, the act of presenting a petition by a creditor to a District Munsif's Court which had no jurisdiction was a nullity and had no effect on the subsequent proceedings in a competent Court.

The proviso in clause (2) of section 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, even if read with section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, cannot be of any avail to the petitioner, as the jurisdiction there referred to is local jurisdiction, not inherent jurisdiction.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed with costs in this Court and the Court below to be paid to appellant by first respondent, and the adjudication is annulled, and the petition dismissed.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I am also, of the opinion that the order of the District Judge adjudicating the first respondent an insolvent must be set aside.

The act of insolvency relied on occurred on the 31st March 1919, and the insolvency petition was presented on the 1st October 1919: that is, after the lapse of three months from the occurrence of the act of insolvency on which the petition was grounded. The Provincial Insolvency Act in force on the date of the presentation of the petition was Act III of 1907. It is not disputed that under that Act the creditor had no right to present the petition. It was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Kopparthi Lingayya v. Araveti Chinnarayana (1) that in dealing with the admission of petitions and appeals presented after the time prescribed under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, recourse should not be had to the general provisions of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908.

The District Judge, however, purported to act under section 78 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920 which repeated the previous Insolvency Act and excusing the delay in the presentation of the petition held that the creditor's right subsisted and passed an order of adjudication. The District Judge made the order on the 26th April 1921, that is, on a date subsequently to the coming into force of Act V of 1920.

Section 78 referred to, enacts inter alia that the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to appeals and applications under the Act (Act V of 1920). There is no corresponding section in the repealed Act, and as pointed out above this Court held that the general provisions of the Limitation Act of 1908 were inapplicable to applications and appeals presented under the old Provincial Insolvency Act. Section 5 of the Limitation Act is one of such general provisions. Under section 5 the Court may extend the period of limitation on sufficient cause being shown for not making the application within the period allowed by law.

Was the District Judge right in acting under section 78 of the new Act? The application to excuse delay was filed on the 21st February 1921, and it was suggested that a fresh insolvency petition should be deemed to have been filed on that date, that is, after the new Act had come into force. Whether the District Judge purported to make an order excusing the delay in the course of an insolvency petition presented under the old Act or on a petition presented under the new Act, the action of the District Judge seems to be equally unjustifiable. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, Act X of 1897, clearly provides that when any Act of the Governor-General in Council repeals any enactment, the repeal shall not revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect or affect any right or privilege acquired under any enactment so repealed. The right of the creditor became barred under the Act of 1907, and section 78 of the new Act cannot be invoked for the purpose of reviving a right which had become barred. The right acquired by the debtor to have no insolvency petition against him grounded on the act of insolvency referred to above, cannot be affected by section 78.

In Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mohunt Mothurmohun Goswami (7) their Lordships of the

(7) 20 I A. 183 at p. 192; 21 C. 8; 17 Ind. Jur. 481; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 334; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 638 (P. C.)

Judicial Committee observe at page 192: "The intention of the Law of Limitation is, not to give a right where there is not one, but to interpose a bar after a certain period to a suit to enforce an existing right." See also Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3).

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the order of the District Judge adjudicating the first respondent an insolvent cannot be supported.

In this view, it is unnecessary to decide the other question whether the provision that the presentation of a petition is not valid unless the act of insolvency has occurred within three months before it, is a rule of limitation or independent of the Statute of Limitations. The question is a difficult one, and I do not propose to express an opinion upon it.

In the result, I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Custom or contract.
A wajib-ul-arz, prima facie, is to be construed as embodying a record of custom, but this presumption must give way if the language of the document itself indicates that the record is not one of custom but of contract.

The introduction to a wajib-ul-arz contained the following recital, "The agreement between us proprietors and Lambardars is that so long as this Settlement lasts the following conditions shall be binding on us"

Held, that whatever usages were recorded in the wajib-ul-arz were recorded as usages of contract and not of custom. [p. 492, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 21st of August 1922.

Mr. Kailas Chandra Mital, for the Appellant.

FOUJDAR SINGH v. BAIJU MAHTON.

JUDGMENT.—These three second appeals arise out of three suits for pre-emption brought in respect of three separate transfers. The first question before the Courts below was, whether or not a custom of pre-emption existed in the villages in which the property is situate. Both the Courts below have found that no such custom is proved to exist and consequently the suits of the plaintiff have been dismissed.

It has been argued before us that the decision of the Courts below on the question of the existence of custom is erroneous and we have been referred by the learned Counsel to a Full Bench ruling reported in Returaji Dubain v. Pahalwan Bhagat (1). The full wajib-ul-arz was before the Court of first instance and the learned Munsif has quoted from the preamble of this wajib-ul-arz the following words:—

“The agreement between us proprietors and Lambardar is that so long as this Settlement lasts the following conditions shall be binding on us.”

It may be conceded that, in view of the Full Bench ruling just referred to, a wajib-ul-arz, prima facie, is to be construed as embodying a record of custom, but it is quite clear that this presumption must give way if the language of the document itself indicates that the record is not one of custom but of contract. While it may be the case that the word “iqrar” which is often interpreted “agreement” is an ambiguous word we have in the present case to take notice of the words “so long as this Settlement lasts the following conditions shall be binding on us.” These words appear to us clearly to indicate that whatever usages were recorded in this document were recorded as usages of contract and not of custom. We think the first Court was justified in relying on the case of Asa Ram v. Kanhaya (2), where the introduction to the wajib-ul-arz was couched in similar language. We can find nothing in the Full Bench ruling above referred to which contradicts anything which is set out in the judgment at Volume VII of the Allahabad Law Journal Reports page 365 [Asa Ram v. Kanhaya (2)].

We think, therefore, that both the Courts below were justified in holding that this wajib-ul-arz, which was an important document in the case, did not prove the existence of the custom of pre-emption. The plaintiff might, of course, have produced evidence to show that a custom really did exist notwithstanding what is set out in the wajib-ul-arz but both the Courts are agreed that the evidence of the two witnesses whom he put forward was of no value at all. This being so, we hold that the decision of the Court below in all three cases is correct. We dismiss these appeals under O. XII, r. 11.

After the expiry of an ijara lease the ijaradar was allowed to continue in possession of the land and to receive the produce in lieu of interest payable on the zar-i-peshgi. On being dispossessed from the land, the ijaradar brought a suit to recover the zar-i-peshgi.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Patna, dated the 19th January 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, Barh, dated the 29th April 1920.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for the recovery of money advanced on an Ijara lease executed by defendants Nos. 2 to 15 and their predecessors on the 3rd of May 1901, in favour of the plaintiffs' father by which 4 bighas 17 kathas of land was leased at an annual rental of 12 annas for a term of seven years from 1309 to 1315 with a proviso that in the event of non-payment of the zar-i-peshgi the settlement would stand until 1317. In 1319 the lessors sold their interest to defendant No. 1. In 1320, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324 and 1325 the plaintiffs demanded payment from the purchaser but the purchaser had no money and allowed the plaintiffs to hold over the kasht land from year to year, and, in lieu of the interest on the debt, told the plaintiffs to retain possession of the lease-hold property. In 1326 the plaintiffs were dispossessed and, therefore, brought this suit claiming first a mortgage-decree; second, alternatively, a decree for money and, thirdly, in the alternative possession of the land.

The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation that the Ijara lease became null and void at the end of Jeth 1317 and that the zar-i-peshgi (money) had been paid.

The Munsif found that the plea of payment was false, that the plaintiffs' allegation of possession and dispossession was proved, and that the debtors asked the plaintiffs to hold over till re-payment and that the suit was not barred by limitation because the enjoyment of the usufruct of the land was appropriation of interest on money due and time would only run from the date when the payment of interest ceased; that is, Jeth 1326. He also held that the lease was a lease only and not a mortgage and, therefore, passed a decree for money. The Subordinate Judge on appeal agreed with these findings. On the question of limitation he held that on the findings of fact Art. 116 of the Limitation Act had no application, that the terms of the lease were changed by subsequent oral agreement and that the parties must be held to be bound by the new contract. He also held that the plaintiffs were getting the usufruct of the land in lieu of interest and applied section 20(2) of the Limitation Act. He further held that, even on the construction of the lease itself, the plaintiffs had no right to sue until they were dispossessed.

The contention on behalf of the defendants, who are the appellants, is that this is a lease and not a mortgage and that, therefore, section 20(2) of the Limitation Act has no application; that the usufruct of the land is not payment of interest within the meaning of section 20; that if there was a new contract, it was a lease from year to year and required to be made by a registered instrument and on the true construction of the lease the cause of action arose in 1317 and the suit is barred by six years' limitation.

I shall deal first with the construction of the lease. After reciting that the lease expires at the end of Jeth 1315, but if the zar-i-peshgi is not paid it is to continue until 1317, that is, for nine years, the instrument proceeds as follows:—"The term of this deed shall after nine years totally cease to continue and we shall enter upon seer possession and occupation of the kasht land; and if even till then we fail to pay the zar-i-peshgi or if the lessee be dispossessed from the lease-hold property on any account whatsoever, the lessee shall be at liberty without waiting for the expiry of the term to institute a suit in the Civil Court and to recover the zar-i-peshgi with damages on account of loss of produce from the date of dispossession to the date of realization of the money with costs." Now, it seems to me that on the language of the deed the appellant is right in his contention that the lease absolutely determined in 1317 and if the suit was on the original contract it ought to have been brought within six years from that date. It is true that the language is not altogether accurate. Two contingencies are set forth: (1) if payment is not made by 1317; (2) if the lessee is dispossessed from the property. The result is stated in a comprehensive clause giving the lessee liberty, without waiting for the expiry of the term to institute a suit and to recover the zar-i-peshgi with damages on account of loss of produce from the date of dispossession to the date of realization. Part of this language is only applicable to the second contingency; but this inconsistency does not, in my opinion, modify the express stipulation that the lease determined in 1317.

But the Courts below have both found that there was a new contract each year, the plaintiffs demanded their money from defendant No. 1 and each year they were asked to remain in possession in lieu of interest. This possession continued till 1326. This is not a lease from year to year requiring registration, and the only question is whether the usufruct of the land received in this way is equivalent to the payment of interest. The learned Vakil for the appellants contends that so to hold is to make section 20(2) of the Act unnecessary and that the express provision, that in the case of a mortgagee in possession the receipt of the produce shall be deemed to be a payment for the purposes of sub-section (1), leads by necessary implication to the inference that such receipts are not such payments in other cases. He relies on Krishnaji Sakharani v. Kashim Mohiddin-saheb (1). In that case, however, all that was held was that as the mortgage was only good as a mortgage for the term of the mortgagor's life, the possession of the mortgagee after his death was the possession of a trespasser and section 20(2) had no application. In the present case the plaintiffs were not trespassers after the term of the lease expired. They continued in possession at the request of defendant No. 1, who was unable to pay his debt. The other cases on which the learned Vakil relies are Pichandi v. Kandasami (2), Venka Babaji Naik v. Shidramapa Balapa Desai (3).

These were both cases of invalid mortgage. The first case simply decided that the plaintiff could not claim to have received profits of the mortgaged property nor to have received them as mortgages. In the second case it was argued that the Court ought to infer that the tenants paid the rent to the plaintiffs as interest on the bond. This argument was not overruled on the ground that the receipt of rent could not be treated as payment of interest, but on the ground that on the admissible evidence the inference could not be drawn. This case is really against the appellants. On the other hand, Kariyappa v. Rachapa (4), Ragho Shitaram v. Hari (5), Mylan v. Annavi Madan (6) are clear authorities in support of the view contended for by the respondents. In my opinion, limitation is saved in this case by the receipts of the produce of the land which the plaintiffs continued to occupy in lieu of interest at the request of the defendant No. 1 owing to his inability to pay his debt. There can be no ground in reason why the produce of the land should not be accepted in lieu of interest if the parties have so arranged. In this case this was the arrangement, as has been found by both the Courts.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Court-fees.*

Where property is in the custody of the Court a person who lays claim to it need do no more than sue for a declaration of his title to it and pay Court-fee accordingly.

A suit by the heir of a lunatic for a declaration that he is entitled to the property of the lunatic which is in the custody of the manager is a suit of this description and need bear a Court-fee requisite for a suit for declaration.

Administrator-General of Bengal v. Bhagaban Chandra Roy Chowdhuri, 10 Ind. Cas. 531; 15 C. W. N. 758, distinguished.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Arrah, dated the 27th April 1920.

FACTS.—Full facts appear from the following order of the Taxing Officer, dated the 19th August 1920:—

This is a Court-fee matter. It appears that in Shahabad there was a lunatic named Ram Nihora Panday in respect of whom the Collector applied for an inquisition under Act IV of 1912. Ram Nihora Panday was found to be a lunatic; but there was a dispute amongst his relations regarding the person who should be appointed manager of the property. Claims were put forward by Saburi Panday, Gayadin Panday and two persons named Ram Khelawan Panday one of whom was otherwise known as Rikhai Panday. The District Judge finally nominated a committee consisting of Ram Khelawan Panday, (not Rikhai), Saburi Panday and Deonath Panday, son of Gayadin, who continued to manage the lunatic's property until his death occurred in 1918. On July 18th, 1919, the District Judge directed the managers to make over the property to Rikhai Panday, the nearest relation of the deceased lunatic within one month. The managers objected to this pointing out that Rikhai Panday had already instituted a suit against them in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Arrah. It is from this suit that the present appeal arises. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in favour of Rikhai Panday; and the present appeal has been instituted on behalf of the defendants Saburi Panday and Gayadin Panday.

The appellants at first prayed that the District Judge might be directed to abstain from handing over possession to Rikhai Panday until the decision of the appeal. But on May 17th last, the District Judge directed the managers to make over the property of the deceased lunatic to the successful litigant, Rikhai Panday, who is accordingly now in possession.

The plaint bore a Court-fee stamp of ten Rupees and there is a similar stamp on the memorandum of appeal. Inter alia the plaintiff Rikhai Panday prayed that it might be declared that he was the heir of the deceased lunatic; and that he was entitled to obtain possession of all the lunatic's property. In the alternative he prayed that he might be declared entitled to joint possession with the defendants third party. The question of the sufficiency of the Court-fee stamp was raised by the Subordinate Judge's Sharistadar at a very early stage of the proceedings; but the learned Subordinate Judge found that as the property was in possession of trustees under the District Judge it was not necessary for the plaintiff to ask for anything more than a declaratory decree. He based his decision upon the ruling in the case of Administrator-General of Bengal v. Bhagaban Chandra Roy Chowdhuri (1) where the plaintiffs sought a declaration in respect of land which had been attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I think that a case more directly in point is that of Rani Kamal Mukhi Kuer v. Udit Narain Singh (First Appeal No. 102 of 1920). In that case the Court of Wards was in possession of the property in suit as stake-holder under section 13 of the Court of Wards Act. But in spite of this fact the learned Taxing Judge of this High Court, by his decision of January 14th, 1920, decided that the plaintiffs must pay ad valorem Court-fees, because in their plaint they prayed in the alternative that their suit might be treated as one for possession.

(1) 10 Ind. Cas. 531; 15 C. W. N. 758.

SABURI PANDE v. RAM KHELAWAN PANDE.

It does not appear to me that the present case differs in any essential from the ordinary title suit in which there is a dispute regarding succession to property, and the plaintiff prays for declaration of title and recovery of possession. It is true that the defendants, when the suit was actually instituted, enjoyed possession only in the capacity of trustee. But they also claimed the property in their private capacity; and Rikhai Panday could not obtain possession of it before his title was declared. It has been repeatedly held that a plaintiff cannot avoid liability to pay ad valorem Court-fee by attempting to put his consequential relief in a declaratory form. I think, therefore, that when the plaintiff asked that he might be declared entitled to possession he was liable to pay ad valorem Court-fee as if he had prayed for recovery of possession. This is the rule which was laid down in the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (2). The learned Vakil for the appellants argues that even if ad valorem Court-fee was properly payable on the plaint, he is himself appealing only from a declaratory decree; and until the plaint is amended he should not be required to pay ad valorem Court-fee. In this connection, it is to be noticed that the respondent Rikhai Panday has now obtained possession of the property in suit, and if the appellants should win their appeal they will certainly seek to dispossess him on the strength of the decree which they will obtain. The suit is clearly other than a purely declaratory suit; and ad valorem Court-fee was properly payable on the plaint. In any case, ad valorem Court-fee is properly payable on this memorandum of appeal.

It is to be noted that one of the grounds of appeal raises the question of whether on the plaint as it was originally framed, section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not a bar to the suit. If it should be decided that the suit is a purely declaratory suit, properly instituted, and that the plaint was sufficiently stamped the appellant will be able to obtain refund of any Court-fee paid in excess. On the other hand it is obvious that no orders can be passed by the Bench for the payment of ad valorem Court-fees on the plaint until the appeal is admitted; and the appeal cannot be admitted until it is properly stamped. Thus the payment of proper Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal must precede the exaction of deficit Court-fees on the plaint.

The value of the suit is eight thousand rupees and Court-fee payable is Rs. 395. The sum of ten rupees has been paid; and there is a deficit of Rs. 385 on the memorandum of appeal.

Mr. Parneswar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The only question raised in this appeal is whether the plaintiff has established the pedigree on which he relies. The plaintiff has examined himself in support of his case and also an old Purohit of the family 75 years of age. It is quite true that the plaintiff is not a very trustworthy person; and, if his evidence had not received corroboration, I would hesitate to accept it. But his evidence has received very strong corroboration from the evidence of the old Purohit of the family. The learned Subordinate Judge has accepted that evidence and I see no reason whatever to differ from him on this point. The appellants are after all the managers of the estate of the lunatics who are now dead. This case decides no issue as between the plaintiff and the defendants in their personal capacity. In my opinion the plaintiff has established his title to the property as against the defendants, who are the managers of the estate of the lunatics. I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

The office reports that there is a deficiency of Court-fee to the extent of Rs. 385 on the plaint filed by the respondents in the Court below. I am of opinion that the Court-fee of Rs. 10 was sufficient. The position is this. The property was in the custody of the Court and all that the plaintiff had to do was to establish his title to the property. Therefore, it was necessary for him to file a suit for declaration of his title to the property, but not for recovery of possession. In my opinion, the principle of the decision in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Bhagabun Chandra Roy Chowdhuri (1) applies to this case.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

This case first came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Ramesam and Mr.
Justice Odgers who delivered the followingJUDGMENT.*Ramesam, J.—These cases arise out of Sessions Case No. 11 of 1921 on the file of the Sessions Court of South Arcot. The appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 259 of 1921 is the first accused in it and was charged with the murder of one Ambalvana Padayachi by mixing a poisonous drug in the arrack intended to be drunk by him. The appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 260 of 1921 and another (third accused) were charged with abetment of the offence. The learned Sessions Judge convicted the appellants of the offences with which they were charged and sentenced them to be hanged. Hence these appeals.I may clear the ground by stating some facts which are beyond controversy.(1) The Sessions Judge finds, and I think it is amply proved, that the first accused purchased a tumbler of arrack in the arrack-shop of prosecution witness No. 2, and after mixing a substance containing corrosive sublimite or perchloride of mercury, gave the arrack to the deceased who drank it with fatal consequence. This conclusion rests on the evidence of prosecution witness
No. 2 and prosecution witness No. 3 and of that of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon (prosecution witness No. 1) and on the dying declaration, Exhibit C. It is not necessary to elaborate it further as it was not seriously attacked by the Vakils for the appellants.
It is also supported by the statement of the second accused before the Village Munsif (Exhibit D) which, though retracted before the Sessions Judge, is corroborated by the other evidence referred to above. The question—of what offence can the first accused be convicted?—will be dealt with later on.(2) A drug called 'Viram' in Tamil was purchased by the third accused from prosecution witness No. 7 a few days (3 or 4) before the occurrence. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon says that 'Viram' corresponds to perchloride of mercury. Its more proper indigenous name is Savutram and the following extract from page 845 of Dr. Maclean's

Manual, Volume III, Glossary, describes it from the point of view of its indigenous use "as sold in Bazaars is less crystalline and more dull and opaque than the salt in use in hospitals and occasionally contains a small quantity of subchloride or calomel. The following process for making it is taken from the Pōorna Sootram * * * Veidyans use this internally, in small and continued doses, alterative, stimulating the urinary, cutaneous and salivary secretions; in large doses powerful irritant poison; externally, stimulant and mildly caustic, remedy in secondary syphilis, etc., * * * Used generally by natives in too strong doses, which are sometimes, when the preparation is pure and active, attended with dangerous effects; causes severe ulceration of gums and cheeks resulting finally in permanent cartilaginous adhesions between the gums and cheeks. The mode of administering: Sev veeram according to Pōorna Sootram is as follows * * * The pure drug is deadly poison, $7\frac{1}{2}$ grains being a fatal dose (prosecution witness No. 1) and is apparently not used internally in allopathy."

I will now discuss the evidence bearing on the connection of the second accused with the death. According to the Sessions Judge (page 7), "the evidence against the second accused consists in (1) the statement made by the first accused to the Monigar of Nattamalai; (2) the presence in the second accused's house of the vegetable cutter, the pestle and the grinding stone on which were found traces of mercury, and (3) the evidence of the shopkeeper who says that second accused was present when the third accused purchased the drug."

I take each of these points in their order.

(a) The statement to the Monigar is Exhibit D. The question arises whether it can be taken into consideration under section 30 of the Evidence Act. It is the statement of a co-accused. Is it a confession within the meaning of that section? It is certainly an admission by the first accused that he administered the drug, but not a confession of the offence he was charged with. The learned Public Prosecutor contends that the admission of the physical act (apart from intent or knowledge) is enough to satisfy the requirements of section 30. This contention must be negatived as it is obviously untenable [see Queen-Empress v.

Jagrup (1)]. But still, the further question arises whether Exhibit D may be taken into consideration on the ground that it is not fully exculpatory. I think that Exhibit D, though not a confession of guilt of the offence of murder, is yet a confession of guilt of the lesser offence under section 328, Indian Penal Code. If so, does it satisfy the requirement of section 30? In my opinion, it does not, in view of the following decisions:—

In Queen v. Belat Ali (2) Phear, J., says: "before a confession of a person jointly tried with the prisoner can be taken into consideration against him, it must appear that that confession implicates the confessing person substantially to the same extent as it implicates the person against whom it is to be used in the commission of the offence for which the prisoners are being jointly tried."

In Queen v. Naga (3) the same learned Judge says: "this Court has already had occasion in more than one case to point out that confessions which are made use of under section 30 of the Evidence Act, in the first place, can only be so used; so far as they make the confessing prisoner guilty of the offence for which all are being tried."

In Empress of India v. Ganraj (4), Straight, J., says at page 446: "it seems to me that the test section 30 of the Evidence Act intended should be applied to a statement of one prisoner proposed to be used in evidence as against another, is to see whether it is sufficient by itself to justify the conviction of the person making it of the offence for which he is being jointly tried with the other person or persons against whom it is tendered". The underlined words were italicised by the learned Judge himself. According to these decisions the word "confession" in section 30 of the Act must be construed to mean "confession of the offence charged." I agree with this construction and I think Exhibit D cannot be considered against the second accused. I come to this conclusion apart from the fact that it is a retracted confession and requires strong corroboration.

(b) Exhibit A the certificate of the Chemical Examiner shows that grains of corrosive sublimate were found in the undrunk second draught of arrack poured into the same tumbler, and in the washings of the tumbler; but only tracing of mercury were found in the washings of the vegetable cutter (M. O. 2) the pestle (M. O. 3) and the sandal stone (M. O. 4) found in the house of the second accused. It is clear from this that the Chemical Examiner sought for corrosive sublimate and not merely for mercury and that, even from a washing or a solution of the corrosive sublimate, grains of it can be isolated. The only inference that can be drawn from the certificate is that mercury but not corrosive sublimate was found in the "scanty brownish incrustation" on the sandal stone, in the "brownish stain" on the pestle and in the "brownish stain" on the vegetable cutter. There is no evidence in the case that corrosive sublimate decomposes by mere keeping so that the metal mercury is precipitated and the chlorine escapes. On the other hand, the lump of Viram (M. O. 5) (vide prosecution witness No. 7) kept in the records of these proceedings shows that such is not the case. (See also Encyclopedia Britannica, XI Edition; Volume VI 'chlorine,' where it is said "it attacks mercury." (page 255). If so, it is impossible to infer from the tracings of mercury only on the material objects 2, 3 and 4, that the second accused had at any time in his possession any 'Viram' or corrosive sublimate especially as pure mercury is commonly used externally by Indians for various purposes. It is a case of want of such legal evidence as enables one to draw the adverse inference. In view of this conclusion, I do not dwell on the absence of the mention of a white powder on the sandal stone in the search list Exhibit H while the presence of the powder on the vegetable cutter and the pestle was mentioned in the search list, Exhibit G, prepared an hour and a half earlier. I will only say that Exhibit H is suspicious (being prepared in the absence of the Magistrate unlike Exhibit G) and ought not to be acted upon.

my shop." In cross-examination, he says "second accused was standing, 8 feet away when I sold the drug. He was standing in the koradu." The person who wanted to make a preparation was the third accused himself. The witness does not say that the second and third accused came together or returned together or that the second accused was standing as if he was waiting for the third accused or that the drug was handed over to the second accused after the purchase. In my opinion the bare statement that the second accused was standing near by is not legal evidence from which one can infer that the purchase was made for him.

Thus, it seems to me there is no legal evidence, or, in other words, evidence which can be put to an English Jury, on any of the three points, viz.—

(1) The purchase of the drug by or on behalf of the second accused.

(2) The possession by the second accused of a drug containing corrosive sublimate (as opposed to mere mercury).

(3) The second accused gave it to the first accused to administer it to the deceased.

The last point is most important. If there is credible evidence on the third point, the absence of evidence on the other two is immaterial and cannot affect the case for the prosecution. Conversely, the absence of evidence on the last point is fatal. Even if the other two points are proved against the second accused he cannot be convicted. Even if a person has corrosive sublimate in his possession, he cannot be convicted of the murder unless the drug administered can be traced to him; for, if it were otherwise, the third accused may be convicted with greater reason than the second, seeing that it is clearly proved in the case that the third accused purchased 'viram' and, therefore, had it in his possession at least for some time. Even this circumstance is wanting against the second accused. Cf. Kusir Bap v. Emperor (5), where the arsenic was actually found in the house of Kusir Bap.

The only other point that has to be noticed is a statement in the evidence of P. W. No. 8, the Police Sub-Inspector, in answer to the Court. "first accused said the substance was placed on the plank of the vegetable cutter and powdered and given to him (section 27) * * * The second accused said he had powdered the substance on the sandal grinding stone M. O. 4 first." If what was meant by the deposition is merely that the second accused said that there was a sandal stone in the house used for grinding substances, there is nothing in the statement to be used against second accused. I believe this is all the information given by the second accused (see also prosecution witness No. 13, page 24, lines 18-19). Probably this is all that the Sub-Inspector meant; but, if he meant more, i.e., that the second accused told them that the substance given to the first accused was first ground on the sandal stone and again on the vegetable cutter with the pestle, then I disbelieve the Sub-Inspector's statement; for it is most unlikely that the second accused would have made a confession. The statement was not relied on as a confession in the Court below and could not be used as such, for it was not recorded under the provisions of sections 164 and 364 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Any how, the Sub-Inspector is not supported by prosecution witness No. 13 who is a signatory to Exhibit H. It is significant that the Sub-Magistrate is not examined by the prosecution. If the statement is not relied on as a confession but merely as a piece of information that led to the discovery of the stone (section 27) the portion of the information which identifies the substance ground on the stone with that ground on the cutter and with the substances handed over to the second accused is inadmissible under section 27. All that then remains is that a substance was ground on the cutter, and a substance was ground on the sandal stone. This is useless against the second accused as the washings show merely tracings of mercury.

(5) 21 Ind. Cas. 378; 18 C. L. J. 590; 14 Cr. L. J. 586.

It is true I entertain suspicion against the second accused, but when I find that these are based on Exhibit C (the dying declaration of the deceased containing his opinion as to the cause of death and inadmissible in evidence on that point) and on Exhibit D, the suspicion has to remain a bare suspicion. The existence of a motive (as to which I agree with my learned brother) cannot make any difference when there is total lack of evidence connecting second accused with the cause of death. In this respect the case closely resembles Kusir, Bap v. Emperor (5) and I hold that the second accused must be acquitted.

As to the first accused, he admits that the powder having been taken by him from the person who gave it to him was administered to the deceased with a view to cause purging. One suspects the statement in so far as it denies a more culpable intention but, in the absence of evidence to show any other intention or even motive (so far as the first accused is concerned), or knowledge that the drug he used was a highly dangerous drug or was Viram, one cannot infer that the first accused was actuated by any intention or knowledge more culpable than he chooses to admit. Even if he knew it to be Viram (of which there is no evidence) it is difficult to attribute to him either an intention to cause death, or knowledge that it is likely to cause death in view of the extracts I made in the earlier part of the judgment showing the ignorance among the people as to the nature of the drug. I think the utmost that can be done is to convict the first accused under section 328 of the Indian Penal Code. I accordingly do so and sentence him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under that section.

The case illustrates the necessity of some legislation to regulate the sale of poisons in the Bazars of the country.

Odgers, J.—In this case there were originally three accused. Accused No. 1 was charged with the murder of one Ambalavana Padayachi by administering poison to him, and accused Nos. 2 and 3 were charged with abetment. Accused Nos. 1 and 2 were convicted and sentenced to death. Accused No. 3 was acquitted. The prosecution story is, that accused No. 3 purchased about one tola weight of perchloride of mercury (corrosive sublimate) from a grocer in Lalpet at the request of accused No. 2. The latter powdered the crystalline substance purchased by accused No. 3 on his behalf, made the powder into a packet which he handed to accused No. 1 telling him to take deceased to a toddy shop to drink arrack and to put the contents of the packet into his arrack. This was done and the deceased was taken ill and died. There is not the slightest doubt that the deceased died in consequence of the administration to him of perchloride of mercury by accused No. 2. The evidence is perfectly clear and it is not contended that he is innocent by his Vakil. There is, however, some little doubt as to whether accused No. 1 knew the stuff given to him by accused No. 2 to be a poison. In Exhibit D, which I shall have to examine in greater detail later on accused No. 1, says he asked accused No. 2 if the drug was for killing him (deceased), the answer was it would only bring on purging and with the deceased so reduced, he could be persuaded to return to the house of accused No. 2, who was his brother, which he had left. I myself have the very gravest doubts as to whether accused No. 2 did not actually know the nature of the drug, as he calls it, he was asked to administer so secretly and mysteriously. He does not appear to be a relative of accused No. 2 and deceased or to have had any other connection with them.

There is, however, a possibility that he did not actually know, though he must at the least have had very good grounds for suspecting the deadly nature of the powder handed to him by accused No. 2. I am, therefore, not prepared to differ from the judgment of my learned brother, which I have had the advantage of perusing, in finding accused No. 1 guilty only of administering a poison knowing it to be likely that he will cause hurt and would sentence him to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment under section 328, Indian Penal Code.

A case of greater difficulty arises in the case of accused No. 2. On this part of the case I have the misfortune to differ from the judgment of my learned brother and I need not say I do so with much diffidence.

Accused No. 2 neither bought the poison nor administered it. The dying declaration of the deceased, Exhibit C, taken down by the Village Munsif (prosecution witness No. 5) states that there was enmity between deceased and accused No. 2 his younger brother. Some 10 to 20 days before the date of the crime the deceased and his second wife moved from the family-house and went to live in Muthu Chetty's house (referred to as the oil-monger). As already stated, according to Exhibit D, accused No. 2 told accused No. 1 that the object of giving the drug was to get deceased to come back and live in the family-house again. There is evidence (prosecution witness No. 6) that accused No. 2 was intimate with deceased's wife. This witness says accused No. 2 used to come to his house, but never when deceased was present. Once this happened after the wife had gone to bed. This is, of course, denied by the widow (prosecution witness No. 11), but I am not prepared to disbelieve it. No other reason is alleged or proved for deceased having moved from his own house and I think there probably was undue intimacy between the deceased's wife and accused No. 2, and that was the reason of the move. This would also furnish a reason for the enmity and a motive for the crime. The learned Vakil for the second accused tried to minimise the effect of this evidence by saying that, even if the two brothers were not on speaking terms that is no reason why the wife of the one should not talk to the other brother. This is unlikely and I imagine especially so among the Hindus whose women do not usually take a course independent of their men, unless there is some special reason for it and especially, as in this case, where the parties are living in different houses. Thus, in my opinion, we have a motive for this crime established. Next, we have the evidence of the grocer, prosecution witness No. 7, that accused was standing near his shop, 8 feet away, when third accused bought the poison. The latter was a regular customer and the witness said he could not remember if accused No. 3 had bought Viram, i.e., perchloride of mercury, before. Third accused used to buy medicinal drugs often from the witness. It seems to me a fair inference from this that the probability is that accused No. 3 had not bought this particular poison there before. The poison supplied to accused No. 3 came from a stock got in by the witness's father who died $1\frac{1}{4}$ years before and was thus apparently a thing for which there was very little sale in that village and it is most unlikely that the grocer would not remember a previous sale to the accused No. 3 if such had taken place. The learned Vakil for the accused No. 2 says that the latter's presence close to the shop at the very moment when accused No. 3 was buying the poison was accidental. It is a curious coincidence but one which may have a perfectly innocent explanation. The second accused has not attempted any, and in the absence of this I think an inference may fairly be drawn against accused No. 2 from his presence just outside the grocer's shop at the very moment when the poison was being purchased.

Next, three articles were discovered in accused No. 2's house, a vegetable cutter, a pestle and a sandal grinding stone. The evidence of prosecution witness No. 8, Sub-Inspector, is to the effect that in consequence of information received from accused No. 1 the house of accused No. 2 was searched (search list Exhibit G) in the presence of the Sub-Magistrate and the vegetable cutter and the pestle were discovered. It is curious that, if, as urged, there was no connection between first and second accused, that the former should give information as to articles subsequently found in accused No. 2's house in consequence of such information. The evidence is that the first accused said that the substance was placed on the plank of the vegetable cutter and powdered and given to him. The house of accused No. 2 was searched at about 5-30 P. M. and the vegetable cutter and the pestle were seized. The Sub-Inspector says there was a whitish tinge on them. The Chemical Examiner's report (Exhibit A) is that the pestle (M. O. 8) had a brownish stain, the vegetable cutter (M. O. 9) had also brownish stains. Traces of mercury were found in the washings of these articles. The sandal grinding stone was discovered in consequence of information received from accused No. 2. He said in the presence of the Magistrate (who, as I understand, was present when the information was given by accused No. 1 also) that he had powdered the substance on the sandal grinding stone first, i.e., before powdering it on the vegetable cutter. In consequence of this information, a further search (Exhibit H) was made at 7 P. M. that night not in the presence of the Magistrate and the grinding stone was found concealed under a mat in the house. Prosecution witness No. 13 who signed Exhibit H says that there was white mark on one part of the circumference of the stone when it was found. This was sent to the Chemical Examiner as No. 7 and the washings show traces of mercury. The second accused denied all knowledge of the vegetable cutter and says the pestle and grinding stone had soap-nut paste on them. The searches were conducted in the presence of several persons, one is dead and one has been called as prosecution witness, No. 13. The deceased's younger brother, prosecution witness No. 12, says there was some dispute over money between the deceased and Anantha Pillai, the first of these persons to sign the search lists who has since died. He alleges nothing against prosecution witness No. 13 who was present at both the searches. It was attempted to be argued for the second accused that the discovery of mercury on these articles was not in consequence of information given within section 27, Evidence Act. I should be inclined to hold that these statements made in the presence of a Magistrate were confessions (section 26) but whether they are strictly so or not there can be no doubt that it was in consequence of these statements made by accused Nos. 1 and 2 that the three articles were found and subsequently the traces of mercury were discovered by the Chemical Examiner. The vegetable cutter was found in the cook-room, the pestle in the adjoining room and the grinding stone, as stated, under a mat in the north-west portion of the house. Now, it is said for the second accused, first, there could have been no white marks on the articles discovered. The Chemical Examiner says "brownish incrustations or stains." The answer to this is that the white powder, if fairly free, might have been shaken off in the course of handling; secondly, the second search is suspicious as the Magistrate was not there, and the substance containing the mercury might have been introduced by the Police. There seems hardly time or opportunity for this. The first search had been completed 1½ hours after the second accused, then in custody, gave information about the grinding stone, which apparently first accused knew nothing about, and the Police say they had no information then about it. If the mercury on the grinding stone is a concoction, it is curious it was not more thorough and the washing did not give positive traces of perchloride of mercury instead of only mercury. Further, "the scanty brownish incrustation" is similar to the "brownish stains" on the other two articles and it is not suggested that there was any tampering with these. Thirdly, and most strongly, it is argued that assuming the three articles did contain traces of mercury it is a common drug in every Indian household and the traces discovered may have had an innocent source. Mercury in various forms can apparently be obtained even in small villages; there is no evidence that it is usual or unusual to powder medicines on the foot-rest of a vegetable cutter with a pestle used, I presume, to pound rice or other articles of food. The evidence of prosecution witness No. 12 is that the grinding stone in question was used to grind soapnuts which, I assume, do not contain mercury. I understand that stones are used not only for grinding sandal but for various other things such as pepper. Now, this is an article of food and I do not think it probable that mercury or its compounds would have been powdered in the ordinary course on articles which are used in the preparation of food. It is true that no perchloride of mercury was found in the washings. There is no chemical evidence as to what happens to the chlorine in perchloride, whether it is volatile or disappears in any and what combinations or in water. The fact remains that traces of mercury, the base of perchloride of mercury were found on these articles seized in the house in which accused No. 2 was living.

If the articles had been recently used for powdering some other compound of mercury for the use of the inmates of the house, it could have been explained by the accused. There is no evidence that any of the inmates was ill or was taking preparations of mercury medicinally. All this could have been explained if the presence of the mercury on the articles was innocent. No attempt to do so was made, and I cannot resist the inference against the accused.

We have then, apart from Exhibit D, which I will deal with later, these facts which, in my opinion, tell against the second accused and have not been explained by him. (1) Intimacy between second accused and deceased's wife and consequent motive for the crime. (2) Presence of second accused near the shop when the poison was being bought. (3) Information by the first accused leading to the discovery of the two articles, viz., vegetable cutter and pestle, in the house of the second accused which strengthens the inference of the connection between first and second accused. (4) The information given by the second accused leading to the discovery of the grinding stone. (5) The discovery of traces of mercury the base of the poison proved to have killed the deceased on all the three articles.

I now pass to Exhibit D. It is a statement made by the first accused to the Village Munsif of the village where the administration of the poison took place, it is proved by the Village Munsif, prosecution witness No. 5 — was retracted in the Sessions Court. Two points, both legal, arise with regard to it. Is it a confession, and, if it is, can it be taken into consideration against second accused? The substance of Exhibit D is as follows. "Second accused took first accused aside, gave him a rupee and told him to give arrack to the deceased. Second accused took first accused to the former's house and handed a packet to him. He told him to put the contents of the packet into his brother's arrack when first accused asked if it was to kill the deceased. Second accused said it was only a purge. "I accordingly did so," i.e., he took the packet from second accused, took the deceased to an arrack shop some distance away, where both first accused and deceased were unknown to the arrack seller, prosecution witness No. 2, and administered the powder in this arrack. First accused does not say in Exhibit D that he did not know that the powder was a poison or that he is innocent of killing the deceased or of any other offence or that he tried to dissuade the second accused from doing anything to his brother. Nobody could expect a confession to say, "I thereby committed a crime under section so and so of the Penal Code." The packet which the first accused received from the second accused contained poison which was administered to the deceased by the first accused according to the directions of the second accused. First accused is clearly guilty of murder unless this offence can be reduced by his want of knowledge or intention. He was charged with murder and Exhibit D is, in my opinion, clearly a confession, in that it states or suggests the inference that the second accused committed the crime with which he was charged.

The next question is, if, being a confession by the first accused, it can be taken into consideration against the second accused under section 30 of the Evidence Act. Both first and second accused were tried for the same offence, as abetment of an offence is included by virtue of the explanation to the section. Several cases were quoted by the Vakil for the second accused and I will briefly dealt with them.

The earliest case is reported as Queen v. Mohesh Biswas (6). It says that under section 30 the statement of fact which amounts to a confession of guilt may be taken into consideration only so far as that particular statement of fact itself extends against the other prisoners. Here the only use sought to be made of Exhibit D is to establish the connection between accused Nos. 1 and 2 by the giving and receiving of the packet of poison. In the same Volume, at page 67, [Queen v. Belat Ali (2)] it is laid down that the confession must implicate the person making it to the same extent as it implicates the person against whom it is to be used. In that case the confessors distinctly kept themselves out of all complicity in the actual facts charged against all the prisoners jointly. It seems to me that Exhibit D implicates the first accused at least as much as if not more than the second accused. Moreover, in Queen Empress v. Nur Mahomed (7) it was held that when two persons are accused of an offence of the same definition arising out of a single transaction the confession of the one may be used against the other though it inculcates himself through acts separable from those ascribed to his accomplice and, therefore, capable of constituting a separate offence from that of the accomplice (per West, J.). Again, in Reg. v. Amrita Govinda (8) it is laid down that the statement must be a confession in its inherent quality and not a statement as in that case of withdrawal before actual preparation of the crime. The case reported as Queen v. Naga (3) merely emphasises the infirmity of such confessions. In Empress of India v. Ganraj (4) the alleged confessions sought to be used against the other accused tried to fix the guilt on the others and to excuse the confessor. It was, therefore, held barred under the rule laid down in Queen v. Belat Ali (2). The test of section 30 is to see if it is sufficient by itself to justify the conviction of the person making it of the offence for which he is being jointly tried with the other person or persons against whom it is tendered.

There is no exculpatory statement in Exhibit D, which, if sufficiently corroborated, would be sufficient to convict accused No. 1 provided he knew the powder given to him was a poison likely to cause death. The case in Empress of India v. Ganraj (4) seems to be inapplicable to the present. Queen Empress v. Jagrup (1) lays down that a confession in the Evidence Act is not a mere inculpatory admission which falls short of an admission of guilt. In that case the confessor admitted he was present at the time of the crime but tried to prevent its commission. As stated above, in my opinion, Exhibit D is an admission of guilt.

Finally, in Upendra Nath Das v. Emperor (9) the confession sought to be used tried to make out that the confessor was almost an unconscious instrument in the hands of the other conspirators. As stated above, Exhibit D is a retracted confession and must be received with caution and used, if at all, only in so far as it is corroborated. At the same time it appears to me that Exhibit D complies with the requirements of section 30 of the Evidence Act and may be taken into consideration as against the second accused. This does not, of course, mean that it is enough to convict him, but taken along with the other corroborating circumstance, viz., the presence of the second accused at the time the poison was purchased, the possession of the poison by the first accused and its administration of it to the deceased who died in consequence, together with the further circumstances of the motive and the discovery of mercury on the three articles seized in the house of the second accused, I consider these facts establish the guilt of the latter beyond any reasonable doubt. The murder was deliberately planned and brought about by the second accused. I can find no extenuating circumstances whatever, and I would confirm the conviction and sentence on the second accused and dismiss his appeal.

By the Court.—We direct that the papers be placed before His Lordship the Chief Justice for orders.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it has been found that first accused bought a tumblerful of arrack of second prosecution witness and after mixing Viram, or corrosive sublimate, with it gave it to deceased, who was taken ill immediately and eventually died. First accused was charged with and convicted of murder and has been found guilty in this Court of administering an unwholesome drug with intent to cause hurt to deceased, an offence punishable under section 328 of the Indian Penal Code. The case comes before me in consequence of a difference of opinion as to second accused, who was charged with and convicted of abetting first accused.

The main evidence against second accused is an alleged confession by first accused, Exhibit D, and the first question is whether that confession is admissible at all. It is urged that it is not, because, in the words of one of the learned Judges before whom the case originally came, it does not satisfy the requirements of section 30 of the Indian Evidence Act inasmuch as it is a confession of guilt only of the lesser offence under section 328, not of the offence of murder, for which alone, it is said, second accused was being tried. With all respect, I cannot follow the reasoning involved. Section 30, no doubt, provides that the confession of one accused can be taken into consideration against another, only when they are being tried jointly for the same offence, the offence (as the explanation shows) including abetment or attempt. But it is not possible to hold that persons tried jointly for a major offence and eventually convicted of a minor offence, as first accused has been and second accused may be here, with reference to section 328 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not tried for the latter also. For, otherwise, their conviction of the latter, which, it is not disputed, would be legitimate, would be had after no trial at all. The correct view is clearly that persons under trial for a major offence are also being charged with and tried for any minor offence or offences, constituted by the particular ingredients of the major offence which may be proved; and it can make no difference that the conviction of one accused of a minor offence takes place only in appeal, when the course of the proceedings has been, as in the present case, the same against them both.

No authority regarding the application of section 30 to cases in which a conviction of a minor, after trial for a major, offence is in question, has been cited; and it will serve no useful purpose, in view of the foregoing, to go in detail through the cases relied on before me and in the referring orders of the learned Judges, since they deal with issues which do not at present arise. For they support one or other of two distinct principles, of which neither is relevant to this case. Firstly, they are decisions, such as Imperatrix v. Pilamber Jina (10), that the accused are not being tried jointly for the same offence, when the offences charged against each and the ingredients thereof are different. Secondly, there are others, such as Queen v. Belat Ali (2) and Empress of India v. Ganraj (4), in which the so-called confessions did not implicate both accused concerned equally, because they were not really confessions at all, but were made to show that the deponents were not parties to the crime charged and to shift responsibility for it to the others tried with them. One case of this kind, Kusir Bap v. Emperor (5), has been particularly relied on, because the facts in it are said to be similar to those before me; the statement, the admissibility of which was disputed, having been made by one accused, who gave her husband poison, that she received it from another; but there was actually no admission by her of any offence; since, unlike first accused in the present case, she did not admit knowledge that what she administered would cause hurt or have any physical effect. In fact, these decisions merely require a strict interpretation of the references in section 30 to a joint trial "for the same offence" and a "confession" and do not affect the conclusions at present material that Exhibit D was, as its terms will show, a confession and that the two accused were tried jointly for the minor offence punishable under section 328, when they were so tried for the major offence of murder.

(10) 2 B. 61; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 469.

Before stating the terms of Exhibit D, I deal with the other objection to it that it was never really given by first accused or, if given, is entitled to no weight against second accused, because the former afterwards denied having given it. It is true that he did so before the Sessions Judge, who questioned him directly regarding it, and that before the Committing Magistrate, who did not do so, he admitted only having been drinking with deceased, but denied having put anything in his arrack and gave no explanation for its effect. But Exhibit D was taken by fifth prosecution witness the Monigar of the village, where the arrack shop, at which first accused and deceased were drinking is situated, and it is not suggested that he had any reason for creating evidence against either. The suggestion made by first accused at Sessions, that he may have desired to exculpate the shop-keeper, is unsupported and is not probable. Fourth prosecution witness, a man of some credit who attested Exhibit D, did not admit anything, which detracted from its weight. It no doubt is referred to in fifth prosecution witness's evidence only as a note of what first accused said and it was not sent with the first report, Exhibit E, but there is no reason for doubting that it is a correct record of the substance of what was said and what was given to the Police on their arrival. There is nothing improbable in first accused making such a statement, when he found the effect of the drug on deceased so much greater than he had expected. There is, in my opinion, no reasonable doubt that Exhibit D was given as it purports to have been. The objection that it was not given voluntarily is supported only by the suggestion that the words used by fifth prosecution witness in inviting first accused to give it must be taken with reference to the former's official position as holding out an inducement. They were according to fifth prosecution witness, who alone speaks to them, that first accused should tell the truth and that to tell the truth was always good; and they involve no inducement, express or implied. In these circumstances, Exhibit D must be treated as admissible evidence to be taken, in the words of section 30, into consideration against second accused; and its weight is not, in my opinion, materially affected by the fact that first accused later denied having given it.

First accused in Exhibit D said that (1) he administered to deceased in arrack a drug which he had received from second accused (2) the drug was to make deceased purge in order that second accused, his brother, might carry him back to the family home, which, contrary to the former's wish, he had left. Exhibit D accordingly contains a full admission of first accused's liability under section 328; and the question is then of its effect against second accused when, as section 30 permits, it is taken into consideration against him. This portion of the section has been construed in many decisions. But their result, so far as it is definite, seems to be only what in the present case would be clear independently of them, that a conviction cannot be based exclusively on the testimony of a person, who cannot be cross-examined, if he is uncorroborated or corroborated only by an accomplice. No further general rule as to the extent or nature of the corroboration to be required emerges from the judgments, which naturally deal directly with the particular circumstances on each occasion before the Court; and it can, therefore, be said only that the corroboration must be on material particulars and taken with the confession must justify belief in the substantial truth of the latter.

Of the four headings of the prosecution evidence relied on for this purpose, the first that regarding motive, affords corroboration, both generally and with reference to first accused's account of the reason second accused gave him; and it, in my opinion, goes as far as is necessary in this direction. It is alleged that it establishes a liaison between the wife of deceased and second accused and that this explains the latter's desire to induce deceased, his brother, to return to the family house, which he had left about ten days earlier. The suggestion against deceased's wife may be true. But the evidence for it is indirect and in some respects defective; and it is, therefore, safer to reject it.

There is, however, no sufficient reason for doubting the evidence that second accused, as first accused said in Exhibit D, desired his brother's return and there is no improbability in his having hoped to compass it by bringing him back when he was ill and helpless. It is urged that this motive is disproportionate to the means employed; but the objection can be accepted only on the assumption, which is negatived by the judgments in the case of first accused, that the causing of more serious harm than a temporary physical disturbance was intended.

Next, there is the evidence of 7th prosecution witness who deals in medicines, that shortly before the date of the death he saw second accused outside his shop, when he was selling Viram, or corrosive sublimate, to third accused, who has been acquitted. There is no reason for doubting the independence of the witness or the truth of his evidence. There is, however, no corroboration, and it is argued further that second accused might have come to the village, the ordinary shopping-resort for the neighbourhood for his own purposes and his presence outside the witness's shop may have been a mere coincidence; and it is true that no actual conversation or other intercourse between him and third accused is alleged. But, on the other hand, he is referred to as standing only eight feet from 7th prosecution witness on the koradu, he has made no attempt to show on what other business he was there; and he did not call third accused, who was acquitted under section 289 (2), Criminal Procedure Code at the conclusion of the prosecution case and who could have supported his denial of any connection between them. It seems to me very probable that 7th prosecution witness's evidence is true. But it is merely consistent with the prosecution case and does not advance it appreciably on the material points, to which I now turn, second accused's possession of corrosive sublimate and his having given it to first accused.

The evidence as to possession is that in consequence of statements to the Police Sub-Inspector, 18th prosecution witness by first accused and afterwards by second accused, the latter's house was searched twice, a vegetable cutter and a pestle being found on the first occasion and a grinding stone on the second, all these bearing, as analysis has shown, traces of mercury; and at the trial the statement of second accused just referred to, which no doubt is alleged to have been made in presence of the Sub-Magistrate, but was not separately recorded, was relied on as an admission of the identity of the mercury then found with that administered by second accused. As regards this statement, its details were no doubt elicited on second accused's behalf in cross-examination of 7th prosecution witness; but it must be conceded that the effect of what he said is not clear, and before me the attempt to argue from it was abandoned. The evidence regarding the finding of the grind stone has also been attacked; but it is unnecessary to consider whether the attack was successful, because the argument from the presence of mercury on the stone is similar to that relating to the vegetable cutter and pestle and adds nothing to it. As regards the mercury on the two last mentioned utensils, 13th prosecution witness, the Monigar, no doubt, said that the cutter was found in the room occupied by second accused's mother; 12th prosecution witness, however, a brother of deceased, and 2nd accused did not corroborate this; whilst 8th prosecution witness said it was taken from the kitchen; and, in any case, in view of the close quarters, at which those concerned lived, it does not seem to me that anything in second accused's favour follows if 13th prosecution witness's statement is accepted. Ramesam, J., in his judgment has laid stress on the fact that analysis revealed the presence only of mercury, not Viram, or corrosive sublimate. But it is not clear that analysis was directed towards distinguishing or could have distinguished between the two and it is a fair inference from the use of a pestle, that the solid Viram, corresponding with corrosive sublimate, not the liquid mercury, was in question. There seems to me no reasonable doubt that corrosive sublimate was, shortly before deceased's death, in second accused's possession; and, as he has adduced nothing to explain this or transfer responsibility to any other member of his family the inference must so far be against him.

There remains, however, the question, on the answer to which the decision must really turn, whether there is evidence to corroborate the allegation in Exhibit D that second accused gave the Viram, of which he was possessed, to first accused; and the answer must on the best consideration I can give, be that there is not. There is no direct corroborative evidence on the point: and in the circumstances of the case an inference from the proved possession of Viram by two men in succession to the identity of the Viram in question and its transfer from the one to the other would exclude reasonable doubt, only if Viram were so rare a substance and its possession by any particular individual so extraordinary, as to exclude the possibility of other explanations. But this is not established. It is true that accused has not attempted to prove actual possession of Viram for any innocent purpose by any inmate of his house and has not suggested any explanation of first accused's possession other than the latter alleged. But it is clear that Viram is really procurable and although 7th prosecution witness denies any sale for the last two years except to third accused, he presumably is not the only vendor in the neighbourhood. That the drug is a common medicine is shown by the quotation in the judgment of Ramesam, J., from Maclean's Manual, III, 845; and it is further, I believe, a cosmetic. It is accordingly impossible to hold that any special explanation need be required for its possession by either first or second accused or that there is evidence from which the giving of it by the latter to the former can be inferred.

In these circumstances, Exhibit D is uncorroborated in a material respect and second accused cannot be convicted on it. The case is one of suspicion and it must fail for want of essential evidence. The appeal of second accused must, therefore, be allowed and he must be acquitted and released.

PRIYANATH GUPTA—PETITIONER

LALJHI CHOWKIDAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XL V of 1860), s. 506 - Criminal Intimidation—Self-constituted Court—Notice to appear—Ex parte decree to be passed on failure to appear—Offence.

Accused issued a notice, signed by himself as President of a self-constituted Arbitration Court, to complainant calling on him to appear on a certain date and answer a claim brought against him, failing which an ex parte decree would be passed against him:

Held, that the statement in the notice that a decree would be passed in the event of the complainant failing to appear as directed amounted to a threat to harm his person, reputation or property, and amounted to criminal intimidation punishable under section 506 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 512, col. 2.]

Revision.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Bimal Chandar Das Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. W. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Newbould, J.—The petitioner Priya Nath Gupta was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Manikganj of an offence punishable under section 506, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, or in default to undergo six months' simple imprisonment. This conviction and sentence were confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Dacca. The petitioner has obtained a Rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside on the following two grounds only:—

1. For that the facts proved and found cannot legally constitute the offence of criminal intimidation.

2. For that the prosecution having neither alleged nor adduced any evidence to show that any decree passed by the Arbitration Court was ever sought to be enforced against the will of the person against whom the same was passed by any means whatsoever, the Courts below should have held that an ex parte decree of the said Arbitration Court against the opposite party would be perfectly innocuous and that as such the possibility of such a decree could not constitute a threat of injury within the meaning of section 503, Indian Penal Code.

These two grounds are really one and the same, the second ground setting out in detail the argument on which the first ground is based.

The following are the facts proved and found in this case. The petitioner is the President of what is known as the Arbitration Court of Gandhi Maharajke Court at Manikganj. A notice, Exhibit 1, partly printed and partly written, signed by the petitioner and issued under his authority as President of this Court was served on the complainant Laljhi, a village chaukidar. In this notice it is stated that one Gobin Bhar has filed a claim for Rs. 2,499 against Laljhi who is informed that he should appear before the Court and settle the claim. The notice concludes with the two following statements: "If the defendant do not answer the claim on the date fixed the claim will be decreed ex parte on the evidence of the plaintiff. No objections will be entertained after the passing of such an ex parte decree." Laljhi was frightened by this notice and consulted the Panchayat who reported the facts to the Magistrate.

Criminal intimidation, which is punishable under section 506, is defined in section 503, Indian Penal Code, as follows: "Whoever threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation or property with intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat commits criminal intimidation."

The only question of any difficulty in this case is whether the concluding portion of Exhibit 1 was a threat of injury to the property of Laljhi. If it was such a threat, there can be no doubt that the criminal intent which is the other ingredient of the offence of criminal intimidation has been established. It is found as a fact that this notice did cause alarm to Laljhi. Such a result is a natural consequence of a threat which the person who threatened must be presumed to have intended. I also hold that the inference has been rightly drawn that it was the intention of the petitioner to cause Laljhi to do an act which he was not legally bound to do, namely, to appear before the Arbitration Court, as the means of avoiding the execution of the threat (if it is held to be a threat) that an ex parte decree would be passed against him. On a full consideration I hold that the lower Courts were right in deciding that the statement that a claim for Rs. 2,499 would be decreed ex parte against Laljhi if he did not answer the claim on the date fixed, amounted to a threat of injury to his property. The learned Sessions Judge has compared the petitioner's action to that of a bully who threatens to shoot a person though he has no license to carry fire-arms. To my mind, a better comparison would be that of a person who holds an unloaded pistol at the head of another. The fact that the pistol was unloaded would be no defence to a charge of criminal intimidation if the person threatened was ignorant of this fact. The use of the word 'decree' in the notice implies that an order passed by the Arbitration Court would be enforced. Though the Court had no legal power to enforce its decree, a person in the position of Laljhi would naturally fear that it would be enforced by illegal methods. I can see no force in the contention based on the fact that no ex parte decree of the Arbitration Court has ever been enforced. Evidence was taken about two months after the issue of the notice. The omission to take any action to enforce ex parte decrees during that period may have been due to this prosecution or other causes. It has not been shown that at the time the notice was issued Laljhi had reason to believe that no steps would be taken to enforce a so-called decree against him.

I would, therefore, hold that the facts proved and found legally constitute the offence of criminal intimidation and would discharge this Rule.

I regret that I am unable to agree with my learned brother. The case will be submitted to the Chief Justice for the appointment of another Judge under section 429 read with section 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

Suhrawardy, J.—The accused has been convicted in this case under section 506.

PRIYANATH GUPTA V. LALJHI CHOWKIDAR.

Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, in default six months' simple imprisonment. The charge against him is that as President of a self-constituted Arbitration Court, styled in the notice referred to hereafter as Manikganj Arbitration Assembly, the accused caused a notice to be issued over his signature to the complainant and thereby committed an offence under section 506, Indian Penal Code. The notice complained of states that a certain person (name given) has laid a claim against the complainant for Rs. 2,499; here follow details of the claim—before the Arbitration Assembly and as recourse to Court would be ruinous to both sides, he is requested to be present on a given date and arrange for amicable settlement. These words are in point. Then follow the words in manuscript which are said to be the offending words constituting criminal intimidation. They are "Be it known that if the defendant (meaning the complainant in this case) does not give an answer (or file written statement) on that date the suit will be decreed on that date on plaintiff's (i.e., accused's) proof. Afterwards no objection will be accepted."

The accused has obtained this Rule on the ground that the facts proved and found do not legally constitute the offence of criminal intimidation. The Crown does not appear to support the conviction but the Trial Magistrate has submitted a full explanation.

It, therefore, remained to be considered if the words in writing quoted above make out the offence of which the accused has been convicted for it is evident that the printed portion of the notice is wholly innocuous.

The charge framed is in these words:—"That you... caused a written notice to be served on one Laljhi Chaukidar, of Gheor and thereby caused him alarm for his property intending thereby to cause him to appear before you on a certain date and place which you had no right to do and which he was not legally bound to obey and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 506, &c." I think this charge is bad. Section 503, Indian Penal Code, defines criminal intimidation thus:—(I quote so much of the section as is necessary for our present purpose).

"whoever threatens another with any injury to his property.....with intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do which he is not legally bound to do, as the means of avoiding such threat, commits criminal intimidation."

It is clear from this definition that the elements constituting the offence are, first, threat of injury to the property of the complainant and, secondly, the intention to cause alarm, etc.

As to the first element, it is said by the learned Additional Sessions Judge who heard the appeal that the expression that if the complainant did not appear on the day fixed an ex parte decree will be passed against him is threat to his property. I am unable to agree in this view. Injury is defined in section 44, Indian Penal Code, as 'denoting any harm whatever illegally caused to any person... in property'. Hence the threat must be of causing harm to property. I cannot persuade myself that the threat to pass an ex parte decree for a certain sum by an unauthorised person or body is threat to property. This apparently strained construction of the plain wording of the law is sought to be vindicated by suggesting that the accused or the body to which he belongs might thereafter proceed to touch the complainant's property on the strength of that decree. This is mere conjecture. Had there been any evidence that the accused even proceeded against another's property under colour of a so-called decree, it might be urged—I do not decide, rightly—that the threat involved subsequent injury to property. The evidence is just the other way for P. W. No. 3, Ch. Mohun Majumdar, says:—"I have never seen any decree of the Arbitration Court being executed." As I read section 503, Indian Penal Code, the threat must be a direct threat to cause harm to a person in property and not by way of insinuation of possibility or even probability of such harm.

As regards the second ingredient of the offence, the accused is not charged with having the intention to cause alarm to the complainant, nor is there any such finding. The learned Additional Sessions Judge finds that the complainant, a person of ordinary intelligence and education was in fact frightened. This is not enough. The mental condition of the complainant does not determine the offence. It is the mental attitude of the accused or mens rea that ordinarily makes an act criminal. It may be said that the accused intended to cause the complainant to do an act which he was not legally bound to do, viz., to file an answer, but the threat must be to cause injury to property in the event of non-compliance.

For all these reasons, I hold that the conviction is bad and must be set aside and the accused acquitted.

On account of this difference of opinion the case was referred to Buckland, J., who delivered the following judgment:—

Buckland, J.—The petitioner Priyanath Gupta who was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Manikganj, of the offence of criminal intimidation and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to undergo six months' simple imprisonment appealed to the Sessions Judge of Dacca by whom the conviction and sentence were confirmed and has now obtained a Rule from this Court to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside. The case has been laid before me under sections 429/439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The complainant is one Laljhi Koeri, a Chawkidar. There was served on him by a peon a document in the following terms:—

Portions of this document are in print, the remainder is in manuscript, in particular the last paragraph from the words "Be it mentioned," to "allowed thereafter." The petitioner whose signature it bears is the President of what is known as the Salisi Nispatti Bichar Mandali at Manikganj, and the charge is that by causing it to be served upon the complainant he committed the offence of which he was convicted.

Two points have been argued upon the hearing of the Rule. The first is, that there is no evidence to support the findings of the lower Courts that the last paragraph in manuscript was there when the petitioner signed the notice as to which I am not prepared to hold that there is no evidence to support the inference which the lower Courts have drawn in this respect.

The other point which is more substantial is that this notice cannot constitute the offence charged.

Excluding immaterial portions of the section criminal intimidation is defined as follows:—"Whoever threatens another with any injury to his person, reputation or property.....with intent to cause alarm to that person or to cause that person to do any act which he is not legally bound to do....as the means of avoiding the execution of such threat commits criminal intimidation."

That the notice in question conforms in many respects to the forms used by Courts established by law does not admit of dispute. Expressions used are similar, the word "suit" is employed to specify the proceedings before this Tribunal which was self-constituted and had no legal sanction, and the complainant is required to put in an answer which he was not legally bound to do, as the means of avoiding that "the suit will be decreed on the evidence of the plaintiff" which fulfills the requirements of the section as regards intent.

The question then arises whether that which according to the notice the complainant could so avoid was injury threatened to his person, reputation or property. That a decree of a Civil Court harms an individual against whom it is made in his person, reputation or property is a proposition which was not controverted when I put the question to the learned Vakīl for the applicant in the course of argument and, in my opinion, he rightly accepted it as correct, though it might be more strictly accurate to say that the harm is caused by the probable legal consequences of a decree. Consequently, a threat of a decree is a threat of harm to an individual in his person, reputation or property.

But it is submitted that this notice cannot be construed as a threat of such harm as the tribunal was incompetent to execute its decree. That, in my judgment, is immaterial. The section says nothing about the capacity of the person making the threat to carry it into execution. Were such capacity essential the threat implied in the presentation of an unloaded pistol at the head of another would not further the commission of the offence of criminal intimidation unless the act was accompanied by threatening words, which would reduce the section to an absurdity. Nor does the section say anything about the effect upon the person threatened, and whether or not the complainant knew that the notice was innocuous is equally immaterial.

Looking at the notice as a whole, the only inference to be drawn is that it was the intention of the petitioner to cause the complainant to think or believe that unless he did what the notice required him to do a decree as ordinarily understood would be passed against him and he would become liable to those penalties which are the sanctions for decrees made by Courts of justice duly constituted by law. No other intention can be attributed to the use of the forms of expression and words employed. The petitioner, therefore, threatened the complainant with harm in his person, reputation or property by threatening him with a decree. Under section 44 of the Indian Penal Code injury denotes harm illegally caused. By no legal process or means could this Tribunal make or give effect to such decree as it was the intention of the notice to cause the complainant to believe would be made if he failed to comply with it. Therefore, in that the petitioner threatened the complainant with such decree he threatened the complainant with harm to be caused illegally.

Upon the facts found by the lower Courts I hold that the petitioner committed the offence of criminal intimidation. The conviction and sentence are affirmed, and the Rule is discharged.

INDER SINGH v. EMPEROR.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 421 OF 1922.

June 27, 1922.

Present.—Mr. Justice Abdul Qadir.

INDER SINGH AND OTHERS—

CONVICTS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 326—Assault with deadly weapons—Offence—Common intention.

In a quarrel over a turn of water, four persons armed with chhavis made an assault upon another man in which injuries were caused to the latter resulting in his death. Out of all the injuries, there was only one that was fatal and it was uncertain by whom the same had been caused. The assailants were convicted under section 326 of the Penal Code read with section 34 of the Code and given equal punishment. On appeal:

Held, that considering the nature of the assault and the nature of the weapons used, it could not be said with regard to any one of the accused that he did not intend to cause serious injuries and that section 34 of the Penal Code had rightly been applied in the case.

Appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 29th April 1922.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Lala Narinjan Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zafrullah Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Inder Singh, Tek Singh, Waryam Singh and Arjan Singh have been convicted under section 326, Indian Penal Code, read with section 34, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore. They have appealed against their convictions and sentences through Pandit Sheo Narain, whom I have heard, and I have also heard Mr. Zafrullah Khan for the Crown.

On the 29th October 1921 there was a quarrel, between the party of the appellants on the one hand and of Sudh Singh deceased on the other, over a turn of water. The turn of the appellants was to finish at 1 P.M. and that of Sudh Singh was to begin. Sudh Singh and his sons and some others went to take their turn and began to cut off the water that was flowing into the field of the appellants.

The latter resisted saying that one of their fields remained yet to be watered and that they would allow the other party its turn after watering that field. Thereupon a quarrel ensued, in which injuries were caused to Sudh Singh, father of Kundan Singh, and, as a result of those injuries, Sudh Singh died in hospital on the 3rd November 1921. The six persons were then committed to the Sessions for trial under section 302, Indian Penal Code, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. Two of them have been acquitted, because they were not said to have taken any part in the beating of Sudh Singh and had only beaten Kundan Singh, but there was no separate charge framed against them under section 323, Indian Penal Code. The charges of the remaining four persons were altered by the learned Sessions Judge to those under section 326-34, Indian Penal Code as he took the view that the case was not one of murder but was either one of culpable homicide or fell under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and as he thought the culprits could be punished as heavily under section 326, Indian Penal Code, as under section 304, part II, he thought it safer to convict them under the former section, because the evidence showed that it was uncertain who had struck the fatal blow.

According to the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon (P. W. No. 1), no less than eight injuries were found on the body of the deceased, of which four were caused by some sharp edged weapon, and others by a blunt weapon. The most dangerous injury of these was an incised gaping wound 1½ inches by ¾ inch about the middle of the head. The bone underneath it was cut and the membrane and the brain were lacerated. There was a compound fracture under this wound. Kundan Singh (P. W. No. 3), his brother Kehr Singh (P. W. No. 8) and Jaimal Singh (P. W. No. 9) give direct evidence as to the occurrence and name the four appellants as the persons who assaulted the deceased with chhavis. The main contentions of Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of the defence are the following:—

(1) That the fight was probably due to a misunderstanding and being a sudden and unpremeditated fight a lenient view of the case should have been taken;

(2) The party of the appellants were entitled to resist the taking of water by the other side and have done nothing more than executing the right of self-defence.

(3) Arjan Singh, appellant should have been given the benefit of the doubt because of the material difference between the version in the first report and the version given by the deceased in the statement made by him on the 31st October 1921;

(4), All the appellants should not have been awarded the same amount of punishment because three of them who admittedly did not strike the deceased on the head did not deserve to receive the same punishment as those who were alleged to have struck him on the head.

I have considered all the above contentions along with the arguments addressed to me respecting them, but I think this appeal must fail. With regard to point No. 1 Pandit Sheo Narain says that admittedly the clock, which the parties used to consult for ascertaining time, was not available on the day in question, as the shop where the clock used to be was closed. He adds that probably what happened was that the party of the prosecution got to the spot earlier than the proper hour and wanted to take water before the time of the appellants' was up, or at least the appellants thought so. This, however, does not appear to be correct, because Kundan Singh deposes clearly that though the shop was shut, they sat outside the shop and started off for their fields only when they had heard the clock strike one. Therefore, while the quarrel appears to be a sudden and unpremeditated one, yet the fact of the shop in which the clock is placed, having been closed that day, cannot help the appellants in any way.

As regards point No. 2; in view of the opinion expressed by me above, it can hardly be argued that the appellants were within their rights in resisting the cutting off water by the party of Sudh Singh. There was no right of self defence and there is no question as to the exercise of that right or the exceeding of that right.

Point No. 3 is, however, arguable. It is stated in the first report that Arjan Singh gave the first blow on the head of the deceased and Inder Singh gave the second blow on the head and Waryam Singh and Tek Singh struck the deceased when he fell down. According to the statement of the deceased, dated the 31st October 1921, which was made before Khan, Bahadur Sher Baz Khan, Honorary Magistrate, and which is duly proved by him, it was Inder Singh, who struck the first blow on the head, and Tek Singh who gave another blow on the head, and it was Kishen Singh, brother of Arjan Singh, who is mentioned along with Waryam Singh as joining the assault. Pandit Sheo Narain lays great stress on this discrepancy between the first information report and the dying declaration, and argues that Arjan Singh deserves an acquittal on the ground that the deceased does not mention him as his assailant. This point has been duly considered by the learned Sessions Judge and he has come to the conclusion that the first report is entitled to much greater weight than the statement of the deceased. The report was made by Kundan Singh who was himself present and injured. He, therefore, knew all about the affair. The parties were well known to one another as they are related collaterally, and it is not likely, in such circumstances, that Kundan Singh would mistake Arjan Singh for Kishen Singh, when describing an offence committed in broad daylight. On the other hand, a confusion can possibly arise as to which of the two brothers Kishen Singh or Arjan Singh took part in the fight, when the injured man began to give his version after having received a serious injury to his head and having been unconscious for some time. The Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the name of Kishen Singh is given by mistake by the deceased in his statement and it was probably Arjan Singh who was in the mind of the deceased when he mentioned Kishen Singh. I think this is a reasonable view of the case and as Kundan Singh is not the only man who names Arjan Singh, but is supported by the other eye-witnesses, I agree with the learned Sessions Judge in holding that Arjan Singh was the man present in the fight and not Kishen Singh, and that, in this respect, the first report is certainly more worthy of reliance than the statement of the deceased.

Coming to the last point, I think the decision of the Court below is correct, so far as the giving of equal punishment to all the four men is concerned. As has been seen from a comparison of the version as given in the first report and the version in the dying declaration, it is difficult to say who struck the fatal blow. It may have been Arjan Singh or it may have been Inder Singh and, if the dying declaration is to be accepted, even Tek Singh is mentioned as giving a blow on the head. There are only two blows on the head and it is only one of them which is serious. Under such circumstances, it is not possible to hold definitely about any one of these four individuals that he caused the particular blow. If it was possible to decide that definitely, there would be reasons for giving the man responsible for that blow a heavier sentence than that awarded to his companions; but the state of things that has been found here is, that all the four appellants are said to have been armed with sticks to which they fixed chhavi blades when they began this assault, and, no matter what part of the body any of them struck, they all seem to have joined the assault armed with their deadly weapons and, considering the nature of the assault and the nature of the weapons, I do not think it can be said with regard to any one of them that he did not mean to cause serious injuries. There is very little to differentiate between them, and section 34, Indian Penal Code, makes them equally responsible in such cases. I think each one of them has been rightly given the same sentence.

It is contended that the sentence is a severe one, but I do not agree with this argument and hold that the sentences though deterrent, appear to be fully justified by the circumstances of this case. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal of all the four appellants and maintain their convictions and sentences.

It may be added that Kunda Singh has filed an application for revision, praying that the sentences of the appellants should be enhanced and urging that the Court was not right in convicting them under section 326, Indian Penal Code, instead of convicting them under section 304, Indian Penal Code. I have explained above the reason why the Trial Court has preferred the use of section 326, Indian Penal Code, instead of section 304, Indian Penal Code, and I do not think any material difference is made to the case by the adoption of this course by the learned Sessions Judge. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I do not see any sufficient reason for enhancing the sentences or for altering the section applied. The revision is, therefore, rejected.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 1493 OF 1922.

January 8, 1923.

Present:—Justice Sir William Ayling, Kt., and Mr. Justice Ramesam.

CHOLANCHERI AYAMMAD AND OTHERS
—APPELLANTS—PRISONERS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 57. (7)—Signature of Chief Secretary to Government, judicial notice of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 428—Appeal—Additional evidence.

Under section 57 (7) of the Evidence Act, a Court can take judicial notice of the signature of the Chief Secretary to Government just as of his accession to office, name, title and functions and the genuineness of his signature is not a matter which, unless the Court deems it necessary, need be proved. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Where there is no doubt as to the fact of a particular gentleman's appointment as Chief Secretary and its notification in the Gazette, the exhibition of a copy of the Gazette is not a necessary legal preliminary to the Court taking judicial notice of the genuineness of his signature.

It is open to an Appellate Court under section 428 of the Criminal Procedure Code to admit a document as additional evidence to cure a formal defect. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Observations of the Chief Justice in Varadavajulu Naidu v. Emperor, 51 Ind. Cas. 343; 42 M. 885; 20 Cr. L. J. 455; 37 M. L. J. 81; (1919) M. W. N. 669, followed.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Special Judge, Malabar, in S. J. C. No. 151 of 1922.

Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj, and C. Shridharan for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The nine appellants in this case have been convicted of an offence under section 12, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to transportation for life. They are said to have formed part of a body of some 3,000 Moplahs who marched on Tirurangadi Cutcherry on 20th August 1921. A small body of Police under two European Officers endeavoured to bring them to a stand and the two Officers with two Head Constables advanced to parley with the Moplahs. They were treacherously surrounded and murdered by the vanguard of the Moplahs consisting of about 1,000 armed men including the present appellants and the small Police force was driven to retreat. This was the encounter which inaugurated the Moplah Rebellion and there can be no doubt that if the evidence is accepted, all those who took part in the attack on the Police were guilty of an offence under section 121, Indian Penal Code (waging war against the King.)

A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. V. L. Ethiraj on behalf of the appellants that the sanction order (Exhibit A) required by section 196, Criminal Procedure Code, has not been properly proved. The order purports to be signed by Mr. R. A. Graham as Chief Secretary to Government and it is argued that the genuineness of his signature should be proved by evidence. It appears to have been the custom in cases of this nature to examine a witness to speak to the genuineness of the Chief Secretary's signature, but the learned Public Prosecutor points out (and in our opinion rightly) that under section 57 (7) of the Evidence Act, the Court can take judicial notice of this officer's signature just as of his accession to office, name, title and functions and the genuineness of his signature is not a matter which, unless the Court deems it necessary, need be proved.

To this Mr. Ethiraj replies with reference to the closing words of clause (7) that its applicability is contingent on the exhibition of a copy of the Fort Saint George Gazette containing a notification of Mr. Graham's appointment as Chief Secretary.

We do not think that this is the intention of the section. All that appears to be meant is to limit the application of the clause to what is known as "Gazetted Officers" that is, officers whose appointments are notified in the Gazette of India or Local Government Gazette. Of course, if there is any question or doubt as to whether the officer of whose signature, accession to office, name, title or functions the Court is asked to take judicial notice falls in this category, it would be the duty of the Court to satisfy itself on the point by the best evidence available. But whereas in the present case, no doubt has ever been raised as to the fact of Mr. Graham's appointment and its notification in the Fort Saint George Gazette, we do not think that the exhibition of a copy of the latter was a necessary legal preliminary to the Court taking judicial notice of the genuineness of his signature.

We may add that our attention has been drawn in Court to a notification in the Fort Saint George Gazette of 25th April 1922; (nearly a month before the date of Exhibit A) appointing Mr. Graham as Chief Secretary to Government and that if we had held that the exhibition of the Gazette containing this notification, were necessary, we should have admitted it under section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, to cure the defect. As authority for such a course, we are content to rely on the observations of the learned Chief Justice in Varadarajulu Naidu v. Emperor (1).

Passing to the merits of the case, the only question is, whether we can rely on the evidence adduced to show that the appellants formed part of the band which fell upon and butchered these four servants of the Crown. We have the evidence of four eye-witnesses (P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4) who all agree that the officers were murdered by a band of about 100 persons armed with knives, swords, and sticks and that the appellants were among those 100 persons although they cannot speak to any individual action. P. Ws. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 are constables forming part of the small force who saw what occurred from a distance of twenty or thirty yards. P. W. No. 4 is an ameen peon who witnessed it from a verandah only three or four yards away. The occurrence was at mid-day and the appellants are persons well-known to all these witnesses so that there is no reason why they should not have noticed and recognised them and been able to speak with certainty to their identity.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 343; 42 M. 88; 20 Cr. L. J. 455; 37 M. L. J. 81; (1919) M. W. N. 669.

ILAHIA v. EMPEROR.

There is corroborative evidence of two other witnesses, P. Ws. Nos. 5 and 9, who did not witness the actual encounter but depose to the presence of the appellants in the mob which gathered at Kizhakepalli and was harangued by the notorious Moplah leader Ali Musaliar, before proceeding to Tirurangadi. A third witness, P. W. No. 6, who gives similar evidence has not been relied on by the Special Judge and although we should not ourselves reject his evidence as without value, it is inferior to that of the others, and we may leave it out of consideration.

If P. W. Nos. 5 and 9 are speaking the truth, the direct evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 to 4 as to the participation of appellants in the crime is very powerfully corroborated whether we look to the possibility of a mistake or deliberate false testimony on the part of the latter. For there can be no doubt that it was the same assembly which Ali Musaliar harangued at Kizhakepalli which attacked the Poicle at Tirurangadi.

Endeavours have been made to discredit the testimony of both sets of witnesses on the score of private enmity as a motive for false testimony. The Special Judge has carefully dealt with this in his judgment and has, in our opinion, come to a right conclusion. Such prior feeling as has been established in evidence is limited to P. W. No. 2 and P. W. No. 9 who may be in a position to influence P. W. No. 5. P. Ws. Nos. 1, 3 and 4 are unaffected by it. No cause of ill-feeling of a really serious nature is elicited in the case P. W. No. 9 and although the alleged enmity in the case of P. W. No. 2 has its origin in a murder case of 1917, in which the latter's father-in-law was one of the accused, we agree with the Judge in thinking that it is hardly a likely cause for the malicious implication of the accused in this case.

The suggestion that accused have been falsely implicated merely as being notorious rebels concerned in other incidents of the Rebellion is too flimsy for serious consideration.

In our opinion the evidence of the above witnesses may be safely accepted.

We confirm the convictions and sentences and dismiss the appeal.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 397—“Such offender”, meaning of—Grievous hurt caused by one of several offenders—Others, whether liable to enhanced punishment.

The words “such offender” in section 397 of the Penal Code, refer to the offender who uses a deadly weapon or causes grievous hurt to any person, and do not include those who jointly commit robbery or dacoity with him. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 12th May 1922.

Mr. K. J. Rustomji, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the night between the 29th and 30th January 1922 a dacoity was committed in the house of Zaman Ali in Dhok Bangial in the Rawalpindi District. In the course of this dacoity one of Zaman Ali's ribs was broken with a blow by one of the dacoits. In connection with this seven persons were committed to take their trial before the Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi. Out of these he convicted six, viz., Sain Bak, Mardana, Ilahia, Karm Ilahi, Bak and Fattah Khan, under section 395 read with section 397, Indian Penal Code. The 7th accused Dina was acquitted. In the First Information Report the names of three accused persons, Ilahia, Mardana and Dina, were given by Zaman Ali as having been identified. He, his wife Musammât Baggo, and Niaz Ali, his step-son, gave evidence at the trial that they had identified them. The Sessions Judge, however, was of opinion for reasons fully given by him in his judgment that it would not be safe in this case to convict any of the accused persons upon the uncorroborated evidence of the eye-witnesses. In regard to all the accused, except Dira, articles of property stolen in the dacoity were either found in their possession or in the possession of persons to whom they had handed them over. All the accused produced such articles from various places or gave information which led to their recovery. No property was found in the possession of Dina nor did he give any information which led to the recovery of any. Sain Bak, Ilahia and Karam Ilahi have filed a joint appeal through Mr. Rustomji, Advocate, and Mardana, Bak and Fattah Khan have appealed through the Jail Authorities. Bak, in view of the fact that he had three previous convictions against him, was sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment; the other five appellants were sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each. The learned Sessions Judge found that it was not proved which of the appellants had given Zaman Ali the blow which fractured his rib, but he was of opinion, having regard to the decision of the Chief Court reported as Crown v. Mohra (1), that he could not pass a sentence of less than seven years' rigorous imprisonment upon any of the accused.

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is a very careful and elaborate one and deals in full detail with the various articles of property traced to each of the appellants. Mr. Rustomji in arguing the case for his clients has shown no reason whatever why I should reject any of the evidence as to identification of the property which has been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge and by the Assessors. In regard to the evidence of Sukhdial and Sant Singh, goldsmiths, he says that it is very easy to produce such evidence, but he gives no reason why these two witnesses should be regarded as unreliable. The appellants produced either no defence evidence at all or produced evidence of a worthless character and the learned Advocate for the three appellants has not asked me to accept any of the defence evidence. In my opinion the decision of the learned Sessions Judge as regards the six persons whom he has convicted is fully warranted by the evidence detailed in his judgment.

In Crown v. Mohra (1) it was certainly held that all persons taking part in a robbery or dacoity are liable to the minimum sentence laid down in section 397 if grievous hurt is caused by only one of them. In that case the Judges referred to Queen-Empress v. Mahabir Tiwari (2), but that ruling was specially dissented from in Queen-Empress v. Santok Singh (3) reported in Weekly Notes, N. W. P. of 1899 at page 186. The Madras High Court has taken a similar view. I am not aware of any reported cases of the Punjab Chief Court or of the High Court in which the view expressed in Crown v. Mohra (1) has been dissented from, but it is a fact that that view is not now-a-days followed in this Court and I do not agree with it. I fully concur in the reasoning of the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported as Queen-Empress v. Santok Singh (3). In my opinion the words "such offender" in section 397 clearly refer to the offender who uses a deadly weapon or causes grievous hurt to any person and not to those who jointly commit robbery or dacoity with him. The learned Sessions Judge has expressed his opinion that the dacoity was not of a bad type and has stated that had he not been bound to convict under sections 395 and 397, Indian Penal Code, he would not have given the accused, other than Bak, such a severe sentence as seven years' rigorous imprisonment. As regards Bak, having regard to his previous record, I consider that the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment is appropriate and I dismiss his appeal. As regards the other five appellants, I think the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment is somewhat excessive. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the dacoity was not of a bad type. No great violence was used to the inmates of Zaman Ali's house and only one blow

The Court of a Sessions Judge is the final Court on facts, and it is incumbent on a Sessions Judge in appeal to go into the evidence and to refer to it in such a manner as to show that he has applied his mind intelligently and carefully to the consideration of the evidence. [p. 519, col. 2.]

In a case of riot where a conflicting account of the occurrence is given by the prosecution and the defence and each party asserts that the opposite party was the aggressor, the Sessions Judge, in appeal, is bound to examine the evidence carefully so as to show that he is fully convinced on a consideration of the pros and cons of the case and the criticisms advanced on behalf of the defence that the account given by the prosecution is true and that the accused were the aggressors. [p. 519, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—We have carefully considered the judgments of the Courts below. The Appellate Court judgment does not afford much assistance in disposing of this application. Reading the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge one cannot feel satisfied that he examined the evidence in the case. His was the final Court on facts and it was incumbent on his part to go into the evidence and to refer to it in such a manner as might strike us that he had applied his mind intelligently and carefully to the consideration of the evidence in the case. The case was not an ordinary riot case. An occurrence admittedly did take place. The question was—which account of the occurrence is true—that given by the prosecution or the one given by the defence. The Magistrate who tried the case had in his judgment given indications that in some of the material parts of the case of the prosecution the evidence was unsatisfactory and unreliable. He had held that the motive alleged on behalf of the prosecution for such a serious riot was not proved. He also held that the loot alleged by the prosecution of the crop stored in the khalikan also did not take place. He went further and held that the number of the rioters was greatly exaggerated. He had adversely criticised most of the witnesses on behalf of the prosecution. There were injuries on both sides four on the prosecution side and three on the defence side. There was a free fight. In these circumstances, the learned Sessions Judge was bound to examine the evidence carefully so as to show that he was fully convinced upon the consideration of the pros and cons of the case and the criticisms advanced on behalf of the defence, that the account given by the prosecution was true and that the accused were the aggressors. This he has not done, and on the whole we are satisfied that the case is one in which we should not affirm the conviction.

Now, the Trial Court's judgment is, to say the least of it, a most confused one. It did not consider the individual case of the accused. Under section 148, Indian Penal Code, an accused can only be convicted if he in committing the riot is armed with a deadly weapon. The point does not seem to have struck the Trial Court. It does not seem to appreciate the distinction between sections 148 and 149, Indian Penal Code. In the charge the Trial Court mentioned 148/149. This is an incongruous and impossible charge. Again, as observed above, the Trial Court did not find that the accused really committed the offence under section 148, Indian Penal Code, by being present in the mob armed with deadly weapons. Therefore, the learned Assistant Government Advocate is right in conceding that the charge as framed cannot stand and that the accused could, if at all, have been convicted under section 147, Indian Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge also does not seem to have considered whether and how the charge under section 148, Indian Penal Code, was established.

Considering the facts and circumstances of the case, we set aside the conviction and the sentence passed upon the accused. The fine, if already paid, should be refunded.

Coutts, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 100—Right of private defence, extent of.

Under section 100 of the Penal Code, the right of private defence of the body extends, subject to the restrictions contained in section 99 of the Code, to the voluntary causing of death or of any other harm to the assailant, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right is such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault. [p. 521, col. 1.]

Accused, with three companions, who were unarmed, was proceeding to a threshing floor in order to claim a share of certain produce to which he alleged, he was entitled. On the way they met the deceased who asked them to stop. They did so. The deceased rushed to his house and returning with a dang struck a blow on the head of the accused. The accused retaliated by striking a blow at the head of the deceased which killed him;

Held, that the accused had acted in the exercise of the right of private defence of the body and was entitled to the benefit of section 100 of the Penal Code, and that it was immaterial that he intended to proceed to the threshing floor and enforce his right to a share of the produce. [p. 521, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, dated the 15th June 1922.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellant.

Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Akbar has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Mianwali of the culpable homicide not amounting to murder of Rohtas by striking him a single blow on the head with a wahola. Various discrepant accounts of what actually occurred have been given in the first information report and by the witnesses for the prosecution and these are set forth in detail by the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment. The Judge agreeing with the Assessors has accepted the version given by Nawaz Khan, P. W. No. 7. According to him there was a dispute between Muhammad Akbar and his relations on the one side and Rohtas and his relations on the other as to the produce of a certain piece of land, and it appears that on the day of the occurrence Muhammad Akbar, along with his father, uncle and cousin, was proceeding to the threshing floor of Khalil Khan in order to get the half share of the produce claimed by them. Muhammad Akbar had in his hand a wahola such as zemindars, according to Nawaz Khan, usually carry with them when they are winnowing their crops. The other three men with him had no weapons. Rohtas was having a bath in a khola and seeing them came out. He had only a loin cloth on him and told Muhammad Akbar to stop. He then went back to his house and Nawaz Khan, fearing that there would be a fight, told his mother to shut him inside the house. This she did, but in spite of it he came out with a dang and when Nawaz Khan tried to stop him he got past him and struck a blow on the head of Muhammad Akbar with the dang. Muhammad Akbar had a chadar tied on his head as protection against the sun and the blow glanced off his head and fell on his shoulder. That he did receive a blow of this sort is supported by the Medical evidence. Muhammad Akbar retaliated by striking Rohtas on the head with the wahola which he was carrying.

MAUNG TUN AUNG GYAW, in the matter of.

This blow fractured Rohtas' skull and resulted in his death.

The Sessions Judge is of opinion that the appellant could not plead that he was acting in the exercise of his right of private defence because he, accompanied by his relations, had gone to the threshing floor with the intention of enforcing his right to a share in the produce. At the same time, the Judge admits that nothing would have happened had not Rohtas been so excited and rushed out of his house and attacked Muhammad Akbar. Now, according to Nawaz Khan, the appellant and his relations were proceeding to the threshing floor when the witness told them not to do so and they stopped. It does not appear that their attitude was in any way aggressive when Rohtas rushed out and without being attacked or threatened in any way struck a blow on Muhammad Akbar's head with a dang. Rohtas was evidently in a violent rage at the time, and I cannot agree with the learned Sessions Judge that Muhammad Akbar was not entitled to defend himself against such an attack, simply because he and his companions had gone to get the share of the produce to which they thought they were entitled. The case would have been different had Muhammad Akbar's companions also been armed and had their attitude shown that they intended to take the share of produce by force if necessary. According to section 100, Indian Penal Code, the right of private defence of the body extends under the restrictions mentioned in section 99, to the voluntary causing of death or of any other harm to the assailant, if the offence which occasions the exercise of the right be such an assault as may reasonably cause the apprehension that death or grievous hurt will otherwise be the consequence of such assault. Now, having regard to the evidence of Nawaz Khan, I have no doubt at all that the assault committed by Rohtas was such as might reasonably cause to Muhammad Akbar the apprehension that death or grievous hurt would result to him if he did not strike Rohtas. He used the weapon which he had in his hand at the time and I see no reason to suppose that he took the waholr with him in order to use it as a weapon of offence. He only struck one blow which unfortunately resulted in the death of Rohtas. In my opinion, he is clearly entitled to the benefit of section 100 and I, therefore, accept the appeal set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit him and order that he be released from custody.

Under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act, any Court in which a Pleader practises is competent to enquire into a charge of misconduct made against him. [p. 523, col. 1.]

Mr. Surty, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Maung Tun Aung Gyaw is a Pleader of the third grade practising at Ngathainggyaung. He has been charged by this Court (1) with removing a record containing Police diaries, Police papers and the Station-House Officer's confidential instructions to the Court Prosecutor, and (2) with having taken copies of the Police record from his dictation without having previously obtained permission from the Presiding Officer of the Court in which the record was.

The Police sent up one Maung Sein Hmon to the Court of the Township Magistrate, Ngathainggyaung, to stand his trial under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate transferred the case to the Court of the Additional Magistrate. That Magistrate thought he should not try the case as he was related to the accused and passed orders for the record to be sent to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for orders on the point raised. The Clerk of the Court then got the record and the Police file stitched together to be sent under cover to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. He had not put it under cover, when he had to go to the Additional Magistrate. In his absence the Pleader is alleged to have removed the record to some other table and there read out the contents of the Police record to Maung Sein Hmon who took down what was read to him.

A report was made to the Township Magistrate of Ngathainggyaung of the conduct of the Pleader. The Magistrate then made a preliminary enquiry examining all the witnesses named, with the result that charges were framed as aforesaid against the Pleader, and he was called upon to show cause why his conduct should not be reported to this Court. This order was passed on the 15th November 1920 and served on the Pleader on the same date. The date fixed on which the charges were to be taken into consideration was the 3rd of December 1920. On the 2nd of December the Pleader filed his explanation in writing, in which he said he had notes made by Maung Sein Hmon of the date of the First Information Report and as to who the witnesses were, but that he did not look at any confidential letter on the Police record and did not know whether there was such a document on it. He further stated that he did not take away the record from the clerk's table, and that the notes were made only at that table. On the day fixed for the consideration of the charges, he did not appear before the Court. It is perfectly clear that there were witnesses present ready to be examined, but, as the Pleader did not appear, the Magistrate considered that it was not necessary to record the evidence ex parte because the result would be a mere repetition of what had been done before, and he proceeded to write his report to this Court, recommending that the Pleader be dismissed. The District Magistrate also recommends the same punishment, but the Sessions Judge recommends that the Pleader be suspended from practice for a period of two years.

The Pleader has now appeared before this Court to show cause. His Pleader, Mr. Surty, contends that the Township Magistrate was not competent to enquire into the charges because they were not committed in his Court but in that of the Additional Magistrate; secondly, that his client had not been given 15 days' notice of the hearing of the charges; and, thirdly, that the Township Magistrate did not, on the day fixed for the hearing, record any evidence in support of the charges. These contentions are made under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act and Mr. Surty submits that any one of them is sufficient to vitiate the Township Magistrate's proceedings.

In support of the first contention Mr. Surty cites the case of In the matter of Radha Churn Chuckerbutty (1) in which Mitra and Holmwood, JJ., held that the improper conduct, if any, of the Pleaders related to suits then pending in the Court of the Munsif, and that that Court was the proper Court to make an enquiry under section 14 of the Act. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate had made the enquiry and the Pleaders were Civil and Criminal Courts' mukhtars and were authorised by their certificates to practise in both classes of Courts. The learned Judges held that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted improperly and without jurisdiction in framing a charge for the purpose of holding an enquiry into the alleged misconduct of the petitioner. With great respect to the learned Judges I am unable to follow their ruling. The first paragraph of section 14 which has reference to the point under consideration is as follows:—
"If any such Pleader or mukhtar practising in any Subordinate Court, or in any Revenue Office, is charged in such Court or office with taking instructions except as aforesaid, or with any such misconduct as aforesaid, the Presiding Officer shall send him a copy of the charge, and also a notice that, on a day to be therein appointed, such charge will be taken into consideration." The important words are "if any such Pleader or mukhtar practising in any subordinate Court is charged in such Court." "Such Court" must, in my opinion, be the Court in which the Pleader practises and not necessarily the Court in which the Pleader commits the offence charged against him. Section 32 which punishes persons illegally practising as Pleaders runs (leaving out what is immaterial for the present purpose) as follows:—"Any person who practises in any Court..shall be liable by order of such Court to a fine." In the matter of the petition of Ganga Dyal (2) the expression "such Court" was held to be the Court in which the Pleader proceeded against practices. Two Pleaders and a mukhtar, who were entitled to practise in the Courts of the Cawnpore District, appeared in a case in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate, Fatehgarh. For so doing they were convicted by the Magistrate of the latter District. They applied to the High Court to revise the order of the Magistrate on the ground, amongst others, that he was not competent to proceed against them under section 32 of the Act, XVIII of 1879, as they had not practised in his Court. Oldfield, J., held that the objection was valid and that section 32 only rendered a person practising in a Court liable by order of such Court to a fine. Therefore, the Court which might impose a penalty was the Court of the Deputy Magistrate and not that of the Magistrate of the District, who would have no jurisdiction under the terms of the sections. In the matter of Babu Het Ram (3), Reid and Robertson, JJ., of the Chief Court of the Punjab, held that the first clause of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act empowers any Court in which a Pleader practises to consider a charge of misconduct made against him in such Court, and that the section does not limit the consideration of the charge to the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. So that it seems immaterial that the misconduct charged was committed in another Court. If the charge is made in the Court in which the Pleader practises, that Court is competent to enquire into it. In my opinion the expression "such Court" in the first clause of section 14 cannot be construed to mean the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. The section only means that any Court in which a Pleader practises is competent to enquire into a charge of misconduct, if the charge is brought in that Court.

March 24, 1922.

Present.—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

Lala KHAN CHAND—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 197, application of—Canal Zilladar, prosecution of—Sanction, whether necessary.

A Canal Irrigation Department Zilladar appointed by the Local Government, before the right to appoint such Zilladars was given to the Chief Engineer of the Department, cannot be prosecuted without the previous sanction of the Local Government under section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 524, col. 2.]

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, in Case No. 115G, dated the 20th January 1922.

FACTS.—Khan Chand, a Zilladar of the Canal Irrigation Department, is being prosecuted in 12 separate cases under section 161 for accepting illegal gratifications and under section 384 for extortion. The complaints have been instituted by the Colony Assistant under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner. An objection was taken by the accused person that as he was not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government the Court could not take cognizance of the offences without the previous sanction of the Local Government.

(2) 4 A. 375; A. N. W. (1882) 67; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 980.

The accused's objection was overruled by Rai Sahib Lala Murari Lal, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class in the District, by order dated 21st November 1921.

GROUND.—The Magistrate held that the accused was removable from his office by the Chief Engineer and, therefore, the sanction of the Local Government under section 197 was not necessary.

Reliance was placed on certain rules contained in the Irrigation Manual and promulgated on the 4th January 1917 that the appointment, suspension and removal of Zilladars would in future rest with the Chief Engineer. The accused was admittedly appointed before 1917 when these powers vested in the Local Government alone and it was contended that, under paragraph 50 of the Public Works Department Code, 10th Edition, this power in the case of appointments made prior to 1917 still remained with the Local Government. The rule quoted runs as follows:—

“When no special rule is laid down the authority by which a person was appointed, and no inferior authority, is competent to dismiss him, to remove him from the Department or to accept his resignation.”

This rule certainly supports the contention of the petitioner and the learned Vakil, who appeared for the Crown, was unable to refer to this contention which receives further support from an endorsement by the Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department dated 15th December 1921, on the application of petitioner and which I have marked (A). Prima facie it does seem absurd that while entrants to the Zilladar line of the Canal Department after 4th January 1917, can be removed from office by the Chief Engineer, those appointed previously cannot be removed without the sanction of the Local Government. It would appear that the framers of the new rules failed to make provision for these previous appointments in accordance with rule 50 quoted above. To obviate a reference to the Hon'ble High Court I suggested to the District Magistrate that the complaints might be withdrawn and the sanction of Government obtained but he prefers a reference being made. I, therefore, submit the proceedings with the recommendation that the proceedings at present taken and pending against the petitioner in the Court of the Magistrate mentioned above be quashed as being without jurisdiction for the reasons given above.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Respondent.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Proceedings were instituted for the prosecution of Khan Chand, Zilladar, under sections 384 and 161, Indian Penal Code. A preliminary objection was taken that the cases could not proceed against him without the sanction of the Local Government under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate overruled the objection and held that as Khan Chand was liable to be removed by the Chief Engineer, section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, did not apply and ordered the case to proceed. The learned Sessions Judge of Shahpur, at Sargodha, has made a reference to this Court recommending that the proceedings at present taken and pending against the petitioner in the Court of the Magistrate be quashed as being without jurisdiction for the reasons given above. Notice was issued to the District Magistrate to show cause. The learned Government Advocate has appeared on behalf of the Crown and it has been admitted by him that, inasmuch as the accused was admittedly appointed before 1917 when the powers of the suspension and removal of a Zilladar were vested in the Local Government alone, the cases could not proceed without the necessary sanction under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code. It is admitted by him that the cases cannot proceed according to law.

In my opinion the course adopted by the learned Government Advocate is a right one. Having regard to the provisions of section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, no other view is possible. I, therefore, quash the proceedings at present pending in the Court of Lala Murari Lal, Magistrate First Class, at Sargodha, in the Shahpur District, against the petitioner Khan Chand, Zilladar. The papers will be returned.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 346, 438—Case submitted by inferior Magistrate to superior Magistrate—Procedure—Discharge, order of, set aside—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

It is a general principle of the Code of Criminal Procedure that evidence taken by one Magistrate is not evidence in a trial before another Magistrate unless some provision of law expressly makes it so. The mere consent of the parties is not sufficient for the purpose. [p. 525, col. 2.]

In re Kottammal Kolathingal Ummar Hajee, 69 Ind. Cas. 636; 16 L. W. 697; (1922) M. W. N. 644; 43 M. L. J. 659; (1923) A. I. R. (M) 32; 23 Cr. L. J. 748, followed.

Where a Second Class Magistrate, who was not competent to try a case, submitted it to a superior Magistrate under section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the latter Magistrate made an order of discharge merely after hearing arguments on the evidence already taken by the inferior Magistrate:

Held, that it could not be said that the superior Magistrate had tried the case himself within the meaning of section 346 clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the order passed by him was, therefore, illegal. [p. 525, col. 2.]

Though as a general rule notice should go to an accused person before an order is made to his prejudice, where the question arising is one of law and the accused has not been prejudiced by want of notice, an order without notice which is otherwise correct will not be set aside. [p. 526, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Magistrate, Vizagapatam, in his proceedings in L. Dis. No. 437 of 1922, C-2, dated the 21st February 1922 against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional, First Class Magistrate, Narasapatam, in C. C. No. 28 of 1921.

Mr. S. Subramania Sastry, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, Mr. J. C. Adam, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, acting solely on the evidence taken by the Second Class Magistrate who had sent up the case to him under section 346 of the Code of Criminal Procedure because he could not himself try the offence disclosed by the evidence, discharged the accused. The Prosecuting Inspector who was conducting the case for the Crown seems to have agreed to this course. The District Magistrate, however, set aside the order of discharge on the ground that the course pursued by the Magistrate was illegal and has ordered a fresh enquiry. It is argued before me that the view taken by the District Magistrate is wrong.

Now, it may be taken as a general principle of the Code of Criminal Procedure that evidence taken by one Magistrate is not evidence in a trial before another Magistrate unless some provision of law expressly makes it so. Mere consent of parties will not do. See In re Kottammal Kolathingal Ummar Hajee (1). No doubt that was a case where the Court's interference was sought on behalf of the accused. The same rule, it seems to me, should apply to the case of the prosecution also. The ruling in Jainab Bibi Saheba v. Hyderally Saheb (2) referred to was in a civil case and does not apply to a criminal case at all.

Section 346, Criminal Procedure Code, clause (2) says what the Magistrate to whom the case is submitted is to do. He may try the case himself or refer it to any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction or commit the accused for trial. In this case the Magistrate elected to adopt the first alternative; he was, therefore, bound to try the case himself. I do not think passing orders on evidence taken by another Magistrate who was not competent to try the case after merely hearing arguments, can be considered to be a "trying the case himself." When the Code intends that the Magistrate to whom a case is submitted may act on evidence already taken, it makes it quite clear as in section 349, Criminal Procedure Code.

It was also objected that the accused had no notice before the order of discharge was set aside. Notice is not absolutely necessary in such cases and in this case the accused cannot be said to have been prejudiced by want of it as the question is one of law on which that order was set aside and the accused has been heard in full before me. The want of notice is thus not a ground in this case to set aside the order of the District Magistrate, though, as a general rule, notice should go to the accused before an order is made to his prejudice.

The petition fails and is dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Theft—Dishonest removal—Wrongful gain or loss.

In order to constitute theft there must be dishonesty. [p. 527, col. 1.]

Certain articles belonging to the accused were attached and secured in his own shop, but possession was transferred to the decree-holder under a bond in Form No. 15-A, Appendix E to O. XLI, r. 3, of the Civil Procedure Code. The accused preferred a claim to the articles which was allowed. The accused thereupon took forcible possession of the articles in the absence of the decree-holder;

Held, that the act of the accused did not amount to theft inasmuch as there was no intention to cause wrongful loss to the complainant or wrongful gain to the accused. [p. 527, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Session of West Tanjore Division, at Tanjore, in Criminal Revision Petition No. 21 of 1921, preferred against the order of the Court of the Second Class Magistrate, Nannilam, in C. C. No. 119 of 1921.

The judgment of the Sessions Judge was as follows:—

“The complaint in this case was, that the three accused broke open the lock of a shop and committed theft of maligai articles worth Rs. 1,500 and odd. The articles had been attached in execution of a decree in Original Suit No. 397 of 1918 of the Principal District Munsif's Court of Tiruvalur and had been left in charge of the petitioner who had obtained an assignment of the decree and executed it under O. XXI, r. 43 (1), Civil Procedure Code, as amended by the Madras High Court Rules. This was sometime in March 1919. First accused put in a claim petition in respect of the articles, which was allowed. He did not, however, take delivery through Court but is alleged, along with the second and third accused, to have taken forcible possession during the petitioner's absence in Shiyali and Madras, in February 1920. Upon these facts, the Sub-Magistrate thought that the offence, if any, was one under section 206, Indian Penal Code; and that the sanction of the District Munsif was required, and discharged the accused for want of such sanction. It seems to me that this view is erroneous. The accused are not charged with fraudulent removal of goods with intention to prevent their being taken in execution of a decree. The property had already been taken in execution. The Sub-Magistrate says that this does not make it the petitioner's private property. What he has failed to observe is, that the property had been made over to petitioner's possession under a bond in Form No. 15 A Appendix E, to O. XX, r. 73 under which he was bound to pay a certain amount to the Court, if he shall not duly account for and produce when required before the Court the property that had been left in his charge. Clearly, therefore, the property was left in his possession and any taking of it out of his possession without his consent, if the act was done dishonestly, as it is alleged to have been done here, is theft.

NARAIN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

"I must, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court and I hereby direct further inquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code."

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Government.

ORDER.—As the accused was only taking his own property which had been secured in his own shop, it is difficult to see how his act would be criminal. In order to constitute theft, there must be dishonesty, and it cannot be argued that accused intended to cause wrongful loss to complainant or wrongful gain to himself. Any loss that complainant might sustain owing to his inability to comply with the terms of his security-bond could be remedied by civil proceedings. The Sessions Judge's order is, therefore, set aside.

Procedure—Joint and separate trials—Evidence recorded once only—Irregularity.

Where several cases were being tried separately but the evidence of those witnesses who were common to all the cases was recorded only once, it being merely read out in the other cases, with the consent of the Counsel for the accused:

Held, that the procedure adopted was irregular, but that in the absence of any prejudice having been caused to the accused, the irregularity did not affect the validity of the trial. [p. 528, col. 1.]

Mr. Kanwar Narain, for Mr. D. N. Mehra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Criminal Appeals Nos. 575, 576 and 596 are by three persons who have been convicted by a Magistrate with section 30 powers of illegal possession of chhavis and have been sentenced under section 20 of the Arms Act to 4½ years' rigorous imprisonment each.

The appellants were tried separately, but as a great deal of the evidence is the same in all the cases, the appeals may conveniently be disposed of by one judgment.

The appellants, who all got out of the same train at the Dhariwal Railway Station, were searched as suspicious characters by the Police in the presence of reliable witnesses. They were carrying dangs, and chhavi blades were found in the waistcoat pocket of one and in the loin cloths of the other two.

The first point raised in appeal is, that the appellants were not really tried separately at all, but that there was a joint trial, and that this was illegal being opposed to the procedure laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code. After an examination of the records of the three cases, it is clear to me that the trials were separate and not joint. The case of Thakar Singh was taken up first and at the conclusion of the statement of Sardar Sant Singh, Sub-Inspector, the Magistrate recorded the following note:—

"All three of the accused have been present during the course of the examination of this witness. Counsel for the three accused agree that the statement of the witness be read over in the connected cases as well. They agree that their clients will not be in any way prejudiced in this way and it will be a great saving of time."

The rest of the witnesses in Thakar Singh's case were then examined, and the cases against Makhan Singh and Narain Singh were subsequently taken up. The witnesses were again put into the witness-box and the statements made by them in Thakar Singh's case were read over to them. They admitted them to be correct and said that they had nothing to add. In Makhan Singh's case P.W. No. 5, Hafizulla Beg, was the Constable who had himself arrested him and conducted his search. He was not a witness in the case of Thakar Singh at all. Similarly, in the case of Narain Singh, Din Mohammad Constable, P. W. No. 5, was the witness who conducted the search of Narain Singh's person and was not a witness in the other two cases at all. It is, therefore, clear that the trials were separate. There is no doubt that the procedure adopted of reading out the statements of witnesses recorded in the first case was irregular, but it is quite clear that no prejudice has been caused to any of the appellants by this course which, according to the learned Sessions Judge, was suggested by appellants' Counsel. The only authority cited which has any bearing on the present case is that reported in Nathu Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1). In that case four persons were accused of having given false evidence in the same proceeding and the Sessions Judge, while professing to try each case separately, heard the evidence of the witnesses only once. The High Court held that this was an error in the proceedings which would probably have proved fatal to the convictions, but these were set aside on the merits and the point was not, therefore, decided. Moreover, it is not clear from the judgment whether the facts were on all fours with the present case or not. I do not think that this is a case to which the well-known ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Subrahmaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2) is applicable.

On the merits, I am of opinion that the case against each of the appellants is clearly established. The evidence as to the search of their persons is quite conclusive and is very reliable. The petty discrepancies pointed out by Counsel are quite immaterial, and do not at all shake the credibility of the witnesses. The convictions are, I consider, fully justified by the evidence. The learned Magistrate has given good reasons for awarding heavy sentences, and, having regard to the local circumstances of the District at the time, I do not consider the sentence to be too heavy. The question whether any particular case of illegal possession of arms comes under section 19 (f) or section 20 of the Arms Act must be decided on its own facts as was laid down in Khem Singh v. Emperor (3). I am not prepared to agree with all the remarks of the learned Judge who decided the case reported as Ibrahim v. Emperor (4), and the facts of that case are not on all fours with the present one. Here the appellants had removed the chhavi blades from their shafts and had concealed them about their persons with the obvious intention referred to in section 20 of the Act. The appeals are accordingly dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 157—"Testimony," meaning of—Deposition before Committing Magistrate—Corroboration by previous statement.

The object and effect of section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to place the deposition in the committal inquiry on exactly the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court. Such a deposition is "testimony" within the meaning of section 157 of the Evidence Act, which a prior statement by the witness is admissible in evidence to corroborate. [p. 530, col. 1.]

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Ayling, J.—Accused in this case has been convicted of the murder of an old woman named Pichai and sentenced to death.

The prosecution case is as follows:—Deceased was a relation of accused, and on her husband's death came to live in his house, bringing with her a sum of Rs. 200 which she lent him to pay off a mortgage. Subsequently, disputes arose and she wanted the money back and moved into a small hut close to accused's where she lived by herself. So far there is no dispute.

According to the defence, the accused managed to pay off the debt to deceased by selling his wife's jewels. According to the prosecution, he did not; and the wrangling continued, culminating in a furious quarrel on the night of December 29th. Even after bed time, deceased continued to abuse accused from her hut and at last the man infuriated beyond endurance, went out and throttled her. He then tied her body in a sack with some heavy stones, and at about day-break carried it to a well about 150 yards away and threw it in. There the body was found 4 days later and accused was arrested.

The above facts are practically all contained in two statements recorded by the Sub-Magistrate from accused's wife, Subbammal, P. W. No. 2, the first, Exhibit D., under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, on 4th January 1922, and the second, Exhibit C, in the course of the committal enquiry a week later. These statements, if accepted, leave no possible room for doubt as to the commission of the murder by the accused. Subbammal did not actually see the murder but she deposes to her husband going to deceased's hut, to hearing the latter's cries and the sound of blows, to her husband's returning and fetching a gunny bag and rope and threatening her to make her keep quiet. She subsequently fled to her mother's house and stayed there. In the Sessions Court, she resiled from the most important part of the above story and swore that her husband did not leave the house and that her earlier statements were enforced by Police ill-treatment. Her deposition before the Committing Magistrate, Exhibit C., was, therefore, treated as evidence under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code: and the case turns very largely on whether it can safely be accepted as true.

A preliminary point of some importance has been raised as to whether the first statement, Exhibit D, is relevant under section 157, Indian Evidence Act, to corroborate the deposition Exhibit C. It is not disputed that Exhibit D is a statement which would be admissible under the terms of the section to corroborate a statement to the same effect, if made in the witness-box in the Sessions Court; but it is argued for appellant that the deposition before the Committing Magistrate is not "testimony" within the meaning of section 157 and that the latter section will not apply to the present case.

The authority for this view is the judgment in Emperor v. Akbar Badu (1) in which the learned Judge certainly ruled that "previous statements may be used to corroborate or contradict statements made at the trial: not to corroborate statements made prior to the trial." In the latter category they included a statement made as in the present case in the course of the committal enquiry.

No reasons are given: and no other case has been quoted to us in which the same view has been taken.

With all respect, it seems to me to be wrong. I know of no reason why the word 'testimony' in section 157, Indian Evidence Act, should be given this artificial limitation; and the object and effect of section 288, Criminal Procedure Code, seems to me to be to place the deposition in the committal enquiry on exactly the same footing as the deposition in the Sessions Court; of course, such a statement would be accepted with great caution like every statement of a person who has changed his story at different stages. But it is evidence in the case; and it is equally in the discretion of the Sessions Judge to believe it and act on it in preference to the deposition in his own Court, as it would be to believe and act on the latter in preference to a contradictory statement before the Committing Magistrate. Vide judgment of Aikman, J., in Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (2) and also Queen-Emprass v. Dorasami Aiyar (3). If this is so, then the credibility of the statement in the Committing Magistrate's Court must be considered and tested in exactly the same way as one made in the Sessions Court.

and it is of the utmost importance to know how it compares with statements made soon after the event or before a competent authority. No one will deny that, apart from any rule of law, comparison with a statement recorded in the circumstances in which Exhibit D was taken affords a very valuable test of the truth of any later statement.

My view is not unsupported by authority; vide a case reported as In re Bayanna, (4) in which Collins, C. J., and Benson, J., held that a statement of a witness made at the inquest could be used to corroborate her statement in the committal enquiry, although she entirely resiled from the latter in the Sessions Court.

I, therefore, hold that Exhibit D is admissible under section 157, Indian Evidence Act, to corroborate Exhibit C.

For this purpose it is not without importance. The two statements substantially agree, and a perusal of either leaves in my mind a strong impression of naturalness and truth. I should be prepared to accept Exhibit C without Exhibit D, but I am confirmed in this view by the fact that the young woman told the same story at the earliest opportunity. Exhibit D was, of course, taken on the day after the inquest, but she herself admits, and it is not disputed, that she gave the same story at the inquest itself.

She now seeks to explain that these statements were enforced and tutored. At one passage she says that the Police took her to the choultry, took off her clothes and ill-treated her. At another she says that they threatened to take off her cloth and disgrace her. I do not wish to emphasise this discrepancy; but there is nothing to support the idea that anything of the kind occurred, and it is impossible to believe that the very detailed and natural story which the witness told was obtained in this way. I may also refer to the evidence of one of the panchayatdars, P. W. No. 6, a respectable and disinterested man worth half a lakh of rupees.

I do not believe the story of ill-treatment; and, on the other hand, the action of the witness in resiling to save her husband is quite natural.

VELLIAH KONE v. EMPEROR.

There is also the evidence of another woman, a neighbour, P. W. No. 3. Her earlier statements, Exhibits E and F, recorded at the same time as Exhibits C and D, fully corroborate the latter, but in the Sessions Court she also has resiled though not quite to the same extent as P. W. No. 2. She speaks to the quarrel and says, that on the night she heard cries, in what she took to be Pichai's (deceased's) voice; but she withdraws her earlier statement that she got up and saw accused entering or leaving deceased's hut and says they were made through fear of the Police. Here also I can find no foundation for the allegation against the Police; and, although the motive of affection is absent in the case of this woman, I think it quite probable that sympathy with her neighbours would induce her to keep in line with P. W. No. 2.

Lastly, there is the evidence of another neighbour, P. W. No. 4, who, besides deposing to the quarrel on Thursday evening, says that early next morning he saw accused going from his house in the direction of the well with a gunny bag, which the witness thought to contain Palmyra nuts. It is suggested that this contained the corpse. The witness says he felt no suspicion till the discovery of the corpse in the well when he gave information of what he had seen. He was examined at the inquest.

This witness appears to be quite disinterested; and I see no reason why he should not be believed. It is urged that it is most improbable that the accused would have postponed the disposal of the body till, as would appear from P. W. No. 4's evidence, it was getting light. The reason possibly lies in the fact that accused admittedly suffers from some kind of night blindness, and cannot see as well as most people at night. It may be suggested that this renders the perpetration of the murder by him improbable but even a blind man might without much difficulty grope his way across the few yards to deceased's hut and seize and murder her in the confined space. To carry a body 150 yards to a well is a very different matter.

The above evidence taken together appears to me to fully warrant the conviction. It is not suggested that any one else had a personal motive to murder deceased; and in the circumstances the theory of robbery as a motive may be discarded. It would only be possible, if accused's tale of the re-payment of the money were believed; and no attempt has been made to prove this though, if true, it should be easy to adduce some evidence of it.

In his appeal petition accused has indulged in wild allegations that his wife is on intimate terms with P. W. No. 4, and with P. W. No. 6 actually committed the murder, and cooked up a case against him; allegations unsupported by anything, and which I can only reject as worthless and baseless.

I think the conviction must be confirmed; but I am inclined to reduce the sentence. If the wife's statement in Exhibits C and D are accepted, (and I believe them to be quite true), the murder was not committed with the deliberate object of making away with an inconvenient creditor, but in a fit of sudden fury provoked by the old woman's persistent stream of abuse.

I think in such circumstances, a sentence of transportation for life is sufficient, and I would commute the sentence accordingly.

Oggers, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment just now delivered in which the facts are fully set out. There is no doubt to my mind that the conviction of the accused is right if the statements of Subbammal, (the wife of the accused) and Chinnammal, in the Magistrate's Court, can be accepted in preference to their statements before the Sessions Judge. This is the only point with which I propose to deal. Subbammal in Exhibits C and C-1 before the Sub-Magistrate clearly speaks to the abuse of her husband by Pichai and to the fact that he went inside her house, dealt her two blows and she cried out, "He has caught hold of the throat and is killing," and she also speaks to the fact of the gunny bag in which the corpse was tied as belonging to her house. Subbammal said exactly the same thing in Exhibit D before the Investigating Officer. She also adds that her husband actually went towards the west carrying a gunny bag on his head which is corroborated by a witness, P. W. No. 4, against whom nothing has been suggested. The statements of Chinnammal are not quite so consistent.

VELLIAH KONE v. EMPEROR.

In her statement before the Investigating Officer she says that the deceased went inside the house of Pichai whom she heard crying out at midnight: "He is pressing my throat and killing me." Before the Committing Magistrate she repeats the statement, but there seems to be some doubt as to whether she was in or outside the house when she heard the cry. The question is: Can the statement before the Committing Magistrate be accepted in preference to those before the Sessions Judge from the fact that the former are corroborated by the statements made before the Investigating Officer. Section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code clearly says that the evidence taken before the Committing Magistrate may, in the discretion of the Judge, be treated as evidence in the case if such witness is examined and there is abundant authority, it seems to me, for holding that this evidence once admitted at the discretion of the Judge stands on exactly the same footing as any other evidence in the case. See Reg. v. Arjun Megha (5), Emperor v. Dwarka Kurmi (2) and Queen-Empress v. Dorasami Ayyar (3). It was not argued before us that the Sessions Judge has exercised his discretion wrongly, or that he should not have admitted in evidence the statements made before the Committing Magistrate. Further, the Police were examined to disprove any allegation of pressure by them.

Section 157 of the Evidence Act says that, "in order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved." There is an authority in Emperor v. Akbar Badu (1) to the effect that only the statements of the witnesses made to the Trying Court can be corroborated in the manner contemplated by section 157; previous statements may be used to corroborate or contradict the statements made at the trial, not to corroborate statements made prior to the trial. With all respect, it seems to me that under section 288, Criminal Procedure Code and the authorities quoted above to the effect that once admitted, evidence before the Committing Magistrate stands exactly on the same level as any other evidence in the case, it cannot be said that any previous statement taken before the competent investigating authority cannot be used to corroborate the statements made before the Committing Magistrate which is made by section 288 part of the evidence at the trial. No authority is quoted for the proposition laid down by the Bombay High Court: and in view of the fact that the object of enacting section 157 of the Evidence Act proceeded upon the principle that consistency is a ground for belief in the witness's veracity, contrary to the English rule, this state of the law cannot be supported. The view I venture to take finds support in a case reported as In re Bayanna (4) of our own Court. Where Collins, C. J., and Benson, J., held that a statement made at the inquest could only be used to corroborate or to contradict a subsequent statement of the witnesses admissible as evidence. They go on: "The only use the prosecution could make of her statement at the inquest would be to partially corroborate her statement to the Magistrate, but when that statement is itself unworthy of credit, it cannot be materially strengthened by showing that the witness had previously made a statement partly in agreement and partly in direct and material disagreement with it." The learned Judges would, therefore, appear to be clearly of opinion that the statement made at the inquest might be used to corroborate the subsequent statement of the witness admissible as evidence that is such as a deposition before a Committing Magistrate which is admissible as evidence under the circumstances detailed in section 288, Criminal Procedure Code. I, therefore, think that the statements Exhibits C and C-1 and F, corroborated as they are by their previous statements before the Investigating Officer are to be preferred to the evidence given by these witnesses before the Sessions Court, especially when we reflect that one of the witnesses is the accused's own wife. As to the other consideration arising on the facts of this case, I have had the advantage of considering the judgment just pronounced and I agree with the conclusions arrived at Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 304, 323, 325, 366—Abducting woman to compel marriage—Ingredients of offence—Culpable homicide—Death caused owing to enlarged spleen—Simple hurt.

In order to fall under section 366 of the Penal Code an abduction must be accompanied by the intention or knowledge specified in the section. [p. 535, col. 1.]

Where a woman was abducted by a man whom she had not married but with whom she had lived willingly for a couple of months as his wife before the abduction and whom she probably intended to marry:

Held, that an offence under section 366 of the Penal Code had not been established. [p. 535, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a person dies as the result of simple injuries owing to the fact that his spleen is diseased and it is not shown that the accused had knowledge of this fact, he can only be convicted of causing simple hurt. [p. 535, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 6th April 1922, convicting the appellants.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a joint appeal by six persons Bhajan Das, Haku, Ganga Jat, Fakiria, Ganga Barber and Arjan, who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hoshiarpur of offences under sections 366-149, 325-149 and 148, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment for each offence.

The facts are briefly as follows:—

Musammat Ishri, daughter of Musammat Kirpo, is the widow of Bhagat Ram of Ram Nangli. She has three sisters married in the village of Jandoli where Fakiria and Haku live. Fakiria is married to one of those sisters and Haku is the uncle of Fakiria. Musammat Kirpo and subsequently Musammat Ishri herself brought complaints against one Khushia charging him with having fraudulently got Musammat Ishri's thumb-mark affixed to an entry in the Marriage Register making out that she had been married to him. For some time whilst these cases were pending Musammat Ishri was living with Haku, appellant, in Jandoli village. Before the date of the occurrence, the 8th December 1921, Musammat Kirpo had taken her daughter away to live with her. On the 8th December there was a hearing of the complaint against Khushia in a Magistrate's Court at Hoshiarpur. Fakiria and Haku, knowing that Musammat Kirpo and Musammat Ishri would be at Hoshiarpur on the 8th of December, met Musammat Kirpo in the Kutchery compound and asked her to send Musammat Ishri back to Jandoli with them, Musammat Kirpo refused to do so. After the hearing of the case was over Musammat Kirpo and Musammat Ishri, accompanied by Santu, deceased, were going along the road in Hoshiarpur where the six appellants are said to have overtaken them and to have forcibly carried off Musammat Ishri and to have beaten Santu who tried to prevent them. Santu was knocked down and died on the spot shortly afterwards and the medical evidence shows that his death was due to rupture of the spleen which was enlarged owing to disease. In addition to the rupture of the spleen, Santu received two or three other simple injuries one being on the head; but it is quite clear that the beating received by him was in no sense a severe one. The Police after receiving the First Information Report recorded a charge under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and eventually chalaned the six appellants under that section. They did not chalan them under section 366 at all apparently considering that no offence had been committed under that section. After the abduction, Musammat Ishri was taken to Jandoli village where, on the morning after the occurrence, she was found in the house of her sister, the wife of Fakiria. Haku and Fakiria admit that they took away Musammat Ishri from her mother. They also admit that they had a fight with Santu to whom they gave some blows. Their main defence is (1) that Musammat Ishri had been married to Haku by chadar andazi and (2) that she went with them voluntarily though she made a show of resistance. The learned Sessions Judge in an exhaustive judgment has held that the alleged chadar andazi marriage with Haku has not been proved, that Musammat Ishri did not go voluntarily with Haku and Fakiria, that all the appellants took part in the assault, that they constituted an unlawful assembly and that though they had no knowledge that they were likely to cause the death of Santu, yet as they struck him blows upon a vital part of the body they must be held to have intended or known that they were likely to cause grievous hurt. He accordingly convicted them under the sections aforesaid.

Mr. Mul Chand has taken me through the evidence on the record. His contentions are: (1) that Musammat Ishri was the married wife of Haku, (2) that she went voluntarily with the appellants or some of them, (3) that even if she was not the married wife of Haku, still the ingredients necessary to constitute an offence under section 366 have not been established, and (4) that it cannot be said that the appellants intended to cause or knew that they were likely to cause grievous hurt to Santu. After a perusal of the evidence I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the occurrence took place substantially in the way deposed to by Musammat Kirpo and the prosecution witnesses. The story told by them is in accordance with that put forward by Musammat Kirpo in the First Information Report with the exception that she tried to exonerate her son-in-law Fakiria. It was natural on her part, but having regard to the evidence I have no doubt that he took part in the occurrence as he himself admits.

The next point is, whether Musammat Ishri was the wife of Haku or not. In the First Information Report Musammat Kirpo said that Musammat Ishri had been settled in the house of Haku without her (Musammat Kirpo's) permission.

The words used in the report were bithla diya tha. For the defence it is urged that this meant that Musammat Ishri had become the karewa wife of Haku, and having regard to their actions at least it was probable that this was what they understood also. The learned Sessions Judge says that the expression possibly conveys the idea of treatment as wife but without any formal ceremony having taken place. He also admits that formal ceremony of chadar andazi is, as alleged, not necessary but goes on to say that "although marriage is sometimes presumed from long connection as man and wife, I do not think such a connection for a couple of months could be held to establish a valid marriage under any circumstances." Evidence has been produced of an actual chadar andazi ceremony having taken place, but having regard to the facts that no entry is made in the Marriage Register and that the question whether Musammat Ishri was the wife of Khushia or not was at that time sub judice, I agree with the learned Sessions Judge in thinking that it is not likely that any chadar andazi ceremony took place, but that Haku and Fakiria intended that if Khushia's marriage was not established, a regular ceremony would be performed.

I also agree with the learned Sessions Judge that Musammat Ishri was not taken away with her consent. Certainly, at first, she was unwilling to go with the appellants but she very soon gave up resistance and went along with them more or less willingly. This, I think, may be gathered from the evidence of Mr. Manual, P. W. No. 8, and from that of P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 12, which shows that the abductors took Musammat Ishri past the Police lines and actually halted there to get her a drink of water. It is hardly likely that they would have done this, had the girl been still unwilling to go with them. At the same time, I have no difficulty in holding that the appellants constituted an unlawful assembly, their object being by criminal force to enforce their right or supposed right to the possession of Musammat Ishri.

Now, the learned Sessions Judge after holding that Musammat Ishri was not the wife of Haku and was taken away by force appears to hold that these findings alone are sufficient to constitute an offence made punishable under section 366. The section, however, also requires that such abduction must be (a) with the intent that the woman may be compelled or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled, to marry any person against her will, or (b) in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. Now, having regard to the facts that Musammam Ishri had already lived apparently quite willingly with Haku for some two months as his wife, that two of her sisters were already married in Haku's village, and that on the morning following the abduction she was found living in the house of her sister, the wife of Fakiria, I do not see how it can be held that the abduction was with the intent and knowledge necessary to constitute an offence under section 366. So far as I can judge the intention of the appellants was to get Musammam Ishri again to live in Jandoli until the case against Khushia should be decided. If the case was decided against Khushia they probably intended that she should be married to Haku but I see no reason to suppose that such a marriage would have been against her will, she having already lived with him for two months as his wife. Even in the First Information Report it was not said that she had been made to live with Haku against her will. Musammam Kirpo's complaint was that she had been settled in the house of Haku without asking Musammam Kirpo's permission. It is also noteworthy as appears from Mr. Manual's evidence, that when he met the abductors, Fakiria was saying to Musammam Kirpo that she had already received money once for Musammam Ishri and wanted to sell her again. This is not like the case of a young unmarried girl who is abducted for the first time from the house of her parents or guardian and made to marry a stranger or seduced or forced to illicit intercourse. The case is one of a widow who has been settled in a man's house and has lived with him as his wife for some time apparently with her own consent. In these circumstances, I do not think it can be held that the appellants had the intention or knowledge required as one of the ingredients to make up an offence made punishable under section 366.

The next point to consider is, whether they can be considered guilty of causing grievous hurt to Santu. A good many cases where death has been due to a diseased spleen are referred to by Mr. Rattan Lal in his Law of Crimes, 9th Edition, pages 615 and 616. In most of these cases it was held that where it was shown that the accused person had no knowledge that the deceased's spleen was diseased, he could only be convicted of causing simple hurt. No doubt one injury was caused to Santu's head but it was quite a trivial one. There were only four injuries altogether on Santu's body and, as already stated, he was not given a severe beating. From the injuries caused to him I am of opinion that it cannot be held that those who attacked him intended or knew that they were likely to cause grievous hurt. They can, however, be convicted of simple hurt under section 323, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge has taken much too serious a view of the occurrence. It is an unfortunate circumstance that Santu had a diseased spleen, if he had not, he would not have died as the result of the beating received by him, and the probability is that the Police would not have taken cognizance of the case at all. The case was rendered serious in the opinion of the Police by the fact that Santu died as the result of the beating received by him. His death, however, was an unfortunate accident seeing that his spleen was enlarged.

I accept the appeal and set aside the convictions and the sentences under the sections specified and convict them instead of causing hurt under sections 323-149, Indian Penal Code. It is not clear exactly what sort of weapons they were carrying and, therefore, I do not think that they can be convicted under section 148. They have already suffered more than six months rigorous imprisonment and I think that they have been sufficiently punished. I accordingly sentence them to the term of imprisonment already undergone and direct that they be released from custody.

A Magistrate passing an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, does so only as a 'public servant' and not as a 'Court' and sub-section (7) of section 195 is, therefore, inapplicable to a case where the Magistrate making the order sanctions the prosecution of persons disobeying it. Where a Sub-Magistrate passed an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, prohibiting certain persons from interfering with the performance of a certain religious ceremony, and the Magistrate later on sanctioned their prosecution for an offence under section 188 of the Penal Code for having disobeyed the order and the Sessions Judge purporting to act under sub-section (6) of section 195 of the Code revoked the sanction:

Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code merely empowers certain Magistrates to pass temporary orders in urgent cases. These orders need not be based on any record outside the Magistrate's own knowledge or observation, and it is not even necessary that the party against whom any such order is directed should first be given a chance of being heard. [p. 537, col. 2.]

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to set aside the order of the Court of Session of the West Tanjore Division, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 11 of 1922 setting aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tanjore, in his proceedings dated the 8th December 1921 according sanction to prosecute the respondents herein for an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner:—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge revoking the sanction granted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the prosecution of the respondent for disobedience of an order issued under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code. The ground, I take, is one of jurisdiction. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate is not "subordinate to the Sessions Judge under section 195 clauses (6) and (7) Criminal Procedure Code. The order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is an executive one and not judicial. Section 144 (4) says that the order is only liable to be revised by the District Magistrate, and not by the Sessions Judge. Though ordinarily appeals against judicial orders would lie to the Sessions Judge, in this case it is different. It is not as a "Court" that the Magistrate passes the order under section 133. Section 195 (6) mentions the word 'authority' and not 'Court'; whereas section 195 (7) refers to "Court". Section 195 (7) is not applicable to this case.

Only section 144 (4) is applicable and the District Magistrate alone has jurisdiction. It is submitted Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnuswami Pillai (1) was wrongly decided. The Magistrate issuing an order under section 144 does so in his executive capacity as a "public servant," to avoid a breach of the peace. The decision in Sundaram Chelli v. Queen (2) shows that proceedings under section 144 are not to be regarded as judicial proceedings. See also Abbas Ali Chowdhry v. Illim Meah (3).

The order of the Sessions Judge revoking sanction is clearly without jurisdiction.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown:—For the purposes of proceedings taken under section 195, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is a "Court," though the order itself is passed by him in his executive capacity.

Section 195 refers to judicial proceedings only. A Court is one where evidence is or may be taken on oath (Evidence Act, section 3). In proceedings under section 195, a Court may take evidence and so the proceeding where sanction was accorded is a judicial proceeding and hence the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction. "Public servant" is defined in section 20 of the Indian Penal Code as including Judges and Magistrates. The decision in Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnuswami Pillai (1) is correct.

Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tanjore, passed an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, prohibiting certain persons (respondents before us) from interference in the performance of a certain religious ceremony. Respondents are said to have disobeyed this order and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate thereupon sanctioned their prosecution for an offence under section 188, Penal Code. The Sessions Judge, purporting to act under sub-section (6) of section 195, revoked the sanction.

We are now asked to revise his order; and the first ground taken is that, as the case falls under clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 195, the power of revocation lay with the District Magistrate and not with the Sessions Judge and that the latter's order was without jurisdiction.

The question has to be decided with reference to the provisions of sub-sections (6) and (7) of section 195. There is no doubt that, if the general principle of sub-section (6) is applied, the proper authority to revoke the sanction is the District Magistrate: Vide section 17 (1) and (5), Criminal Procedure Code. But it is contended that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate must be regarded as a "Court" when issuing an order under section 144 and (consequently) when sanctioning prosecution for breach of the same, and that it follows that the special test laid down in sub-section (7) for determining the subordination of "Courts" in this connection applies. If so, the proper authority to revoke is undeniably the Sessions Judge.

It is, we think, reasonable to hold that if the order under section 144 is passed by a person acting as a Court that person must also be treated as a Court when he sanctions prosecution for disobedience of the same. It is also possible that the "public servant" referred to in sections 172 to 188, Indian Penal Code, might, in certain circumstances, be a "Court," whether in the latter event sub-section (7) should apply or whether the application of that sub-section is confined to cases falling under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) seems to us doubtful. But we are inclined to hold that a Magistrate passing an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, does so only as a "public servant" and not as a "Court." We are aware that an opposite view has been taken by a Bench of this Court in Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnuswami Pillai (1). We have carefully considered the judgment in that case which appears to proceed on the footing that an order under section 144 is an order of a Court. Napier, J., says such orders have always been treated as judicial orders which the learned Judge appears to treat as identical with orders of a Court. With all respect, we do not think this view is correct. A Full Bench of this Court in Sundaram Chetti v. Queen (2), a leading case on orders under this section, has specifically laid down that, "it should always be borne in mind that orders under section 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872" corresponding to section 144 of the present Code are not judicial proceedings," and the same view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Abbas Ali Chowdhry v. Illim Meah (3) of section 62 of the Code of 1861. That section has been elaborated and its operation in some ways restricted in the corresponding sections of subsequent Codes. But we find nothing in the changes which would render less applicable the considered opinions of the learned Judges in that case.

This view seems to be supported by a consideration of section 144. This section merely empowers certain Magistrates to pass temporary orders in urgent cases. These orders need not be based on any record outside the Magistrate's own knowledge or observation, and it is not even necessary that the party against whom it is directed should first be given a chance of being heard. To take a simple instance, a Magistrate observing with his own eyes (without complaint or report) that certain property was in a condition imminently dangerous to human life, might immediately and without waiting to hear what any human being had to say, issue an order under this section and provided his order was in writing, set out the material facts and was properly served, it would be a valid order, disobedience to which would be an offence under section 188, Indian Penal Code. The remedy of a party injuriously affected is to get it set aside under sub-section (4). Can such an order be treated as an order of a Court, or, to use another phrase, a "judicial order?" If not, is its nature altered because the Magistrate may hold an enquiry and record and consider evidence before issuing it?

Orders under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, which must be preceded by an enquiry in the presence of parties who are entitled to adduce evidence, stand on a different footing though orders under both sections are withdrawn from the ordinary revisional jurisdiction of this Court (vide section 435 (3), Criminal Procedure Code).

In our opinion a Magistrate passing an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, is not acting as a "Court" and sub-section (7) of section 195 is inapplicable to such a case.

In considering the intention of the Legislature it may not be out of place to refer to the improbability that, while securing orders under section 144 from interference except by the successor of the Magistrate passing them or by some superior Magistrate (vide clause 4 quoted above), the Sessions Judge should have been given the power to render the order practically nugatory by declining to allow a prosecution for disobedience to it.

We would also refer to the judgment of a Bench of this Court reported as Sankaram Aiyar v. Sakkarappa Mudaliar (4) in which the learned Judges took a more extreme view than that we have expressed above, and held, in effect, that all sanction orders passed under clause

(a) of sub-section (1) must be taken to be passed by a "public servant" who was not acting as a Court.

In our opinion the order of the Sessions Judge must be held to be without jurisdiction and is accordingly set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Receiving stolen goods—Guilty knowledge—Proof—Presumption—Co-accused—Statement, admissibility of—Practice—Criminal trial—Weakness of defence—Conviction, whether justified.

It is of the essence of an offence under section 411 of the Penal Code to show that the person who is in possession of the stolen property knew or had reason to believe it was stolen property. [p. 539, col. 1.]

Where stolen property is traced to the accused's possession nearly two months after the theft, the presumption of guilt under section 114 of the Evidence Act can hardly be applied. [p. 539, col. 1.]

A statement made by one of two co-accused should not be used against the other, where later on their cases are tried separately. If such a statement is to be relied on as evidence the accused person who made it must be examined as a witness in the other case. [p. 539, col. 2.]

It is the duty of the prosecution to establish by its own evidence that the accused is guilty. The weakness of the defence evidence is no ground for finding the accused guilty. [p. 540, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Madras, in C. C. No. 10116 of 1922.

Mr. Nugent Grant, Counsel, for Messrs. K. V. Shama Rao and Chinnaswami, for the Appellant.

The Crown Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the conviction by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the accused under section 411, Indian Penal Code. The accused was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

RAMUDU AIYAR v. EMPEROR.

ment. The stolen property is said to be a particular kind of gold thread which has never been sold before in the Madras market and which is easily identifiable. It would seem that about Rs. 40,000 worth of gold thread including this special kind of thread was stolen from the Port Trust premises some time in April 1922 from certain boxes which had been imported from Europe and kept there. The theft was discovered in April but the stolen property was not traced till the beginning of June. On some clues which the Police obtained they found that this particular kind of gold thread, which is the subject-matter of this case, was purchased by certain Salem merchants from the accused's brother and his gumashdah, and in consequence the accused was arrested and charged with receiving stolen property with reference to this gold thread.

Mr. Grant appearing for the accused does not dispute that the gold thread in question was really stolen property. The only question which is argued is, whether the accused received this stolen property "knowing or having reason to believe the same to be" stolen property. It is of the essence of any offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code, to show that the person who was in possession of the stolen property knew or had reason to believe that it was stolen property. The stolen property was traced to the accused's possession nearly two months at least after the theft so that the presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act can hardly be applied in this case. Then, the question is whether there is evidence in this case sufficient to bring home to the accused the fact that he knew or had reason to believe the property to be stolen property. After hearing the evidence discussed before me, I have come to the conclusion that that evidence is not sufficient to establish the guilty knowledge of the accused, though it throws a very great deal of suspicion upon him. The accused says that he obtained the gold thread which he had from one Guruvappa Chetty and no attempt has been made to prove that this is false. Guruvappa Chetty was a co-accused in this case to start with, but subsequently his case was treated as a separate one and the accused was tried only along with his brother who had been discharged. The Magistrate uses the statement made by Guruvappa Chetty as third accused when he was co-accused with the present accused for saying that Guruvappa Chetty never gave these goods to the first accused. I do not think that this was a proper use of his statement at all. As he was taken out of the dock he should have been examined as a witness if the Magistrate intended to rely upon his statement as evidence against the first accused. Even if that had been done, it would be very difficult to say that his evidence would have carried much weight, being himself accused of having been the thief. However, on the record there is no evidence whatever to show that the accused's statement that he bought the goods from Guruvappa Chetty and that he paid Rs. 4,980 for 83 marks of this gold-thread is not true. We cannot assume without evidence that the accused's statement is false. Therefore, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that it is false if they propose to rely on its falsehood as against the accused. It is true that the accused's attempt to prove that he did actually give Rs. 4,980 by producing his account-book has not been very successful. I am not prepared to rely upon what appears in his account in his favour. The entry in his book is, as the Magistrate observes, very suspicious for the reasons he has stated. But it is one thing to find the entry suspicious and to refuse to act upon it and another thing to find the falsehood of what is sought to be proved. Assuming that it has not been proved that his statement that he got the goods from Guruvappa Chetty and that he paid Rs. 4,980 for the goods is not true, the question is whether there is evidence to show that he had reason to believe that Guruvappa Chetty could not have come by the goods honestly or that he should have suspected the bona fides of Guruvappa Chetty in being in possession of these goods and selling them to him. Now the price he has paid, the Crown Prosecutor contends, is such a low price that an adverse inference can be drawn against the accused from that fact alone. I am quite unable to agree with that argument because the price works out at Rs. 60 a mark and the evidence of the prosecution second witness seems to show that that was not at all an unfair price for the goods.

RAMUDU AIYAR V. EMPEROR.

in the market. No doubt he says that at the time the goods were imported the price including the duty for importation to British India was Rs. 71 but he admits that subsequently the price fell. Apparently at the time of the purchase by the accused it was not more than Rs. 45 without the duty and including the duty which is 30 per cent., it was somewhere about Rs. 60. No adverse inference, therefore, can be drawn from the amount of the purchase-money said to have been paid. It is also argued by the Crown Prosecutor that the two circumstances, namely, that the accused himself was not a dealer in gold thread and that he purchased this gold thread from a person who was not a dealer in gold thread, are very strong evidence against the accused. I certainly agree that those circumstances are grounds of great suspicion against the accused; but I am not prepared to hold, on these circumstances alone, that the accused had any suspicion or guilty knowledge of the goods being stolen property. Many people in Madras do sometimes speculate in goods in which they do not trade, and to take that as evidence of guilty knowledge would be quite unreasonable. There is no proof in this case that the accused knew that Guruvappa Chetty himself was, as the Crown Prosecutor contends, a fire-wood seller. He seems to have been a fire-wood seller long prior to this transaction and latterly according to the evidence he had become a seller of gems, and it is not impossible that such a man may on an occasion trade in gold lace. However, the circumstances though no doubt they carry great suspicion with them, are not, in my opinion, sufficient to convict the accused.

Another point made is that the gold lace was sold in Salem. Each side contends the fact to be in its favour. Mr. Grant says that the fact that it was sold in Salem in open market hawking it from shop to shop is a circumstance in his client's favour showing that he did not know the goods to be stolen as otherwise he would not have attempted to sell the goods in such an open manner. On the other hand, the Crown Prosecutor contends that the fact that the accused did not sell the gold lace in Madras but sent it up-country to Salem to have it sold is an indication that he knew there was something wrong with the purchase of the goods. I do not think that either inference can reasonably be drawn. Any merchant in Madras may send goods honestly to Salem and possibly also if a man has stolen goods he might take it away up-country to some station to have them sold there rather than sell them in Madras. I think the circumstance is insufficient to draw a definite inference from. The Crown Prosecutor also contended that because the defence evidence is all untrue I must take it that the accused is a dishonest person and I should import this dishonesty into his conduct into purchasing gold thread. I am quite unable to do this. It is the duty of the prosecution to establish by its own evidence that the accused is guilty. The weakness of the defence evidence is no ground for finding the accused guilty.

On the whole of the evidence I have come to the conclusion that the prosecution has failed to establish satisfactorily that the accused when he bought this gold thread knew or had reason to believe the same to be stolen property. The newspapers and hand-bills produced are of no value whatever in this case for it is not shown that any of them got anywhere near the accused. The conviction and sentence of the accused will be set aside and his bail bond cancelled.

A Magistrate, who has initiated proceedings by a preliminary order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, can pursue one of three courses; he can cancel the preliminary order under sub-section (5) if he is satisfied that no dispute of the nature mentioned in the section exists or he can find who is in possession and issue an order under sub-section (6) or he can attach the property under section 146 of the Code. Where a Magistrate starts proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code he cannot refuse to proceed with the enquiry on the ground that proceedings had already been taken by another Court in which the question of possession had been incidentally decided. The High Court has jurisdiction to set aside such an order in revision. [p. 543, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Dindigul, dated the 1st February 1922, in Miscellaneous Case No. 1 of 1922 on its file.

Mr. F. C. Vaz, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. Richmond and K. B. Ranganatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—At the instance of the petitioner the Joint Magistrate of Dindigul passed a preliminary order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, on the 10th January 1922. This was preceded by an order of attachment under sub-section (4) dated the 5th January. The parties were directed to file written statements which were filed on the 1st February 1922 and the Magistrate on the same date made an order refusing to proceed with the enquiry under section 145 on the ground that some proceedings had already been taken under section 144. The Magistrate says: "It is true that the order passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sub-Magistrate has now ceased to be in force and that the Sub-Magistrate had no jurisdiction under that section to give a decision as to who on a given date was in possession of the land. But on further consideration of the circumstances, which were not all before me when I passed my first order ex parte, I do not think that it is necessary now to take action as prayed for. I, therefore, dismiss the petition asking for action under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The finding of the Sub-Magistrate was upheld on appeal by this Court and I see no reason to take it up again." He again observes, "the claims of the parties should be settled by a Civil Court and I do not consider that it is necessary to enter into the question of possession here." What apparently happened was this. On the 25th July 1921 the Sub-Magistrate of Palni made an order which purported to be an order under section 144 which is said to be favourable to the counter-petitioners. That order was upheld on appeal by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 10th September 1921. The Joint Magistrate thinks that, in view of these orders, it would be unnecessary to take any further proceedings.

It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order in question. Having initiated the proceedings it was open to the Magistrate to make an order under sub-section (5); that is to say, if he was satisfied that no dispute of the nature mentioned in the section existed, he could cancel the preliminary order made on the 10th January 1922. It was also open to the Magistrate to find who was in possession of the subject-matter and issue an order under sub-section 145. A third course was still open to him, namely, to attach the property under section 146. It is obvious that the Magistrate has pursued none of these three courses, and the order that he passed is not justified by the directions contained either in section 145 or in section 146.

Mr. Richmond who supports the order has argued that it contains in effect, a finding that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace. I have carefully read the order and I am unable to accept this contention. The Magistrate merely states that as proceedings were previously taken under section 144 and incidentally in the course of those proceedings it was found that the counter-petitioners were in possession of the property, it is not desirable to proceed with the enquiry under section 145. The order of the Magistrate clearly contravenes the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The next question that arises is:—Can the High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers interfere with an order of this nature? There seems to be ample authority for the proposition that it can. In Sreeman Kumara Tirumalraja Bahadur, Rajah of Karvetnagar v. Sowcar Lodd Govind Doss Krishna Doss (1) Davies and Moore, J.J., held that the Magistrate's refusal to receive evidence gave the Court no option but to declare that the order under section 145 was passed without jurisdiction, and on that ground they set aside the order. I may observe that in the present case no evidence was taken and no enquiry was held before the so-called final order was made by the Magistrate. In Velayuda Kone v. Narayana Kone (2) the High Court interfered on the ground that the Magistrate refused to hold an enquiry and gave it as his reason for the refusal, that a prior application was dropped by another Magistrate. In In re Dyawappa Basgunda Patil (3) the Magistrate merely made an order that the applicant was not to obstruct and one of the learned Judges observes: "Where, as here, all the most essential things that go to the making of the order were absent, I can only say that I regard the order made as not a final order under the section." As regards the duty of the Magistrate the following observations were made: "The position, therefore, stands thus: if there is still a danger of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate must complete the proceedings as required by section 145 and make proper order either under that section or under section 146. If, however, there is no longer any danger of a breach of peace, the proceedings may be dropped. The next case that has been cited by Mr. Vaz for the petitioner is Juthan Singh v. Ram Narain Singh (4). In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, no witness was examined on either side but the Magistrate decided the case on the documents filed before him, the latest of those documents dating back to about ten years before the date of the proceedings. It was held that the order made by the Magistrate was without jurisdiction. The learned Judge set aside the order and directed that, if necessary, fresh proceedings should be taken according to law.

The cases cited by Mr. Richmond on behalf of the counter-petitioners do not lay down different rule. In Mapindra Chandra Nandi v. Barada Kanta Chowdhury (5) it was held that a Magistrate has jurisdiction to cancel an order passed under sub-section (1) of section 145, and to stay proceedings if he becomes satisfied, whatever the source of his information may be, that the state of things does not exist, which alone would give jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry. I may observe that the Magistrate in that case gave a finding that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace. It was argued that it was not open to the Magistrate to cancel an order made under subsection (1), unless one of the parties or some other person interested had shown that the supposed dispute did not exist or had not existed. The learned Judges refused to recognize any such limitation on the power of the Magistrate to stay his hand. In regard to the power of the High Court to interfere with orders under section 145, the learned Judges accept the correctness of the proposition that if an order was challenged to be without jurisdiction, that is to say, if it be outside the section, the mere fact of its purporting to be so passed would not bring it within the section so as to debar the exercise of the revisional powers of the High Court to set it aside. This case, therefore, does not assist the counter-petitioner.

Kamulammal Avargal v. Vavu Rowthar (6) only decides that a Magistrate could decline to proceed with the enquiry on being satisfied that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace although statements had been put in and the enquiry had commenced. This again has no bearing upon the question under consideration.

I am satisfied that the High Court can in the exercise of its revisional powers set aside the order in question, as I have found that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass it. The order of the 5th January directing attachment and the preliminary order of the 10th January have not been attacked and it is also conceded that in the filing and the receiving of the written statements no irregularity was committed. In the circumstances I set aside the order of the 1st February and direct the Magistrate to proceed with the enquiry and deal with the petition in one of the modes he is authorized to deal with it under sections 145 and 146.

A further objection taken relates to the portion of the order which directs the release of the property from attachment and the handing over of it to the respondents. The Magistrate refused to go into the question of the possession of the property but the order he made is tantamount to an adjudication that counter-petitioners were in possession of the property. The cases relied on by the petitioner Chenga Reddi v. Ramasamy Gounden (7) and Karimuddi Fakir v. Naimuddi Kavi-raj (8) are in point. As a matter of fact, no evidence was taken, no statements were made before the Magistrate and he made the order in question merely on account of an allegation in the written statements of the counter-petitioners to the effect that the property had been taken from them by the Village Munsif in pursuance of the order of attachment. This order is clearly wrong. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate relating to the disposal of the property and its release from attachment. I have been asked to give directions to the Magistrate as regards the order he should make in the matter of the disposal of the property. I do not think that it is either proper or desirable to follow this course and I merely direct him to make such order as is in accordance with law.

As regards costs I direct that each party shall bear his own costs of this revision case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 439—Failure to consider evidence—Revision.

A general remark in an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code that the documentary evidence is not relevant and that the oral evidence is not satisfactory, without referring to the evidence and without giving reasons, is not a disposal of the evidence upon the record. It amounts to a refusal to exercise the jurisdiction vested in a Magistrate by law and is remediable by the High Court in revision.

Application.

Mr. P. C. Rai, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of the first party in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The subject of dispute comprises two fields measuring 4 acres and 39 decimals, being Survey Plots Nos. 316 and 324. The first party claimed this land as their kasht land while the second party claimed this as their khudkasht land. The Record of Rights which was finally published in the year 1911 is in favour of the first party. The learned Magistrate in this judgment says "the parties have introduced into the case a mass of irrelevant matters fit for cognizance by a competent Court in a regular suit for adjudication of title and restoration of possession with recovery of mesne profits. They have also filed certified copies of documents and of judgments or orders of Courts, most of which tend to throw little light on the case." Then as regards the oral evidence all that he says is, "Both the parties have produced oral evidence which is not quite satisfactory." Then he ends his judgment by saying: "I have perused the statements filed by the parties, heard their Pleaders and considered the effect of the evidence adduced by them and in the circumstances of the case. I decide that the second party was in actual possession of the plots under dispute on the date of the initiation of the proceedings."

In my opinion this judgment cannot stand. The learned Magistrate does not consider the evidence produced by the parties. The Record of Rights is in favour of the first party. He does not say how this Record of Rights has been rebutted and what is the evidence adduced by the other side. It is stated before me that a large number of documents had been produced by the second party which rebut the presumption raised by the Record of Rights, but the learned Magistrate does not refer to a single one of those documents and it does not appear that he considered those documents inasmuch as he says that most of the documents were irrelevant, and throw little light on the case. As was laid down in the case of Lachmi Ojha v. Birja Misser (1), the general remark in an order under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, that the oral evidence is not reliable, without referring to it and without giving any reason, is not a disposal of the evidence upon the record. It amounts to a refusal to exercise the jurisdiction vested in a Magistrate by law and is remediable by the High Court in revision. The same view was taken in the case of Kailashbehari Lal v. Jai Narain Lal (2). In my opinion this order cannot be upheld. One can form no idea as to what the evidence on the record is and whether the learned Magistrate considered the evidence adduced by the parties.

This order must be set aside and the case remanded to the Court below for trial according to law.

Case remanded.

Where on an application to fix the reserve price, the decree-holder suppressed the fact that on a previous occasion the Court itself had fixed a very high price as the reserve price and had refused to accept a high bid:

Held, that there had been a suppression of a material fact and that the Court was entitled to refuse to confirm the Court sale when the fact was subsequently brought to its knowledge. The fact that notice is served on all the parties at the time of the application does not relieve the decree-holder from his obligation to set out the relevant facts nor reduce the liability on him when he does state the facts, to lay before the Court all the material information he possesses about these facts. Per Wallace, J.—Order XXI, r. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is no bar to the Court interfering to cancel an auction-sale, even though no party has applied for cancellation, when the Court discovers, in the course of the proceedings, that the decree-holder auction-purchaser deliberately misled it, and profited thereby to the disadvantage of the judgment-debtor or the judgment-debtor's creditors. [p. 547, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated the 2nd May 1921, and made in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 196 of 1920.

Messrs. V. S. Govindachari and C. Narasimha Chariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., refusing to confirm a sale made at Court-auction. He has refused to confirm the sale on the ground that all the facts were not placed before him when the reserve price was fixed and when the plaintiff obtained leave to bid. There is a misapprehension on the part of the learned Judge, in that the application for leave to bid was to him, but the application to fix the reserve price was to the Registrar and not to him. I do not think it is enough to say, in order to refuse to confirm a sale, that all the facts were not put before the Court on the two occasions referred to. But, in my judgment, the Court has an inherent power to refuse to allow the sale to be carried out if it is satisfied that the Court has been misled either in giving leave to bid or in fixing the reserve price. This is only an instance of the inherent power possessed by all Courts to prevent an abuse of the process of the Court, but, of course, the Court will not use that inherent power unless it has had all the facts fully before it and is satisfied that it has been misled. I think the principle is that, in order to show that the Court has been misled, it is necessary to show either actual mis-statements to the Court or non-disclosure to the Court, of relevant facts unknown to the Court and which there was a duty to bring before the Court. How far that duty goes, in applications for leave to bid and in applications to fix the reserve price may, I think, be found in the judgment of the Privy Council in Mahomed Mira Ravuthar v.

RAGHAVACHARIAR v. MURUGESA MUDALI.

Savvasi Vijaya Raghunadha Gopalar (1) quoting passages from the judgments of Lord Selborne and Lord Fitzgerald in Coaks v. Boswell (2), and they come at last to this, that if a party professes to give the Court information on any particular subject with a view to guide its discretion and obtain its approval, he is bound to lay before the Court all the material information he possesses on that particular subject.

There were two stages in which the present plaintiff gave information to the Court. The first was to the Judge himself on his application for leave to bid and I am not prepared to say that there were materials relevant to the consideration as to whether he should be allowed to bid or not known to him which he did not disclose. I think he did give a very meagre statement of facts on that occasion, but I am not convinced that full statement of facts was relevant for the consideration of the Court in deciding whether he should bid or not, because on that application, certainly, the main question for the Court to consider is whether it is to the advantage of everyone concerned in order to obtain the highest price that the plaintiff should be allowed to bid or not. The second stage in which he gave information was on his second application which was to the Registrar, and that was under rule 205 of the Original Side Rules, by which the applicant for sale has to put in an affidavit stating what, in his opinion, is the best time and place of sale and method of advertising the same, the lots, if any, into which the property should be divided, and the market value of, and the reserve price to be fixed for, the property. Then under rule 206 the Registrar is to determine the various matters and in the event of any objection being raised to the lots, the market value or reserved price mentioned in the affidavit, the question is to be determined by a Judge in Chambers. Now, an affidavit was put in of which the tenor was that it was very doubtful whether the judgment-debtors had any interest in the property at all which was proposed to be sold, that they had claims to it which were subject to litigation and the outcome of that litigation, like most litigations, was uncertain and that it was impossible, therefore, to give any idea of the market value. The Registrar not being satisfied that that was a proper compliance with the rule, a further paragraph was added by the plaintiff that, under the circumstances stated in the rest of the affidavit, the market value of lot No. 1, which is the lot in question, might be fixed at Rs. 3,000; and so the reserve price was fixed. The matter did not go before the Judge because no one seems to have taken any objection to the reservation of that price. It is true that on these proceedings one of the judgment-debtors was represented and the other had been served with a notice, but that fact does not, in my judgment, in any way relieve the plaintiff from the obligation to set out the relevant facts in his affidavit, nor reduce the liability on him, when he does state facts, to lay before the Court all the material information he possesses about those facts. In this case I am quite satisfied that he did not comply with that obligation. There was a fact well-known to him, namely, that the property in respect of which the judgment-debtors claimed and have since been held by the Court to have a two-thirds interest, had been put up for sale by the Court before and that the Court had fixed Rs. 45,000 as the reserve price and a bid of Rs. 36,000 had been refused on the ground that it was not great enough. It might have been a question for argument before the Registrar that, notwithstanding that fact, a very low price with no reserve price should be fixed in this case because of the doubt as to the judgment-debtor's title, but the Registrar was not given the opportunity of making up his mind upon that or receiving any such argument because the fact was entirely suppressed from his knowledge. I am convinced that, whatever the result might be, any Tribunal that had to make up its mind as to what the reserve price should be, would, in fact, be greatly influenced by such information as was in this case suppressed, namely, that the Court itself for the property in dispute had on a previous occasion fixed a very high price as the reserve price and refused the bid of an amount such as was accepted in this case. I think, therefore, that there were all the elements necessary for the Court to act on its inherent powers. The plaintiff had taken upon himself to give the Court information as to the value.

He had told the Court certain facts and not told the Court other facts relevant for the Court's consideration and unknown to the Court. I am satisfied that the learned Judge's order was right. It seems to me that it is not, as I have pointed out, correct to say that he was deceived in respect of the price, and I doubt if he was right in the view he took that in respect of allowing the plaintiff to bid he ought to have had the information before him. I am satisfied on the other application, namely, the application before the Registrar, that there was a suppression of a material fact, and, therefore, the sale cannot be confirmed.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Wallace, J.—I am of the same opinion: I am not satisfied that knowledge of the facts of the previous auction, in which the property was valued at Rs. 45,000 and as being the joint family property of the plaintiff's two judgment-debtors and another, would have led the Executing Court to refuse the plaintiff permission to bid, but I am satisfied that that knowledge would, in the case of this second sale, in which the property was again advertised as the joint family property of the plaintiff's two judgment-debtors and another, in all probability, have restrained the officer of this Court, whose duty it was to fix the upset price, from fixing an upset price at any figure so low as Rs. 3,000 and would therefore, have resulted in preventing the selling officer from knocking down the property for Rs. 36,000. The suppression of this fact by the plaintiff was, therefore, a suppression of a material fact. Further, it was clearly his duty, when the Court had to fix this upset price, and he elected to put before it such facts as he knew relevant to that point, to put forward all material facts within his knowledge on that point, to enable the Court to fix the value for the purpose of setting that price. In fact, it was his duty to put before the Court those facts which he chose to put forward at length in his subsequent affidavit of the 5th of March, which he chose to put forward only when the question of confirming his sale arose. In his affidavit of the 3rd of November, 1920, which does discuss the difficulties in fixing the value, the plaintiff withheld—deliberately, I am satisfied—the very material fact of the prior auction, and did not fairly and openly state to the Court the factors in the problem which he put to himself and of which he himself was aware and the Court was not. That the Court Officer was not aware of it seems to me obvious. The judgment-debtors had added nothing to what the plaintiff stated in his affidavit, and I find nothing in the plaintiff's affidavit to put the Court on notice of this previous auction. Thus, the ingredients necessary to prove misrepresentation necessary to justify the setting aside of the sale are present. O. XXI, r. 92; and the Privy Council ruling in Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry (3) are, in my view, no bar to the Court interfering to cancel the sale, even though no party has applied for cancellation, when the Court discovers, in the course of the proceedings, that the decree-holder (auction-purchaser) deliberately misled it, and profited thereby to the disadvantage of the judgment-debtor or the judgment-debtor's creditors.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 141, O. IX, r. 2—Suit dismissed in default—Application for restoration dismissed for default in payment of process-f:—Appeal, whether lies.

VENCATACHELLA PILLAI v. ARUNTHAVATHATCHI.

P's suit was dismissed in default of prosecution. He applied to set aside the order of dismissal, but on his failure to pay the process-fees in time, the application was dismissed for default:

Held, that the dismissal of the application was under O. IX, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that against such dismissal an appeal did not lie, irrespective of whether or not section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code applied to the proceedings on the application for restoration.

Revision of the order of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 16th December 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 14 of 1921.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The non-applicant, Musammal Sheokuwar, filed a suit against the applicants, Hirasai and others, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bilaspur. Certain preliminary issues were framed and the parties were told to appear on the 12th of July, 1921, to argue them. The defendants were present but the plaintiff was not and the suit was accordingly dismissed. On the 23rd of July, 1921, Sheokuwar made an application for setting aside the order of dismissal. She appeared on the 3rd of September, 1921, but notices on the opposite party had not then been served. The case was adjourned to 8th October, 1921, and the order passed on that date was as follows:—
“Applicant Musammal Sheokuwar in person. Non-applicants absent. The previous notices were returned unserved. Notices for this hearing could not be served for want of time as process-fee was paid on 3rd October, 1921. I do not find any justification for paying process-fees so late. I, therefore, dismiss the application for default of the applicant.”

2. Against this dismissal of her application for restoration of her suit the plaintiff appealed and the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge is as follows: “Parties say that the suit was for a house valued at nearly Rs. 300. The suit was dismissed in default and then the restoration petition was dismissed as the process-fees were paid late. This was correct, but as property is involved which may be the all in all to the plaintiff, I direct that the applicant do in ten days deposit Rs. 15 for payment as restoration costs to the other side, and then the petition be restored and heard on the merits. Failing such deposit, the petition shall stand finally dismissed. No costs of the appeal to either party.”

3. The defendants in the suit have applied to this Court for revision of the appellate order that the application for restoration of the suit shall be restored. If section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to the proceedings on the application for restoration, then it is clear that there can be no appeal against the order dismissing it. If, however, that section does apply, it is equally clear that the dismissal of the application was a dismissal under r. 2 and not under r. 9 of O. IX of the Civil Procedure Code. Against such dismissal no appeal lies. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss the somewhat fantastic grounds on which the order of dismissal of the application has been set aside in appeal, as that appellate order is passed without jurisdiction. It will accordingly be set aside and the order of the First Court will be restored. The costs incurred by the non-applicant as well as those of the applicants in this Court and in appeal will be paid by the plaintiff-non-applicant. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 15.

RESPONDENT.

Estoppel—False representation—Knowledge of true facts—Estoppel, if arises—Construction of document—Hindu joint family—Deed of union with stranger—Co-parcenary; severance of.

VENKATACHELLA PILLAI v. ARUNTHAVATHATCHI

A person who knows the truth cannot be allowed to rely upon an estoppel arising from a false representation and no estoppel can arise where the truth is known to the party who claims the estoppel. [p. 552, col. 1.]

Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose, 30 I. A. 114; 30 C. 539; 7 C. W. N. 441; 5 Bom. L. R. 421; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 374, (P. C.), followed.

By a "deed of union" two brothers forming a joint Hindu family entered into an agreement with another brother who had been adopted away into another family by which the properties of the joint family and those of the adopted brother were put together and it was agreed that when a division took place in the future, the properties were to be divided into three shares equally and that if any uterine brothers were born they were also to take jointly with them and that three brothers were to treat themselves as members of a joint family. It was urged that the legal effect of the deed was to sever the co-parcenary on the ground that the two members of the joint family could not constitute themselves into a unit and take in a stranger without themselves being treated as united:

Held, that the intention of the deed was clearly not to divide but to unite and if it had failed to do that it had failed of its purpose, but that its legal effect was not to result in a severance of the co-parcenary interest between the two brothers of the joint family. [p. 552, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in Original Suit No. 65 of 1919.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer (with him Mr. Padhmanata Iyengar), for the Appellant:—This is a suit by a widow to recover certain properties belonging to her husband. Her case that her husband's brother had been adopted away, so that she was entitled to the whole properties as her husband's heir has been negatived. The alternate claim for a moiety has been decreed on the ground that the plaintiff's husband was divided from his brother. The finding on this question is clearly wrong. The evidence as to partition is very faint. The undoubted presumption in a Hindu family is one of jointness. (The evidence in the case was referred to show it was insufficient to prove a division of status). If partition is found against plaintiff's suit must fail in its entirety.

Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyengar and K. Narasimha Iyer), for the Respondent:—The finding of the Judge as to the adoption of Venkatachella is clearly wrong. His adoption to his brother who had himself been adopted away to Subbaroya's family is amply borne out by the uniform course of conduct of Venkatachella as to his adoption; his various assertions during a long period, and by the conduct of parties all of which would be consistent only with a case of adoption.

Apart however from the actual fact of adoption, the defendant having always set up and asserted an adoption is now estopped from proving a case of no adoption. But for this representation of the defendant, the plaintiff's husband might have separated himself from the joint family and secured the property to his separate heirs, viz., wife and daughters.

Where parties had been acting on the footing of a valid and subsisting adoption for a long time and where it will be impossible or inequitable to restore the adopted son to his natural family, the factum of the adoption cannot be questioned by any of the parties.

The estoppel is founded on the fact of a long and general recognition of adoption by the natural family the adoptive family and the adopted son himself.

In any case even if there was no adoption the finding as to division of status is correct. Exhibit A, the deed of agreement between the two natural brothers and the adopted brother itself, creates a division of status between the two brothers inter se. The members of a joint family cannot except by a division inter se agree with a stranger to live jointly. The agreement fixes the shares as being one-third for each and is conclusive on the question of division. See Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (8). A division of status is a necessary corollary to the arrangement in the case. The document creates an interest in present and negatives any idea of survivorship. See also Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (9).

There is also independent evidence to prove division (reference was then made to the evidence in the case).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant in reply:—There is no question of estoppel at all in this case. If the adoption was false, it was false to the knowledge of the defendant and still more so of the plaintiff's husband and it is clear law that where the truth is known there can be no estoppel.

Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodass Ghose (10); Ramachari v. Saraswati Ammal (11).

To constitute estoppel, there must have been a contest between the alleged adopted son and the other member who relies on estoppel.

Vaithilinga Mudali v. Munigan (5); Ramachari v. Saraswati Ammal (11).

There is further no evidence that plaintiff's husband was influenced by the assertions of the defendant.

Secondly, the document A is a deed of union and not of division. The mere use of the word "shares" is clearly insufficient. There is no authority for the position that a joint family as an entity without separation inter se cannot unite with a stranger even as a matter of contract. The cases referred to do not bear on the present suit. Jogeswar Narain Deo v. Ram Chandra Dutt (9) merely lays down that co-tenancy is the rule and joint tenancy the exception.

There is further overwhelming evidence in the case to show there was no partition. The finding of the Judge is, therefore, wrong.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore in Original Suit No. 65 of 1919.

The plaintiff is the widow of one Ananta narayana Pillai and the defendant Venkatchella Pillai, is her husband's brother.

She claims the properties in various ways: firstly, the whole of the properties in schedules II and III on a certain footing; secondly, half of those properties on a certain other footing; and thirdly, one-third of the property in schedules II and IV and the whole of schedule III properties on still another footing. The facts of the case are fully set out by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment and need not again be referred to in detail.

Anantanarayana, Ramachandra and Venkatchella (the defendant herein) were brothers, being the sons of one Muthusami Pillai. Muthusami Pillai had two brothers himself, but they died 20 or 25 years ago leaving no male issue, and all their property passed to Muthusami Pillai. Schedule II of the plaint gives the property which Muthusami had and which would have passed to his three sons as the ancestral estate. Schedule III gives the properties which the plaintiff's husband and his brothers got from their maternal grandfather, and schedule IV consists of certain properties which had once belonged to one Subbaroya Pillai and which passed to Venkatchella Pillai. The plaintiff states that as her husband was the sole surviving member of the joint family at the time of his death, he is entitled to whole of the properties described in schedules II and III; in the alternative she says that if the defendant is held to be entitled to the properties as co-owner to himself and to plaintiff's husband, she would be entitled to half of the properties in all the three schedules. She denies that defendant continued as co-parcener of her husband at the time of his death.

It is the defendant's case that he was such a co-parcener and, therefore, the whole of the properties in the three schedules in the plaint passed to him and that the plaintiff got only a right of maintenance.

Of the three brothers Anantanarayana Pillai, Ramachandra Pillai and Vencatachella Pillai, Ramachandra Pillai, the second brother, was admittedly adopted away from the family by one Pannapattu Subbaroya Pillai, and he seems to have succeeded to the properties of Subbaroya Pillai and enjoyed them. Just before his death, a document the effect of which has been discussed before us at some length and which we have to consider, Exhibit A was executed by the plaintiff's husband, this Ramachandra Pillai and their father Muthusami Pillai as representing the defendant who was then a minor. It is the plaintiff's case that, sometime thereafter, the defendant was himself adopted by Ramachandra Pillai into the new family to which Ramachandra Pillai had passed and he contends that having been so adopted away, he has no more rights in the original family, and it is in that eventuality, she says, she is entitled to the plaint properties in schedules II and III. Schedule IV properties which came from Subbaroya Pillai, she would admit would then belong to the defendant solely, so that, one important question in this case has been whether the adoption of the defendant by Ramachandra Pillai has been proved. The Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that it must be taken that the adoption has not been proved and that, in fact, it was a false assertion, made by the defendant and his brother, the plaintiff's husband. There is a good deal of evidence to show that this adoption was not true in fact, for very soon after Ramachandra Pillai died, the properties of Ramachandra Pillai were claimed by his widow, Valliammal. She got a transfer of patta of the property in her name to start with. There is nothing to show that Vencatachella Pillai objected to that course being adopted. Nextly, we have a suit brought by a stranger, a Nattukottai Chetti for a debt alleged to be due by Ramachandra Pillai against Valliammal as his legal representative. The suit was decreed and a considerable bulk of the properties of Ramachandra Pillai was sold and purchased by the Chetti himself. The defendant subsequently brought a suit to have the sale set aside, but he did not continue that suit and obtained no relief. Subsequently, we find some reversioners of Ramachandra Pillai bringing a suit against this Chetti in which Vencatachella Pillai and Valliammal were both made parties. In that suit Vencatachella's alleged adoption was disputed and there was a finding arrived at that the adoption was not true. The main evidence which was put forward in that suit to support the adoption was a Will supposed to have been executed by Ramachandra Pillai. That Will was also found to be not genuine. It was decided that the plaintiffs in that suit were the reversioners, which meant that the truth of the adoption was negated. No appeal was filed by Vencatachella Pillai against this decision, although there was an appeal by the other parties. Again a subsequent suit, vide Exhibit H, which the defendant and his brother, Anantanarayana, brought, the latter as an assignee of the mortgage in favour of Ramachandra Pillai and the former as adopted son, was dismissed. The finding there also was against the adoption, but no further steps were taken in that litigation either to establish the adoption. We find, therefore, that immediately on the death of Ramachandra Pillai the defendant's supposed adoption was disputed, and every time it went before the Court, the decision was against the truth of the adoption.

Further we find certain transactions which also go against the truth of this adoption. As has been already stated, the bulk of the properties of Ramachandra Pillai was sold and purchased by Nattu Kottai Chetti: but there were some properties still left and they were conveyed by Valliammal to a relation of hers, one Muthu Velaguden. Of course, she could not validly have done this if the adoption was true, and yet no steps were taken by the defendant to dispute the validity of that sale.

These and other circumstances referred to by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment show very clearly that it is not possible to find that the adoption was in fact proved. No doubt, on the other hand, it is pointed out to us that in spite of all these adverse decisions, Vencatachella, the defendant, went on asserting that he was the adopted son of Ramachandra Pillai in the numerous documents which he executed till about May 1916. Why he did so it is difficult to say for certain, but the Subordinate Judge has given what he considers to be the possible reason for it, and it is not unlikely that that may be the motive that made him continue to assert that he was the adopted son of Ramachandra Pillai. Anyhow the fact of the adoption, we must take it, has not been proved, and we agree with the Subordinate Judge on that point.

It was then suggested that, because the defendant went on asserting that he was the adopted son of Ramachandra Pillai, he must now be estopped from saying that he is a member of the same family as Anantanarayana Pillai for, it is contended that, if he had not done so, Anantanarayana Pillai might himself have formally divided himself off from Vencatachella Pillai and secured his share for his wife and daughters, and as by the latter's conduct, Anantanarayana was misled into not doing that, an estoppel arises against the defendant. We are not able to accept this argument for, in the first place, it is not denied that if the adoption is false, Anantanarayana knew the whole truth about it, perhaps to a greater degree than the defendant himself. A person who knows the truth can hardly be allowed to rely upon an estoppel arising from a false representation. No estoppel can arise where the truth is known to the party who claims the estoppel. Vide Mohcri Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (10). In the second place, there is absolutely nothing to show that Anantanarayana Pillai ever intended to divide from Vencatachella Pillai who was asserting that he was the adopted son of Ramachandra Pillai. There is thus no basis for the estoppel pleaded.

Then it is said that by the document, Exhibit A, there was a severance of co-parcenary between Vencatachella Pillai and Anantanarayana Pillai. On this point the Subordinate Judge has held against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendant. The document is a curious one. It calls itself "a deed of union" and it is in fact an attempt by the two brothers Anantanarayana and Vencatachella to unite with the third brother, Ramachandra Pillai, who had been adopted away into another family. It purports to be an agreement by which the properties of all the three brothers were put together with a statement that they should be, when a division takes place in the future, divided into three shares equally, that, if any uterine brothers are born, they are also to take jointly with them, and in fact, that the three brothers are to treat themselves as members of joint family. It is contended for the respondent that this deed, as a matter of legal consequence whatever the parties might have intended, resulted in the severance of co-parcenary between the plaintiff's husband and Vencatachella Pillai, for it is said that two members of a joint family could not constitute themselves into a unit and take in a stranger, without themselves being treated as divided. In our opinion the intention of the deed is clearly not to divide but to combine, and if the deed has failed to do that, it has failed of its purpose. It may be valid, as a matter of contract, between the stranger, Ramachandra Pillai, and the two brothers members of the joint family but it does not sever the latter's co-parcenary. In fact it expressly says that no party to the deed is to assert that any portion of the property belongs to him separately or exclusively. It provides for future born children, to be made sharers. It no doubt also provides that the eldest man was to manage all the properties and keep the accounts. It was suggested that this and the fixing of the share as one-third to each of the parties are indications that a division was intended; and the case in Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (8) was cited as an authority for the partition that a definition of shares will result in the family being treated as divided. But that case is very different because there was a present allotment of the different shares with a statement in the deed that any person who wanted to separate may take his share and leave the joint family and the others may continue in joint enjoyment. Here there is no such provision. Exhibit A does not contemplate a division but it expressly says that in case the defendant who was then a minor becomes of age, the properties are to be divided in future into three shares. That amounts to nothing more than a mere statement as to what each person would be entitled to in case of a division if no brothers are born. We cannot accept that as indicating that Anantanarayana Pillai and the defendant intended to divide themselves off from each other in presenti by that deed.

It was next argued that certain dealings between the parties and the conduct of Anantanarayana Pillai and the defendant showed that they had treated themselves as divided in status and that they were really so divided. It is this part of the case that the Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff and given her a decree for half of the properties in schedules II, III, and IV. We are unable, however, to follow the Subordinate Judge in the view that he has taken on this part of the case. He says that the commonality between Vencatachella and Anantanarayana came to an end about a year before the latter died, meaning that they were living separately. Then he refused to certain lease-deeds of the lands taken in the name of the defendant alone, and to certain debt bonds being taken exclusively in Anantanarayana's name. He then refers to two documents, Exhibits C and C 1, which were two pro-notes assigned over by endorsement by the defendant to Anantanarayana. Pausing here for a moment we do not think that any of these circumstances are of any value in showing that Anantanarayana Pillai and Vencatachella became divided. It is not the plaintiff's case that there was any division just before the death of Anantanarayana. Her case is that from very long ago, since the date of Exhibit A and certainly after the date of the alleged adoption, the two were not members of joint family but were divided. The endorsement that the Subordinate Judge refers to leads to no conclusion whatever without knowing more about the nature of the debt for which these pro-notes were executed. We only know that was a transfer by endorsement by one member of a family to another of two notes; this is of no evidentiary value in considering the question whether they were divided or not. The transactions may have taken place even if they were undivided if for example they were dealing with self-acquired properties.

Then the Subordinate Judge refers to an instalment of kist being paid in Anantanarayana's name, though previously all along it had been paid in the defendant's name. He refers to Exhibits E and X and XI series in support of this. How this indicates that Vencatachella divided off from Anantanarayana it is difficult to imagine. No reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the respondent before us on this circumstance. We are unable to attach any significance as the Subordinate Judge seems to have done to the assignments of the pro-notes or to the payments of kists. We think they are all circumstances quite consistent with the parties remaining in the same state as they were before.

Then the Subordinate Judge says, "the following facts strongly militate against the supposition that it was the intention of Anantanarayana and defendant in cultivating and enjoying the lands jointly, to do so as members of a co-parcenary and he refers to the defendant, Vencatachella masquerading to all the world in the disguise of Ramachandra Pillai's adopted son. We have already referred to this circumstance and, whatever the reason for his having done so may be, it certainly does not indicate any intention on his part to divide himself off from his brother. In fact apparently these men were of opinion that, even after the adoption into another family, they could remain as members of the original family or bring themselves back into it as they have attempted to do in Exhibit A in the case of Ramachandra Pillai and continue as members of the original joint family.

Another circumstance has also been referred to, viz., that Vencatachella Pillai adopted the Saivite faith of Ramachandra and performed funeral ceremonies to him. This may be some evidence on the question of the truth of the adoption, but we have already held that the evidence on that point is strongly the other way. It has little or no bearing upon the question of division. In fact it is not urged by the learned Vakil for the respondent that it is any basis for any inference that there was any division between the brothers. Anantanarayana and Vencatachella were originally members of a joint family and, unless the plaintiff is able to show some act on their part which amounted to a division of status, at any rate between them such as any unambiguous declarations of one party to the other, that he was thereafter to be considered as divided in status from the other, we must hold that the original joint family status has not been affected and they continued a joint family till the death of Anantanarayana Pillai. In these circumstances it would follow that Vencatachella as the undivided brother of Anantanarayana Pillai is entitled to all the plaint properties and that the plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed altogether. Accordingly we allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit.

As the litigation was in part at any rate brought by the way in which Vencatachella Pillai himself behaved by asserting that he was the adopted son of Ramachandra Pillai, we think that in this case the costs should not follow the event. Each party will bear their costs in the lower Court and in the appeal, but in the memorandum of objections we direct the plaintiff will pay the costs of the defendant. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Where a person accepts a benefit under an order of a Court, which he would not have obtained otherwise than under that order, he is precluded subsequently from challenging the validity of that order. Where in a suit on a money-bond payable with compound interest, the Court awards simple interest only, an appeal against the decree is not rendered incompetent, where subsequent to the filing of the appeal, the decree-holder accepts costs deposited by the judgment-debtor on the basis of simple interest. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 15th of July, 1920, affirming that of the Munsif, Second Court at Krishnagar, dated the 24th of April 1919.

Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjee, for the Appellant :—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for money on the basis of a registered-bond. The interest payable was at 18 per cent. compound. First Court gave a decree for simple interest at 18 per cent. and allowed the defendant to pay off in three instalments with costs of the suit. I preferred an appeal which has been dismissed upon erroneous misconception of facts of the case. The Court holds that there was a subsequent agreement not to charge compound interest. I submit such evidence is totally inadmissible to vary the original registered contract. Then the Court holds that inasmuch as I accepted one of the instalments according to decree, therefore, I would not be entitled to appeal as regards the rate of interest. He has relied upon certain cases which are absolutely not applicable to the present case. I submit the mere fact of my accepting the first instalment would not take away my right of appeal as to the rate of interest claimed by me and disallowed by the First Court.

Babu Upendra Nath Bagchi, for the Respondent :—I submit the appellant would be bound by his agreement not to accept compound interest. As regards the other point, I submit the cases in Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (1) and Mani Lal Guzrati v. Harendra Lal Roy (2), and the English cases referred to there cover the present point.

Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjea replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a registered bond for a money debt bearing compound interest at 18 per cent. per annum.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the stipulation as to the payment of compound interest was a hard and unconscionable bargain, though not penal. It allowed simple interest at 18 per cent and directed the decretal amount to be paid in three instalments with costs of the suit (costs to be paid by Jaista 1326, and the principal and interest in two equal instalments in Aswin and Chait 1326.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned District Judge held that there was no plea of undue influence or fraud, and that the plaintiff would, under ordinary circumstances, have been entitled to get the stipulated rates of compound interest, having regard to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in certain cases referred to in the judgment, but he disallowed the compound interest on the grounds that the plaintiff had subsequently agreed not to charge compound interest and that he had accepted Rs. 65-10 as one of the instalments, after the decree. He accordingly upheld the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The first ground upon which the learned Judge proceeds is erroneous for two reasons. In the first place, there was no defence taken that the plaintiff had agreed not to charge compound interest. In the next place, evidence of subsequent oral agreement not to charge compound interest was inadmissible to vary the original contract which was a registered one.

The next ground upon which the Court below proceeded was that the plaintiff accepted Rs. 65-10 in payment of one of the instalments (the instalment for costs) after the decree; but we do not think that the plaintiff was precluded, by reason of that, from maintaining his appeal with regard to the compound interest. Our attention has been drawn to the cases of Mani Lal Guzrati v. Harendra Lal Roy (2) and Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (1).

In the first case the learned Judges referred to the cases of Tinkler v. Hilder (3) Kennard v. Harris (4), King v. Simmonds (5) and Pearce v. Chaplin (6), and observed that the principle is that a party who has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it, cannot, after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order, contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another. We do not think, however, that that principle applies to the present case.

In Tinkler v. Hilder (3) it was held that where a party accepts costs under a Judge's order, which, but for the order would not at that time be payable, he cannot afterwards object that the order was made without jurisdiction.

In Kennard v. Harris (4), it was observed that "the plaintiff, after accepting the costs of the reference and award, is precluded from moving to set it aside. If no award had been made, no costs would have been due; by accepting the costs of the award he admits the award to be valid, and cannot now say that it is bad". In King v. Simmonds (5) the plaintiff was allowed to amend the record on payment of the costs, occasioned by the amendment, to the defendant, and it was held that the defendant cannot after taxing and receiving such costs apply to set aside the order for amendment as made without jurisdiction.

In Pearce v. Chaplin (6), on motion to set aside judgment and execution for irregularity, the Court made an order setting them aside without costs, but not embodying any decision as to the irregularity and adding a direction that the defendant should bring no action. The defendant, while protesting against the direction, availed himself of the order, and it was held that he could not apply to the Court to rescind that part of it which forbade bringing an action.

HANMANT V. SHIDU SAMBHU.

In the case of Mani Lal Guzrati v. Harendra Lal Roy (2), an order for amendment of a plaint was made on payment of costs to the defendants; the costs were received under protest. The learned Judges held that the principle of the English decisions did not apply, as the costs had been accepted by the defendants under protest and the defendants had no choice in the matter having regard to the form of the order of the Court. The principle referred to in the above case was followed in Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (1). In that case, a suit which was dismissed for non-prosecution was restored on an application on behalf of the plaintiff, and the Court made certain orders in respect of the payment of defendant's costs incidental to the application, and the defendants got their costs taxed, and obtained an allocatur. It was held that having taken this benefit under the order the defendants were precluded from appealing against it.

It will appear that in the English cases as also in the case in Banku Chandra Bose v. Marium Begum (1) cited above, the opposite party having accepted the benefit which he would not have obtained otherwise than under such order, was held to be precluded from challenging the validity of the order.

In the case before us, there was no such thing. The plaintiff appealed against the decree in so far as it disallowed compound interest. After the appeal had been filed, against that part of the decree which disallowed compound interest he accepted the costs (deposited by the respondent) and which was decreed by the lower Court on the basis of simple interest as to which there was no dispute and which the plaintiff would have got in any event whether the appeal succeeded or failed. In these circumstances, the principle of the cases referred to above does not apply to the present case.

The appeal must accordingly be allowed. The plaintiff will get a decree for interest at the rate stipulated in the bond and with costs in all Courts.

Mortgage—Redemption suit—Decree for Possession on payment of specified amount—Payment to be made in particular month in any year—Relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, if determined—Application for execution beyond time—Application, whether may be treated as redemption suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 148.

In 1886, a consent-decree was passed in a redemption suit to the following effect:—"The plaintiff do pay to the defendants Rs. 55 in respect of the debt on mortgage in the month of Chaitra of any year and the plaintiff do obtain possession of the lands in suit, considering the same to have been redeemed from the mortgage. It should be understood that the plaintiff is not entitled to take possession of the lands in dispute in any other month except the month of Chaitra." In 1919 the plaintiff sought to execute the decree and was met by the contention that execution was barred by limitation.

Held, (1) that the effect of the decree was not to put an end to the mortgage, but only to settle the mortgage amount, and to direct that if that amount be paid in any following year the defendant should give back possession;

(2) that as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued after the decree was passed, there was nothing in it which barred the plaintiff's right to redeem;

(3) that it was open to the Court under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, to treat the application for execution as a suit for redemption, for which the period of limitation was sixty years under Art. 148, Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

HANMANT V. SHIDU SAMBHU.

JUDGMENT.—A decree was passed in August 1886 in a suit between the respective predecessors of the parties in which a consent-decree was taken in the following words:—"The plaintiff do pay to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 Rs. 55 (fifty five rupees) in respect of the debt on mortgage in the month of Chaitra of any year and the plaintiff do obtain possession of the lands in suit considering the same to have been redeemed from the mortgage. It should be understood that the plaintiff is not entitled to take possession of the lands in dispute in any other month except the month of Chaitra."

The plaintiff is now seeking to execute that decree and was met by the contention that execution was barred by limitation. The Trial Court, relying upon the decision in Maruti v. Krishna (1), held that the application was time-barred, and disallowed the plaintiff's application to treat the Darkhast as a suit under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee no longer existed.

This decision was confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. It seems that the decision of the Full Bench in Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji, (2) was not considered. I do not think that the effect of the decree of 1886 was to put an end to the mortgage, and that is the real test. The relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee still continued to exist between the parties, only the mortgage amount which had previously been in dispute was settled, and it was directed that if the plaintiff paid that amount in Chaitra of any following year, the defendants should give back possession. If the plaintiff did not choose to pay the mortgage amount, then he had no right to apply for possession. It was really a preliminary decree. It is quite true that in Maruti v. Krishna (1) the Court considered that "when the words of the decree were vague and indefinite, and were to be considered as really mentioning no time for payment, the decree should be taken as operating from its date, and to be enforceable only within three years from that time, unless kept alive by application for execution made according to law within the prescribed period."

With all respect I cannot agree with that decision under Art. 181 three years are prescribed as the period of limitation for applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule, or by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, and time begins to run from the time when the time to apply accrued. The plaintiff could apply for the assistance of the Court after he had offered to pay Rs. 55 and the defendants refused to give him possession of the land. Until he paid the money he was not entitled to possession, and until possession was asked for and refused he had no right to apply to the Court. If he had not tendered the money, he could make no application to the Court for assistance, and it is difficult to see what sort of application the plaintiff could have made to the Court from time to time. If as a matter of fact he was not prepared to pay the amount mentioned in the decree, he could only say to the Court: "I am not ready to pay the amount, I want the time extended." The Court would reply, "There is no time mentioned for the payment of the amount, therefore, there is no necessity for you to make an application to extend time which has not expired." But in any event as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued after the decree of 1886 was passed, it cannot be said there was anything in that decree which could be considered as barring the plaintiff's right to redeem. He would then come under Art. 148 which prescribes 60 years as the period of limitation for the redemption of a mortgage, and if his right of redemption is not barred, then under the decision in Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji (2) he can bring another suit for redemption. Therefore, even supposing we are prepared to hold that the Darkhast is barred under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, then it is still open to the Court under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, to treat the Darkhast (application) as a suit for redemption. That seems to us a perfectly right course to take.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case the facts are that a decree-holder in a Small Cause Suit applied for attachment of a debt alleged to be due by one Khader Moideen to the judgment-debtor. Notice of that application was served upon Khader Moideen as garnishee and also upon the widow of the judgment-debtor as representing his estate. She did not appear but the garnishee appeared and put in a counter-statement in which he alleged three things, first, that the debt had never been due to the judgment-debtor, second, that it had been assigned and he had promised to pay the assignee; and thirdly, that the amount of the debt was not Rs. 350 as claimed by the decree-holder but Rs. 300. That application came before the District Munsif the garnishee appearing, and the District Munsif passed an order in these words: "Attachment is confirmed." In due course, the debt which had been attached was brought to sale as the property of the judgment-debtor in the Small Cause Suit and was purchased by the present plaintiff, who was himself the decree-holder. The present plaintiff then sued to recover the debt.

It has been held by the District Munsif and on appeal by the Subordinate Judge that there never was any debt due by the garnishee to the judgment-debtor, and in fact that the debt which had been supposed to be due to the judgment-debtor was due not to him but to his widow, and consequently the suit was dismissed.

The question for our determination is whether it was open to those Courts to go into this question at all, and, in my judgment, it was not. By section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly or substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties. Now the whole matter decided was directly in issue in the execution and garnishee proceedings in 1913. It is true that the order made in 1913 was not at once final, because, under O. XXI, r. 63 where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. Now the garnishee did not choose within the time limited by the Indian Limitation Act, namely, a year, to bring in any such suit, and so the matter became conclusive. It having been decided by the Court in 1913 that the debt was a debt for Rs. 350 due by the garnishee to the judgment-debtor, as long as that order stands, it cannot be re-agitated as between the parties to those proceedings.

We are told that after service upon him of the notice calling upon him to show cause why this debt should not be attached the garnishee acted upon a notice he had received of an assignment of the debt to a third party and paid the full amount to the third party. I should very much doubt the truth of that statement, because it is exceedingly unlikely, having got notice from the Court that someone was claiming, that he should have paid this alleged assignee pending the hearing of the application. If he did so, and the result of this judgment is that, he will now have to pay over again to some one else, he has no one to blame but himself for not taking the steps which were provided for him by the Code, namely, of suing to establish his right under O. XXI, r. 63, within a year. I suspect the reason why he did not do so was that he knew at that time he would not succeed.

The decrees of the lower Courts must, therefore, be set aside and the plaintiff will get a decree, in the usual mortgage-decree form, against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for Rs. 350 and interest thereon at six per cent. per annum from the date from which interest was due on the mortgage i. e., May 2, 1912, to the date of payment with costs both here and in the Courts below. Time for payment six months.

A person who has acquired property under a voidable title can himself give a good title to that property to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee from him who deals for value and has no notice of the defects in the title. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Constructive notice of all the rights of a person in possession will be imputed to a purchaser or mortgagee who makes no inquiry of the person in occupation, on the principle that where another is in exclusive possession of property and such possession is prima facie inconsistent with the full right of the vendor or mortgagor and the purchaser does not choose to ask what that possession is, he must be taken to have got the information that he would have obtained if he had asked. It is not, however, the duty of a proposed purchaser or mortgagee to inquire of every person who may be on the premises or any part thereof, nor does the unknown occupation of a part of the premises put him on inquiry as to the possible rights of the occupier of that portion over the remainder of the premises. In the case of tenement houses, there may be on the premises the actual sub-tenants, their wives, families, friends, guests and so forth. To suggest that it is the duty of the proposed mortgagee or purchaser to attend on these premises and examine narrowly every one of these persons would be to him an intolerable burden and to hold that he was affected by constructive notice of all these persons possible equitable rights over any part of the premises would be an extension of the doctrine of constructive notice, which must be kept within the limits which have already been fixed. JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—One Jambulinga owned two adjoining houses in Mylapore. He purported to mortgage them to one Subbusami who was the brother of the husband of Meenakshi, Jambulinga's daughter. He then died and left a Will appointing his widow Mylathammal executrix and giving her power to sell his property for the purpose of paying debts and to enjoy what was left during her life and bequeathing after her death what was left to Meenakshi. Probate has never been taken out of the Will. Some years later, the widow purported to sell the property to Rajagopal, her brother for Rs. 1,000. The documents of title were handed over to him; the sale-deed was registered and in the presence of the Registrar a thousand rupees were handed over by Rajagopal to the widow. Subbusami joined in that sale by acknowledging the discharge of his mortgage which was for a larger amount, the sale-deed providing that the sale was for the purpose of discharging that mortgage. Many years afterwards, Rajagopal purported to sell the property to Subbaroya Gramony for Rs. 4,000, and he with the assistance of Rajagopal, mortgaged the premises to the plaintiff or Rs. 2,000, it being stated that Rs. 2,000 was required for the purpose of providing part of the purchase-money. This suit has been brought by this mortgagee to obtain possession of the premises. Meenakshi who has been for sometime in occupation of part of one of the two houses resists the claim for ejectment alleging that the property is hers.

The learned Judge, who tried the case, has held that defendant Meenakshi has made out her case. He holds that all the transactions relating to this property from the time of the mortgage to Subbusami down to the sale to Subbaroya Gramony and including that sale, were benami transactions and mere shams. He holds, too, that the plaintiff is in no better position than Rajagopal or Subbaroya Gramony, because he is not a bona fide mortgagee for value without notice.

I agree with the findings of fact of the learned Judge except on two material points. I agree that the original mortgage to Subbusami by Jambulinga himself was not a real transaction. I agree that the sale by Rajagopal to Subbaroya Gramony was not a real transaction. I am prepared also to accept his view of the character and credibility of Rajagopal that he was an impecunious and unscrupulous person. But I do not agree with the inference that he has drawn from the facts put before him in relation to the sale by Mylathammal, the widow. Nor do I agree that on the facts as found by him, the plaintiff is not a bona fide mortgagee for value. No rational explanation has been offered to the Court as to why Mylathammal should have gone through the form of selling the property to her brother Rajagopal. It is suggested that she did so either so that Rajagopal might be trustee for Meenakshi, her daughter, and after her death, protect the property for the benefit of the daughter against her husband, or as an alternative, that she went through a form of real sale in order to frighten her son-in-law and make him more careful in the future in his conduct towards her and her daughter. The first of these alternatives seems to me to be incredible, for one cannot believe that her mother would hand over her property to her brother in trust after her death for her daughter in the form of an absolute conveyance without informing her daughter of the fact; and it is admitted that the daughter was never told anything about it. In doing so she would leave her daughter at the mercy of her uncle and, if the uncle died, she would leave her without evidence to attempt to recover her inheritance from the uncle's heirs. The other alternative seems to me to be equally incredible. Because, in order to have the desired salutary effect upon the conduct of the son-in-law, he would have to be told of the sale, that there was a real sale, and one would have thought that he would ascertain at once that it was not a real sale because his brother Subbusami, who was a party to the transaction, would tell him not to be alarmed, as the whole thing was benami and could be disregarded. And, again, if he knew about it, how is it possible that his wife Meenakshi did not know about it? I cannot accept either alternative as a possible motive for this curious transaction. It is not the case of a person buying the property and putting the name of somebody else as benami. It is suggested to be the case of a person who has a life-interest and whose daughter has a reversionary right to her property, voluntarily parting with the property in the sense of transferring it to somebody else. It is a much more likely view, in my judgment, that Rajagopal being of the character attributed to him, in some way defrauded or tricked his sister into selling the property to him at an under-value and probably, also, knowing full well that under the terms of the Will she was exceeding her authority in effecting the sale, because at that time there were no debts of the testator which required to be paid. I find on the facts that the sale to Rajagopal was a real sale though induced by fraud and voidable, therefore, on discovery of fraud by Mylathammal and consequently also by Meenakshi. But a person who has acquired property under a voidable title can himself give a good title to that property to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee from him who deals for value and has no notice of the defects in the title. In this case the plaintiff admittedly dealt for value. He had in fact no notice at all of anything being wrong from the beginning to the end of these transactions. He had before him the original mortgage, the Will, title-deeds to the property, the conveyance to Rajagopal and the endorsement by the original mortgagee. He knew nothing of Meenakshi or that she had ever resided on the premises. But it is argued that he had constructive notice of all Meenakshi's claims by reason of the fact that, unknown to him, she was at the date of sale in possession of a part of the premises. Now, the doctrine of constructive notice is one that applies here as well as in England, and here the requisites for it are stated in section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act which runs thus:—"A person is said to have notice of a fact when he actually knows that fact or when, but for wilful abstention from an enquiry or search, which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it, ... In England, as here, it has been held that constructive notice of all the rights of a person in possession of property sold or mortgaged is to be imputed to purchasers or mortgagees who made no enquiry of the persons in occupation. But the rule depends upon the principle that where another is in exclusive possession of the property and such possession would be prima facie inconsistent with the full rights of ownership of the vendor or mortgagor and the purchaser does not choose to ask what that possession is, he must be taken to have got the information that he would have obtained if he had asked. It has, however, frequently been laid down that that doctrine has gone to its full length and must not be extended, and it has never been held that it is the duty of the proposed purchaser or mortgagee to enquire of every person who may be on the premises or any part of those premises. Nor has it been suggested that the unknown occupation of a part of the premises would put him on enquiry as to the possible rights of the occupier of that portion over the remainder of the premises. There is indeed strong authority to the contrary. That Master of Equity, Mr. Justice Farwell, as he then was, in Hunt v. Luck (1) with whose judgment the Court of Appeal in Hunt v. Luck (2) agreed, said thus: "If a vendor or mortgagor offers property stated to be subject to tenancies, there is nothing in the fact that the tenants are in occupation to give rise to any suspicion, ..." In Hunter v. Wallers (3), it was held that if further enquiry as to title of a small part of the estate would have been a defect in title as the whole estate, the purchaser was not to be held to have constructive notice of that defect. In Mangi Karimbhai v. Hoorbai (4) it was held that the fact that a person was in occupation of a small part of a house did not put a purchaser on constructive notice of that person's rights as to the whole house. But, apart from authority, one has to see here whether there has been wilful abstention from enquiry or gross negligence and I fail to see how there can be wilful abstention or gross negligence in a failure to enquire from every body on the premises what their title might be. In the case of tenement houses, there may be on the premises the actual sub-tenants, their wives, families, friends, guests, and so forth. To suggest that it is the duty of the proposed mortgagee or purchaser to attend on these premises and examine narrowly everyone of these persons would be to him an intolerable burden and to hold that he was affected by constructive notice of all these persons' possible equitable rights over any part of the premises would be an extension of the doctrine of constructive notice which, as I have pointed out, has long been held, must be kept within the limits which have been fixed. I find nothing in the case to put the plaintiff upon any inquiry to Meenakshi's rights and I hold that he is a mortgagee for value without notice.

An attempt was made before us to contend that the defendant had a prescriptive title as against plaintiff, that she and her mother had been in adverse possession of this property over 12 years. No such defence was set up in the Court below and no such issue was before that Court. In my judgment it is much too late to raise such a point now when it is obvious all the materials which would be required to decide that question properly are not before the Court.

On my finding that the plaintiff is a mortgagee for value, it follows that he is entitled to succeed in the action unless there is some infirmity in his own title, and this brings me to a point which has been fully argued before us under section 187 of the Succession Act which applies to the will of Jambulinga in this case. By that section no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction shall have granted probate of the will under which the right is claimed or shall have granted letters of administration. Now the position in this case is rather curious. The defendant Meenakshi has no right to this property at all unless she takes under the will from Jambulinga. It is not right, as has been suggested in some cases, to treat a Will of which Probate has not been granted as non-existent and the property passing by intestacy. On the contrary, the Will is a perfectly valid document. The executor under it can deal with the property and give a perfectly good title, though it may be that to complete that title it requires Probate to be taken out at a later date. The defendant then having no title under the Will which she can prove and seeing, too, that her right as reversioner might be affected when Probate has been granted, she says that she is prepared, as far as this case is concerned, to be treated as a mere trespasser in possession of the premises. She says "you, the plaintiff, cannot turn me out, because you cannot prove your title without proving that Will and you cannot prove that Will without producing the Probate of it." Now the law as stated in section 187, in my judgment, is the same as the Law of England on the subject. And I think that it is, that a person who in Court has to prove title and has to deduce that title from a Will, whether that person is plaintiff or defendant cannot do so without producing Probate, and I do not agree with the cases which have suggested to the contrary such as Carlapatti Chinna Cunniah v. Cota Wammalivaraiah (5) which seems to have decided that a defendant can claim as a legatee under an unproved

Will. This would not prevent a defendant resisting a claim by an heir-at-law by producing and proving a Will of which Probate had not been granted. But the difficulty which would have been put in the plaintiff's way, if the view which I have just expressed is correct, is in this case removed; because, Mylathammal who sold and conveyed to Rajagopal, she being executrix of the Will, was herself in possession of the property, and she had a right to that possession and she could give that possessory right to Rajagopal and that right to possession would be included in the conveyance by her of the property absolutely. The plaintiff in this case stands in the shoes of Rajagopal as far as title is concerned. He, too, has that possessory title which can be used by him to eject a trespasser. (See Asher v. Whitlock (6) approved by the Privy Council in Perry v. Clissold (7). If, on the other hand, the defendant Meenakshi was entitled to rely upon the Will, it would follow that the plaintiff could equally rely upon it and then he would be able to say that he innocently took the property from a purchaser from an executrix who had a right given by the Will of selling the property and that he is not concerned with the fact that the executrix exceeded the authority which she in fact had, and there would also arise in that eventuality an interesting question how far the daughter claiming as a lagatee is estopped by reason of the acts of her mother, the executrix, as well as of her father, the testator.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, for his mortgage is a good mortgage as against the defendant Meenakshi. Her rights to redeem on payment of principal, interest and costs must depend on the terms of the mortgage which she, no doubt, can get Rajagopal to enforce. The mortgage being a usufructuary mortgage, the plaintiff is entitled to possession. This appeal must be allowed with costs here and below. Judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for possession and for enquiry of mesne profits.

Wallace, J.—I agree.

The plaintiff is suing to eject the second defendant from certain property. He holds the title-deeds for that as from the original owner Jambulinga, and is prima facie entitled to be put in possession under his usufructuary mortgage and to eject second defendant on the strength of his documents, coupled with his payment of good consideration for his mortgage, until it is otherwise shown that he has not obtained a good title to eject.

As against plaintiff's case, the second defendant has put her case, as I take it, on four grounds. Firstly, that Exhibit D, in particular the really important document in this case, is benami; secondly, that if Exhibit D is not benami she is entitled to ignore her father's Will, remain on the property as the heir to her father; thirdly, that if Exhibit D is not benami and the Will accepted, she is entitled to remain on the property on the ground that her mother had no right to sell it, and, fourthly, that assuming that Exhibit D is not benami and she gets no title even under the Will, she can maintain her possession as a trespasser against the plaintiff unless he is able to prove a better title.

Grounds Nos. 2 and 4 may be shortly disposed of. It is quite clear that 2nd defendant cannot ignore the Will. The property was the self-acquired property of her father and he left a Will. There was no intestacy. The Will, Exhibit M, is registered, has been attested by witnesses on both sides in this case and although denied by the second defendant has been accepted as genuine by the Trying Court and it does not matter whether before the suit the second defendant was aware of it or not. I should have been inclined to hold further that, until the second defendant had taken out Probate, she cannot plead in defence any right as legatee under the Will, had not a Bench of this Court apparently held in a case reported as Carlapatti Chinna Cunniah v. Cota Wammalivariah (5) in which however, the facts are not very clear, that section 187 of the Indian Succession Act did not preclude her from doing so. At any rate, it is quite clear that the 2nd defendant cannot ignore the Will since if she does so she has otherwise no right to the property. Therefore, ground No. 2 fails.

PARTHASARATHY AIYAR v. SUBBAROYA GRAMONY.

As to ground No. 4, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that section 187 is no bar to a transferee from an executrix who has not taken out Probate but who was in possession and who has given possessory title-deed suing on that title-deed to eject a trespasser. It cannot be said that the transferee in such a case has not a better title to possession than the trespasser and the lack of Probate is insufficient, under the authorities quoted, to bar the ejectment of such a trespasser.

The next point is ground No. 1. It relates to the question whether Exhibit D is a genuine sale. That Exhibit D was a benami document under which no transfer of the property was at all intended, as the Trying Court has held, I find very difficult to believe. There is really no evidence to prove it and the onus lies on those who assert it. The hearsay statement of the widow reported by Vinayaka Mudali is not evidence that the statement was true and is partly countered by the fact that the sale-deed was handed over to the transferee. The only attester examined, D. W. No. 2, who speaks to its benami nature is on the second defendant's own admission the real contesting defendant in this case. The reason alleged for benami document, namely, to frighten the second defendant's husband, is unintelligible if it is true as contended that it was kept from his knowledge altogether. Further, it seems incredible that the widow of Rajagopal or D. W. No. 2 or 2nd defendant's husband, if he knew of it, would not at some time have told second defendant about the real nature of the transaction which, on the face of it, robbed her of her rights and made sure that the title-deeds were handed to her. In my view, the second defendant has no reasonable explanation why the documents Exhibits E, M and D were not with her. I cannot believe that she did not know that they were in possession of Rajagopal (sic.) should have been left in possession of these title-deeds ever since 1906 or why it was necessary to keep up the benami farce after the death of second defendant's husband in 1910. It is further difficult to believe that second defendant would not have heard that Rajagopal himself was mortgaging the property in 1908 her husband's brother having attested that mortgage. It is quite clear to me that she knew of Rajagopal's title and, for reasons known to herself, refrained from challenging it. Against these considerations are set the alleged low price and the fact that Exhibit D was executed ostensibly to discharge Exhibit E. I am not so clear as the Trying Court that Exhibit E was benami but accepting it to be so there is nothing to show that the widow knew that it was so, and at this distance of time I am not prepared to assume in the absence of evidence that she did know. If Rajagopal was, as contended by second defendant, villain enough to cheat her by Exhibit D, he would not scruple by using Exhibit E to cheat her mother also. The theory that the ostensible mortgagee Subbusami and Rajagopal colluded to cheat the widow might easily account for the low figure in Exhibit D. It is also not as clear as the Trying Court found that Rajagopal could not have raised Rs. 1,000 on loan then, as he was able to do in 1905 under Exhibit Q, which if he was an insolvent as suggested it is unlikely that the widow would choose him as benamidar. Her refusal of Vinayaka Mudali's offer of Rs. 2,000 was not very reasonable as by selling to Rajagopal she was at least keeping the property within the family, and probably securing herself in continued occupation thereof. As to the tenants paying rent to the widow, such occupation with Rajagopal's permission may be the very simple explanation for that, and there is no evidence free from grave suspicion that for any length of time they paid rent to second defendant or to any one on her behalf and not on behalf of Rajagopal. I find it difficult to believe that if Ayyathambi was collecting rent for second defendant he never informed her of the sale-deed which he attested by her mother to Rajagopal. The fact that she pleaded she did not know of the sale is enough to dispose of the idea that the attester to Exhibit D was collecting rent for her. The execution of rental agreements by Rajagopal, and first defendant may be due merely to the fact that they had a suspicion that the tenants were then preparing to side with second defendant. There is thus no convincing evidence that Exhibit D must have been benami and I, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice that Exhibit D must be held to have been a genuine sale transferring all the vendor's rights in the property to Rajagopal. Therefore, the second defendant cannot resist the plaintiff's suit on the plea that Exhibit D was benami.

Ground No. 3 remains. The question is whether or not second defendant's mother had a right to sell under Exhibit D so as to bind second defendant by the sale. It seems unlikely that the mother would wish to defraud the daughter. No reason why she should do so is suggested. It, therefore, seems probable that she must have at least believed that the debt under Exhibit D was a genuine debt. On this point again I would call in aid the Will. I have said that the second defendant cannot reprobate it, and if she now approbates, it is to claim rights to herself, she cannot be heard to reprobate it so as to destroy the mother's right and authority under it. That is, she cannot be heard to deny that the mother had the authority of the testator to sell the property to discharge his debts and that she herself is entitled only to the residue of the property after such sale. As to whether there was necessity for the sale, i.e., whether there was a genuine debt under Exhibit E, it is clear to me that Jambulinga when he died left Exhibit E, and his Will among other documents, to his widow, and thus, in my view, represented to his widow as to others that the debt under Exhibit E was genuine and one which fell to be discharged under the Will, and the widow, as I find, believed that it was a genuine debt. Second defendant, who claims under the Will of the testator who was guilty of this representation which resulted in a genuine sale under Exhibit D, cannot in my view be heard to say that this was not a bona fide sale by the widow, i.e., bona fide so far as she was concerned and that it was not validated by the authority given under the Will. For this conclusion reference may be made to the Privy Council case in Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh (8). It appears to me then that even if I accept the finding of the Trying Court that Exhibit E was benami there was a misrepresentation by the testator that it was a genuine debt, which misrepresentation binds the residuary legatee who claims under the Will and the plea that there was no real debt cannot be advanced by the 2nd defendant against one who was no party to the sale Exhibit D. For the purposes of this case it must be held that Exhibit D was genuine sale for the discharge of a genuine debt and, therefore, valid and binding on the testator's legatee under the authority given by the Will which the second defendant cannot reprobate.

I would hold, therefore, that second defendant can have no locus standi to challenge the title of Rajagopal under Exhibit D or his ability to hand on a good title to first defendant and through him to plaintiff. It is no part of second defendant's business to challenge the consideration paid by the first defendant to Rajagopal or plaintiff's title as against Rajagopal, since, even if Exhibit L was benami, plaintiff can, if it were necessary for him to do so, plead in this case that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the benami nature of Exhibit L, and hold up his mortgage against Rajagopal.

In the view, then, that second defendant has no real legal claim which can be heard to this property, the question of constructive notice to plaintiff of her claim which has been argued at length before us will not arise nor would it matter whether or not he knew the extent of her claim before his mortgage. It is only if her claim is a good one in law that it is worth while contending that plaintiff, a mortgagee for value, was guilty of wilful abstention from enquiry or gross negligence, and consequently must be deemed to have had notice of her claim and his mortgagor's inability to convey to him a good title. That, even so, there was any such wilful abstention or gross negligence I find it difficult to deduce. I do not go further into this question as I agree with the learned Chief Justice for the reasons given by him that no wilful abstention or gross negligence on the part of plaintiff has been established.

JUDGMENT.

Viscount Haldane.—This appeal is brought from two judgments of the Chief Court of the Punjab and a decree following on them, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hissar. In the litigation out of which the appeal arises the respondents were plaintiffs. They claimed to have validly exercised a right of pre-emption over certain lands which the respondent Mrs. Forbes, who was made a defendant only formally, had sold to the appellant. Into the details of the transaction it is not necessary to enter at great length, for their Lordships are of opinion that the case must be disposed of on a principle governing procedure which will appear presently. It is sufficient to state that Mrs. Forbes sold to the appellant her proprietary rights in the subject-matter of the suit, two villages called Mauza Kagsar and Mauza Jamni Kera, by a deed of sale on 2nd October 1912. The price, Rs. 42,000, was paid, and, the appellant took possession. Shortly afterwards, the respondents other than Mrs. Forbes sued the appellant to set aside the sale and for a decree for possession of the former of the two Mouzas on payment of Rs. 15,000. They claimed that they were Gaur Brahmins by caste, and were occupancy tenants of that village and members of an agricultural tribe of the village within the meaning of the Alienation of Land Act, XIII of 1900 of the Punjab. They further alleged that no formal notice or information had been given to them of the proposed sale of the village, which sale had been completed secretly and collusively, and that they were entitled to a right of pre-emption. Among other defences raised by the appellant was this, that in reality the plaintiffs-respondents were suing on behalf of third persons who had no right to purchase the village, and that in consequence no such right of pre-emption could be asserted on the part of the persons suing.

The learned Subordinate Judge tried a number of issues in the suit, which raised, among others, the question whether the plaintiffs were suing for their own benefit and had a right of pre-emption. In the end, he found in favour of the plaintiffs on all the material issues, including those raising the questions just referred to. The present appellant then appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab. A Division Bench of that Court, consisting of Scott-Smith and Leslie-Jones, JJ., reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the plaintiffs' claim for pre-emption was really one on behalf of third persons who had no such right. They had allowed, as an additional ground of appeal, the contention to be brought before them that the suit had been instituted in the interests of third persons who were non-agriculturists and had on that account no right of pre-emption, and had given leave to the defendant to adduce further evidence on the point, including the records of certain proceedings. In the result they allowed the appeal, holding that, because the plaintiffs were not suing for themselves alone, but for themselves in conjunction with other persons, their claim to pre-emption was not maintainable. The plaintiffs then applied, under O.

CHHAJJU RAM v. NEEL.

XLVII, r. I, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for a review of the judgment of the Division Bench on the ground that the Division Bench ought not to have admitted the additional ground of appeal, and that the learned Judges were misled into holding that the facts found by them disentitled the plaintiffs to a decree.

The application for review came before the same Chief Court, not constituted as before but differently. At the second hearing the Division Bench was made up of Wilberforce, J., another Judge of the Chief Court and Scott-Smith, J., who had sat at the previous hearing. These learned Judges held that the previous Division Bench was right in admitting the additional evidence, especially as no objection had been taken by the plaintiffs to its admission, and that that Bench did right in considering it. But the second Division Bench thus newly constituted then proceeded to deal on the merits with the judgment brought before them under the Code for review, treating the view of the law taken by the previous Division Bench as a matter that was open to them as if on an appeal. They held that the previous decision of the case had "proceeded upon an incorrect exposition of the law." Accepting on this ground the application for review, they directed the "appeal to go before the Bench for their decision." In accordance with this direction the case was heard by a Division Bench of the Chief Court constituted of Wilberforce, J. and another Judge who had not previously heard it, LeRossignol, J. These learned Judges considered certain other grounds of appeal which had not been decided by Scott-Smith and Leslie-Jones, JJ., being immaterial in the view which they had taken. They decided these points adversely to the appellants and then followed the decision of Wilberforce and Scott-Smith, JJ., at the second hearing by the Chief Court, and dismissed the appeal.

It will be observed that the question with which their Lordships have to deal is one concerned not with appeal to a Court of Appeal, but with review by the Court which had already disposed of the case. In England it is only under strictly limited circumstances that an application for such a review can be entertained. In India, however, provision has for long past been made by legislation for review in addition to appeal. But as the right is the creation of Indian statute-law, it is, necessary to see what such statutory law really allows.

The law applicable to the present case is laid down by O. XLVII, r. I of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. This rule is enacted in the following terms:—

"Any person considering himself aggrieved, (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred, (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed, or (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order."

By rule 5 of the same Order it is provided that—

"Where the Judge, or Judges, or any one of the Judges, who passed the decree or made the order, a review of which is applied for, continues or continue attached to the Court at the time when an application for the review is presented, and is not or are precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application from considering the decree or order to which the application refers, such Judge or Judges or any of them shall hear the application, and no other Judge or Judges of the Court shall hear the same."

Their Lordships observe that Wilberforce, J., was not one of the Judges who passed the decree or made the order reviewed. They understand that Leslie-Jones, J., was precluded by absence from sitting. But this circumstance makes no difference to what is prescribed by rule 5. It is clear that Wilberforce, J., was precluded by the language from hearing the application, and this in itself would be a fatal objection to the judgment in review. The Court of review had to be composed of Scott-Smith, J., alone, a circumstance not without importance for the large considerations which follow.

But larger considerations present themselves. The Order re-enacts with important variations legislation on the subject of review which has been in operation for a long time past.

If their Lordships felt themselves at liberty to construe the language of O. XLVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, without reference to its history and to the decisions upon it, their task would not appear to be a difficult one. For it is obvious that the Code contemplates procedure by way of review by the Court which has already given judgment as being different from that by way of appeal to a Court of Appeal. The three cases in which alone mere review is permitted are those of new material overlooked by excusable misfortune, mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or "any other sufficient reason." The first two alternatives do not apply in the present case, and the expression "sufficient," if this were all, would naturally be read as meaning sufficiency of a kind analogous to the two already specified, that is to say, to excusable failure to bring to the notice of the Court new and important matters, or error on the face of the record. But before adopting this restricted construction of the expression "sufficient" it is necessary to have in mind, in the first place, that the provision as to review was not introduced into the Code for the first time in 1908, but appears there as a modification of previous provision made in earlier legislation; and, in the second place, that the extent of the power of a Court in India to review its own decree under successive forms of legislative provision has been the subject of a good deal of judicial interpretation, not, however, in all cases harmonious. That the power given by the Indian Code is different from the very restricted power which exists in England appears plain from the decision in Charles Bright & Co. v. Sellar (1) where the Court of Appeal discussed the history of the procedure in England and explained its limits.

Turning first to the earlier forms assumed in Indian legislation on the matter in question, their Lordships observe that the Bengal Regulation XXVI of 1814, by section 2, confers on the Courts there mentioned a power of review analogous to that under consideration, excepting that the expression "otherwise requisite for the ends of justice" is added, an expression which may have been regarded as enlarging the scope of the word "sufficient," used as it was in much the same way as in the present Code. The expression "requisite for the ends of justice" is again introduced in section 8 of the Code of the Civil Procedure of 1859. But in the Code of 1877 the language is varied, and the law is enacted in substantially the more restricted words in which it is enacted in the Code of 1908. Upon the construction of the language used from time to time by the legislature, there has been much divergence of judicial opinion. For example, even on the wider words in the Code of 1859, the High Court at Calcutta in the case of Kcy Mcghraj v. Beejoy Gobind Bural (2) adopted the restricted construction and laid down emphatically that there could be no re-hearing for the purpose of seeing whether a different conclusion on the merits should be adopted. On the other hand, in Nusseerooddien Khan v. Indumorain Chowdkry (3) the majority of the Court appear to have considered that the wider meaning should be attributed to the language.

Their Lordships have examined numerous authorities, and they have found much conflict of judicial opinion on the point referred to. There is plainly no such preponderance of view in either direction as to render it clear that there is any settled course of decision which they are under obligation to follow. Some of the decisions in the earlier cases may have been influenced by the wider form of expression then in force, and these decisions may have had weight with the learned Judges, who in cases turning on the subsequent Code, had regarded the intention of the legislature as remaining unaltered. But their Lordships are unable to assume that the language used in the Codes of 1877 and 1908 is intended to leave open the questions which were raised on the language used in the earlier legislation. They think that r. 1 of O. XLVII must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review is to-day permitted, and the reference to practice under former and different Statutes is misleading. So construing it they interpret the words "any other sufficient reason" as meaning a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. Such an interpretation excludes from the power of review conferred the course taken by the second and third Division Benches, composed of Wilberforce, J., and Scott-Smith, J., and by Wilberforce, J., and LeRossignol, J., respectively. The result is that the judgments given by these two Division Benches ought to be set aside, and that of the Bench of the Chief Court composed of Scott-Smith, J., and Leslie-Jones, J., restored, so that the suit will stand dismissed. The respondent-plaintiffs must pay the costs here and in the Courts below.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

THE FIRM RAGHBIR SINGH-JASWANT SINGH OF QUETTA—DEFENDANTS—

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1, O. XL, r. 1, O. XLIII, r. 1 (s)—Order directing defendant to prepare inventory and keep accounts; nature of—Order declaring that appointment of Receiver is necessary—Appeal—Receiver, when to be appointed—Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager, whether necessary—Presumption.

An order directing a defendant to prepare an inventory of the property in dispute and to keep accounts falls under O. XXXIX, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code and is appealable. [p. 574, col. 1.]

An order of a Court that a Receiver should be appointed in a case, without appointing anybody by name as Receiver, and adjourning the case to a later date for so appointing one is an order under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code and is appealable under O. XLIII r. 1 (s) of the Code. [p. 571, col. 2.]

(Case-law discussed.)

In a suit for partition of joint family property the Court should not appoint a Receiver except by consent or upon proof by the plaintiff that prima facie he has a very excellent chance of succeeding in establishing the case made out in the plaint, and that the property in possession of the opposite party is in danger of being wasted. [p. 573, col. 1.]

In such a case, ordinarily, the defendant's share in the property would be ample security for any claim which plaintiff might be able to substantiate in any suit for damages. [p. 573, col. 1.]

A Civil Court should not appoint a Receiver in respect of agricultural land of which the plaintiff is not in possession and which the Court has no jurisdiction to partition, or to apportion the produce of. [p. 574, col. 2.]

Semble:—There can be no joint Hindu family without a manager.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 8th June 1922.

Mr. G. S. Salariya, and Lala Badri Das R. B., for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar R. B. and Kunwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of two appeals preferred under O. XLIII,

FIRM RAGHBIR SINGH-JASWANT SINGH V. NARINJAN SINGH.

r. 1 (s). The parties concerned are entered in the following pedigree-table :

The plaintiffs lodged the suit on the 21st December 1921 alleging that the parties formed a joint Hindu family. The suit was filed on a Rs. 10 stamp, and was described as one for partition of the one-third share of the plaintiffs in joint family property, immoveable and moveable, in various districts of the Punjab and in Baluchistan. The property was stated to be of the value of Rs. 30, 00,000.

It was stated, further, that the joint family had been carrying on business in Quetta under the names of two distinct firms Amrik Singh-Gopal-Singh and Raghbir Singh-Jaswant Singh. The final prayer in the plaint was as follows:—

(1) Accounts to be taken from Gopal Singh, defendant, of the Quetta businesses, Amrik Singh-Gopal Singh and Raghbir Singh-Jaswant Singh, and whatever money be found due to the plaintiffs to be paid over to them.

(2) The other property specified in the plaint, immoveable and moveable, to be partitioned, and one-third share to be given to the plaintiffs except those properties numbered 11, 14, and 15, in respect of which, being agricultural land, a share of the plaintiffs only should be declared with a view to future partition by a Revenue Officer.

On the 5th May 1922 the plaintiffs applied for the appointment of a Receiver of the rabi crop of the lands in Kotli Mughalan in the District of Gujranwala which are said to measure 5143 kanals and to be the most valuable portion of the immoveable property in suit. The application alleged that Gopal Singh and Raghbir Singh would not allow the plaintiffs' servants to cut the crop and take away the grain. The application was opposed and a date was fixed for arguments on 2nd June 1922. On the 20th May 1922 another application was filed for the appointment of a Receiver of the whole property, on the ground that the defendants did not allow the plaintiffs their share in Kotli Mughalan produce, and that they denied the plaintiffs' right to a one-third share in the property, the whole of which they wished to appropriate. This application was warmly contested and was disposed of by the lower Court's order dated 8th June 1922 which is the subject of the present appeals.

The orders passed were as follows:—

(a) The appointment of a Receiver of the moveable property, houses and shops in the exclusive possession of the respective parties was refused.

(b) It was ordered that a separate Receiver of the property of the firm, Amrik Singh-Gopal Singh of Quetta, should be appointed and that since the parties were not inclined to suggest the name of any person at Quetta, the District Judge of that place should be asked for the names of respectable and honest business-men from whom a Receiver could be selected.

(c) It was ordered that no Receiver should be appointed for the firm Raghbir Singh-Jaswant Singh at Quetta, but Raghbir Singh and Jaswant Singh were directed to prepare an inventory of the effects of the firm, to keep accounts regularly and to furnish security in the sum of Rs. 5,000 for compliance with these orders.

(d) One Lala Bishamber Das was appointed Receiver of the immoveable property in the Punjab, that is to say, the properties in the Gujranwala, Gujrat and Shahpur districts numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, and 15 in the plaint. He was to manage these properties, realize rents and profits, keep accounts and submit them to Court every six months, to furnish security in the sum of Rs. 10,000 and to pay receipts in the manner directed by the Court.

Two appeals, as already stated, have been filed against this order. One is by Gopal Singh against orders (b) and (d) and the other by Raghubir Singh and Jaswant Singh against the order (c).

It should have been mentioned above that Autar Singh, defendant No. 1, is alleged by Gopal Singh to be colluding with the plaintiffs for the reason that he and Narinjan Singh were married to first cousins.

I deal first with order (b). The property of the firm Amrik Singh-Gopal Singh includes house property at Quetta, and it is admitted that Amrik Singh up to his death in 1915 was the manager of the firm. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies against this part of the order since no particular Receiver has been appointed, and, therefore, the order is not one under O. XL, r. 1. Several cases have been cited in support of this argument.

The first, Birajan Kooer v. Ram Churn Lall (1), is not directly in point and two of the others, Mathuria Debi v. Shib Dyal Singh (2) and Ramji v. Koman Das (3), also give no particular assistance. The former is a short judgment which does not state precisely what the order of the Court below was, and the question of the appeal being competent was not fought out, the appeal being withdrawn. In the Allahabad case the Court's order on the application for the appointment of a Receiver was to allow the application "provisionally." Three other cases are Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhury (4), Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (5) and Narbadashankar Mugatram Vyas v. Kevaldas Raghunathdas (6).

In the first of these the order of the Court below was as follows:—"I think the whole of the property in suit will be better managed and the interest of all the parties will be better served if the property in suit be placed in the hands of a competent Receiver."

It was held that this was not a final order appointing a Receiver and was not open to appeal.

In Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (5) the Sub-Judge had appointed a Receiver conditionally on his furnishing security, and it was held that there was no effective appointment until security had been given and that no appointment had been made within the meaning of O. XL, r. 1. Narbadashankar Mugatram Vyas v. Kevaldas Raghunathdas (6) followed Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag Chowdhury (4) and ruled that an order in the following terms was not appealable:—"I, therefore, hold that a proper person should be appointed a Receiver. The parties will be further heard on the point as to who should be appointed the Receiver." The learned Judges held that the simple words of the Code must be regarded which are "appointed a Receiver."

There is some force in the argument on behalf of the appellant that the terms of the order now under appeal, are distinctly more definite than any of those quoted above, but, however that may be, there are two direct authorities to the contrary that an order of a Court that a Receiver should be appointed in a case without appointing anybody by name as Receiver, and adjourning the case to a later date for so appointing one is an order under O. XL, r. 1, and appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (s). This was laid down by the majority of a Full Bench in Palaniappa Chetty v. Palaniapp Chetty (7). The learned Counsel for the respondents contends before me that the dissenting judgment of Mr. Justice Spencer (who, incidentally, considered that Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (5) went too far) contains a sounder view of law than that of the other two Judges. But the second authority in favour of such an appeal as the present being allowable is one by a Division Bench of this Court, Budhwanti v. Bishen Kaur (8). In that case the District Judge passed an order on the application for the appointment of a Receiver nominating the Collector who could not legally be appointed without his consent, and the Collector declined to act. An objection was taken that the order was not appealable and was overruled on the ground that the Court below had finally adjudicated on the question whether a Receiver should be appointed or not, and that, therefore, its order was a complete one under section 503 of the former Code.

It seems to me that the present order must be accepted to be one under O. XL, r. 1. It has been held in decisions by three High Courts which are quoted and accepted by Mr. Justice Rattigan in Sant Ram v. Ram Chand (9) that an appeal lies against an order refusing to appoint a Receiver under O. XL, r. 1, and thus there is ample authority that literal adherence to the actual words of the Order is not necessary. The majority of the Madras Full Bench ruled that an order for the appointment of a Receiver is as much an order appointing a Receiver, as an order naming a particular person as Receiver; and this being the latest authority and also being supported by the only pronouncement by this Court cited, I hold in accordance with it that the present appeal is competent. The Calcutta rulings are in direct conflict and a choice has got to be made.

On the merits the position is this: The plaintiffs-respondents have asserted in their plaint that the property is that of a joint Hindu family consisting of the descendants of Kartar Singh. They admitted in their plaint that Amrik Singh had been manager of the family and stated that since his death the possession and management of the business and the realization of income from the other property had been in the hands of Gopal Singh and his sons. The order now in question was passed before the pleas of the defendants were filed, but in contesting the application for the appointment of a Receiver the defendants denied the existence of the joint Hindu family, and denied that the property was joint between them and the plaintiffs. The parties admittedly are Sikhs.

I have heard a great deal of argument addressed to me on the question of whether the parties form a joint Hindu family or not and I refrain from giving this in detail since the question appears to be the main question for decision in the suit and it is necessary at this stage to be very careful not to say anything which may prejudice its ultimate decision by the lower Court. After consideration of those arguments, however, I do not think that the Court was justified in presuming before hearing evidence or receiving the defendants' pleadings that the parties constituted a joint Hindu family. There is a number of documents on the record, and some of them support the plaintiffs while others support the defendants.

Mr. Tek Chand for the appellant Gopal Singh while denying that there is any joint Hindu family points out that, if a presumption be made to the contrary, then Gopal Singh is the manager not only by right but also admitted to be such in the plaint. Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents asserts that there is a joint Hindu family without a manager and that such a thing is quite possible. He has quoted no authority for this proposition and prima facie it seems unlikely that there should be no management for seven years of Joint Hindu family property worth 30 lacs of rupees.

At any rate if a joint Hindu family is to be presumed a manager also must be presumed and Gopal Singh as senior member of the family would have legal right to physical possession of the family property until the family is dissolved (Gour's Hindu Code, section 105).

The lower Court's reasons for appointing a Receiver are not given in any great detail although the order is a lengthy one. It seems to have been influenced principally by the idea that the produce of the agricultural land in the Punjab was likely to be wasted if a Receiver was not appointed. There is, however, no specific allegation of waste or misappropriation in the application for the appointment of a Receiver, and although the possibility of a breach of the peace seems to have been mentioned in arguments before the lower Court about this produce, there is no affidavit that actual disturbance was likely to occur and this has not been suggested before me.

FIRM RAGHBIR SINGH-JASWANT SINGH V. NARINJAN SINGH.

The presumption of jointness appears to have been arrived at by the lower Court on the strength of the entries in the Revenue Records regarding the agricultural land but the fact that the defendants strenuously denied jointness and have had no opportunity of going any further than doing so has not, I think, received sufficient attention. The lower Court quoted with approval Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (10) and thought that this was an authority justifying its order. That suit was for the partition of joint Hindu family property and a Receiver was appointed because one of the co-owners was being kept out of possession by the other and all supplies were cut off from his branch of the family. But there the share of the plaintiff was admitted and had also been declared by arbitration; here there is neither admission nor adjudication.

For the appellants particular reliance is placed upon two rulings, Govind Narain Rao v. Vallabhrao (11) and Sant Ram v. Ram Chand (9). The former dealt with a partition suit between members of a joint family and apparently the plaintiff's membership of that family was not in dispute. The relations, however, between the parties were found to be strained and it was held that the appointment of a Receiver on this ground was not justified. It was further ruled that the Court should not in such a case appoint a Receiver except by consent and upon proof by the plaintiff that prima facie he had a very excellent chance of succeeding in establishing the case made out in the plaint, and that the property in possession of the opposite party was in danger of being wasted. It was pointed out that the defendants' share would be ample security for any claim which plaintiff would be able to substantiate in the case for damages. The appointment of the Receiver was set aside.

In Sant Ram v. Ram Chand (9) the Chief Court refused to interfere with the refusal of the subordinate Court to appoint a Receiver in a somewhat similar case. One of three Hindu brothers sought partition of the joint family property. It was not denied that one of the defendants, the eldest brother, had been acting for sometime as manager of the property and the Court held that the property could not be taken out of his control merely because a younger brother asked for partition and applied for the appointment of a Receiver upon a mere apprehension that the manager after institution of the suit would proceed to waste the property.

The main argument for the respondent is that as the law now stands it is not necessary in a suit for partition to allege or to make out waste or misappropriation for the purpose of appointing a Receiver. The rulings quoted were Suprasanna Roy v. Upendra Narayan Roy (12), Poreshnath Mookerjee v. Omerto Nauth Mitter (13) and Budhwanti v. Bishen Kaur (8), as well as Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (10) already alluded to. In the three Calcutta cases the fact of the appellant being a co-sharer was not denied and distinguishes them from the present case. Suprasanna Roy v. Upendra Narayan Roy (12) was not, apparently, a case between coparceners. In Poreshnath Mookerjee v. Omerto Nauth Mitter (13) there was no contest regarding title and practically all that was decided was that a Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of a joint estate out of which the plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned, in the hands of the Receiver. Budhwanti v. Bishen Kaur (8) was a contest between two Hindu widows and it was held that the actual possession was in the hands of a servant of the family whose practically uncontrolled and masterful management constituted a grave danger to the plaintiff's interest. This person and the defendant widow also were engaged in carrying out the purpose of a Will which was in dispute in the suit, that purpose being to build a temple, and it was ruled that the danger to the plaintiff's interest was immediate and beyond question and further that the parties being widows with a life-tenancy the plaintiff would have no security for restitution in the event of her success except a mere life-interest. In this suit as in the present there was landed property for which the prayer was merely for a declaration and this also had been placed in the hands of a Receiver. The Chief Court held in regard to it that the lower Court had good grounds for believing that the plaintiff herself had been in possession, and upheld the order without prejudice to the defendants moving for its discharge if a certain issue was decided eventually against the plaintiff.

None of these rulings helps the respondents to justify the taking out of the hands of the defendants at the present stage of the suit all the property in dispute nor do they prove what Mr. Moti Sagar contends that the decision in Govind Narain Rao v. Vallabhrao (11) is bad law. This latter ruling is almost conclusive in the appellant's favour. The defendants in the present case are admitted to have a one-third interest in an estate of 30 lakhs and manifestly the plaintiffs have plenty of security for compensation for damage or mesne profit. There also appears to me much force in the contention that, if there is a joint family, Gopal Singh is the manager, and no case has been cited in which a manager has been ousted from control of the family property in the present summary manner. If there is no joint Hindu family there is less justification still for the lower Court's order, since the plaintiff's title is denied and has not been established in any way.

It is pointed out that the lower Court's order was discretionary and that the exercise by it of its discretion should not be disturbed lightly; but the exercise, I think, has not been made on sound legal principles.

In regard to order (d) the appointment of Bishambar Das to manage the properties in the Punjab, Nos. 11, 14 and 15 are agricultural lands in the Districts of Gujrat, Gujranwala and Shahpur and the other properties are certain houses mostly in Kunjah in Gujrat District which are of small value and are admittedly joint. This admission of jointness is one of the considerations pleaded by the respondents in support of a presumption that all the property is joint, but, as already stated, on consideration of all the other circumstances I do not think that the presumption is justified at the present stage of the case. In regard to the land, a declaration only is sought and there is no material on which it can be assumed that the plaintiff is in actual possession. At present everything points to the defendants being in possession. The learned Sub-Judge's order indicates that he was influenced in appointing a Receiver of this land by the allegation that the defendants were withholding from the plaintiffs their share in the produce. That produce is not in suit and, assuming the parties to be co-sharers could not be in suit in a Civil Court (section 77 (3) (h) of the Punjab Tenancy Act). If the order is maintained for the appointment of a Receiver of these lands it is a little difficult to see what would happen in the event of the plaintiff getting his declaration. There could be no order of the Court to give possession to the plaintiff and the Receiver presumably would have to hand the land back to the defendants. In any case, the facts that a mere declaration is sought for the land, that the Civil Court cannot divide it, that the plaintiffs appear from the materials at present on the record to be out of possession, and that the Court has no jurisdiction over the apportionment of the produce, make the order for the appointment of a Receiver for the agricultural lands still less justifiable than that regarding the Quetta property. As for the houses they are of small value and no necessity for making them over to a Receiver is apparent.

It remains to deal with order (c). It has been argued that this, too, is not appealable, clearly it is not an order under O. XL, r. 1, but it appears to me to have been passed under O. XXXIX, r. 1. The reasons for directing Raghbir Singh-Jaswant Singh to prepare an inventory and to keep accounts are not expressly given, and it is true that there is no proof on the record that the property of the firm was in danger of being wasted or damaged or alienated. But the only possible reason for the Court passing the order can be that it was of opinion that this was likely to occur. Mr. Moti Sagar has argued that the order was under the inherent powers conferred by section 151 of the Code, but I do not think that this is so. Taking it as an order under O. XXXIX, r. 1, I hold it to be appealable. Lala Badri Das for Raghbir Singh and Jaswant Singh has contended with some reason that the order, involving as it does the furnishing of Rs. 5,000 security, will seriously affect the credit of the firm. There is an affidavit that this firm has no connection with the other property and that it is conducted on borrowed capital. There is no counter-affidavit. I see no justification for presuming at this stage that the plaintiffs have any rights in it or that waste and misappropriation (which are not alleged) are likely to occur, and the defendants should not be burdened with an order for security with matters in their present state.

As the result I accept both appeals and set aside the orders dealt with above. In each case the appellants will have their costs in this Court.

Bengal Regulation (XVII of 1806)—Foreclosure proceedings—Notice—Proof—Presumption.

A Court will not presume that all the formalities required by Regulation XVII of 1806 in proceedings for foreclosure have been observed. The mortgagee must prove affirmatively the due performance of every necessary condition. [p. 576, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the notice issued in the proceedings is not forthcoming does not relieve the mortgagee of the burden of proving that the notice satisfied the requirements of the Regulation. On the contrary, the non-existence of the notice is fatal to the validity of the foreclosure proceedings. [p. 576, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—In 1874 Kahna and Singhu mortgaged the land in suit to the defendant's father Kirpa Ram with possession for Rs. 402. The land was to be redeemed within 8 years, and there was a stipulation in the deed that if the mortgagors did not redeem the land they would sell it. Kahna and Singhu are dead and the present suit was brought by their heirs for redemption. The defendant pleaded that foreclosure proceedings had been taken in 1894, that a notice was served on Singhu, the surviving mortgagor, and that as Singhu had not paid the mortgage money within a year of the receipt of the notice the defendant had become absolute owner of the land.

The record of the proceedings of 1894 shows that on the application of Kirpa Ram a notice of foreclosure was issued to Singhu, who appeared in Court and admitted having received the notice and a copy of the application, and said that he had not paid the mortgage-money, but urged that Kirpa Ram cut down trees of the value of Rs. 352 without permission and that this sum should be deducted and said he would pay the balance.

The notice of foreclosure issued by the Court is, however, not on the record and the Munsif held that its validity could not be presumed and that the defendant was bound to prove that the foreclosure proceedings were valid, and as he had not done so the Munsif passed a decree for redemption.

The District Judge on appeal took a different view of the case, holding that the mortgage was not one by way of conditional sale, but a mortgage with an agreement that the mortgagors would sell the land if they failed to redeem it, and that, therefore, the mortgagee was not competent to take foreclosure proceedings, but that his remedy should have been to sue to enforce performance of the agreement to sell. The learned Judge also found that an oral sale to the defendant, which was alleged in the grounds of appeal, had not been proved, and he dismissed the appeal. The defendant has presented a second appeal to this Court.

SAROJINI DEBYA v. KRISTA LAL HALDAR.

We do not agree with the District Judge in his construction of the mortgage of 1874. Although the words entered in the mortgage deed were "agar fakul-raim na karaingc to bxi kardenge," we think there is no doubt that what the mortgagors really meant was that if they did not redeem the land it would be deemed to be sold. An agreement to sell would be useless without an agreement as to the price for which the land was to be sold. Moreover the plaintiffs in the First Court admitted that the mortgage was one by conditional sale, and the lower Appellate Court has put an interpretation on the mortgage-deed which the plaintiffs themselves had not put on it.

But although we differ from the lower Appellate Court on that point we think that the suit must fail for the reason given by the Munsif. It is settled law that the Court will not presume that all the formalities required by Regulation XVII of 1806 in proceedings for foreclosure have been observed, but the mortgagee must prove affirmatively the due performance of every necessary condition. There are numerous authorities on this point to which it is unnecessary to refer. It is argued for the appellant that as Singhu appeared in Court in 1894 and admitted the receipt of the notice and took no objection to its validity it may be presumed that the notice fulfilled the requirements of the Regulation, but we cannot agree with the contention. Singhu may not have read the notice, and he may even have been illiterate. At any rate, the mere fact of his raising no objection to the validity of the notice does not warrant the presumption that the notice fulfilled all the necessary conditions. The notice is unfortunately not forthcoming, and this fact makes it impossible for the appellant to prove that all necessary formalities were observed. We recognize the difficulty of his position, but we are unable to hold that the non-existence of the notice relieves him of the burden of proving that the notice satisfied the requirements of Regulation XVII of 1806. It was in fact held in Sochet Singh v. Dial Singh (1) that the non-existence of the notice was fatal to the validity of the foreclosure proceedings. We must, therefore, decide that as the defendant had not shown that the foreclosure proceedings in 1894 fulfilled the requirements of the Regulation the mortgage subsists.

A plea of limitation has been raised based on the fact that in 1897 Kirpa Ram got the land mutated in his own favour, Singhu's name being removed from the records. But Singhu was not present and there is nothing to show that he was informed of the mutation. Kirpa Ram's possession, therefore, cannot be said to have become adverse to Singhu, and the plea that the suit is barred by limitation must be rejected.

There was also a plea of estoppel, but it is not pressed. Nauranga, one of the plaintiffs, was present at the mutation of 1897, and identified Kirpa Ram, but this fact does not debar the plaintiffs from suing for redemption. Nauranga had no title to the land in 1897 as Singhu was then alive.

We dismiss the appeal, but under the circumstances we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

SAROJINI DEBYA V. KRISTA LAL HALDAR.

Every one may build upon or otherwise utilise his own land, regardless of the fact that his doing so involves an interference with the light which would otherwise reach the land and building of another person. On the other hand, every man may open any number of windows looking over his neighbour's land, for the interference with a neighbour's privacy or with his prospect, does not, by itself, give the latter a cause of action, in the absence of other circumstances. If windows are so opened, the neighbour may, by building on his own land, obstruct the light which would otherwise reach them. The problem, therefore, which really arises in a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's right to obstruct the doors and windows of the defendant is, whether the latter has acquired the right to use unobstructed the doors and windows. Whether a grant of an easement arises by implication on a conveyance of land depends on the intent of the parties, which must clearly appear; in order to determine the intent, the Court will take into consideration the circumstances attending the transaction, the particular situation of the parties and the state of the thing granted. On a severance of tenements by a partition of joint property, and in the absence of a contrary intention, expressed or necessarily implied, all such easements as are apparent, continuous and necessary for enjoying any of the undivided shares when the partition was effected, pass to the coparceners to whom such shares are respectively allotted in severalty. Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, 24-Parganas, dated the 17th August 1920.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Panna Lal Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to obstruct the doors and windows of the defendants by erecting walls and for an injunction restraining defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's constructions. The matter arises thus. The property in suit—the family dwelling house—belonged to one Hari Mohan who died leaving behind him a widow and two sons by a predeceased wife. The sons were named Amritlal and Rajkumar. Amrita died leaving behind his widow, defendant No. 1. She has gifted away her share of the property to her brother who is defendant No. 5. Rajkumar left 3 sons—Hiralal, whose interest was transferred to defendant No. 4 by his widow; Joharlal, who is defendant No. 3 and Krishnalal, who is the plaintiff. In 1907 there was a partition between the heirs of Amrita Lal and Rajkumar on the basis of an award of the arbitrators. In 1909 there was a similar partition as between the sons of Rajkumar. The present suit relates to the portions awarded to defendant No. 1, the widow of Amrita and to the plaintiff. The house is two-storeyed. On the ground-floor there are two windows and one door, on the first floor there are three windows and one door. The plaintiff's case is that these openings render access to his house and, in consequence of their overlooking the rooms, his privacy is violated. The Court below has decreed the suit, my contention is that his right to privacy is not affected and that he is not entitled to obstruct my doors and windows. I submit the learned Court has not considered the inconvenience that would be caused by the blocking up of these openings. There will be no sufficient light or ventilation if they are closed up. The case of Barrow v. Archer (1) does not apply. Refers to sections 5, 13, 15, 28 and 30 of the Indian Easements Act; Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (2). I submit in this view of the case the decree of the Court below should be set aside.

Babu Peary Mohan Chatterjee, for the Respondent.—They are now relying upon an easement by implied grant upon partition. Such an easement is based upon two considerations, viz., (1) the grantor must derogate from his own grant, and (2) there must be intention express or implied. See Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (2). Here it is a case for partition. Every body is a grantor. I was a minor at the time under the guardianship of this very lady, the defendant No. 1, who is the appellant. How can a minor effectively grant an easement? It is admitted that at the time of the first partition there were two doors and a window. They were not ancient lights. The doors were meant for passing and re-passing. They were closed up after partition. The learned Subordinate Judge who had himself inspected the premises found that the doors to be not at all necessary. See Mitra's Prescription (3rd Edition) 408, Trevelyan on Law relating to Minors (5th Edition) 298; Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor (3). Gale on Easements (9th Edition) 474; Delhi & London Bank, Limited v. Hem Lal (4), Colls v.

Home & Colonial Stores, Limited (5), Peter Charles Ernest Paul v. William Robson (6).

Babu Amarendranath Bose, in reply.—With regard to the question of minority the reference to Mitra's Prescription is not at all to the point. He had a guardian appointed under his father's Will. He had also a guardian appointed by the Court. Therefore, the acts of such guardian would be binding on the minor. He cannot now turn round and question the acts of his guardian. His interests were sufficiently and well looked after.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal, is a family dwelling house, at one time the property of Hari Mohan Haldar. He died in or about the year 1890, and left a widow, Giribala, who was made the second defendant in this suit but has died during its progress. Hari Mohan also left two sons by a predeceased wife, namely, Amrita Lal Haldar and Raj Kumar Haldar, who inherited his properties in equal shares. Amrita Lal died in 1899 and left a widow, Sarojini, the first defendant in this suit, during the pendency of the litigation, she made a gift of her right, title and interest in the disputed property to her brother, Satyendra Nath Banerjee, who was thereupon added as the fifth defendant. Raj Kumar died in 1903 and left three sons; Hiralal, now deceased, Jaharlal, who is the third defendant, and Krishna Lal, the plaintiff. The share of Hiralal has been transferred by his widow, Arun Bala, to Panchanan Saha, the fourth defendant. The family dwelling house was partitioned, in the first instance, as between the branches of Amrita Lal and Raj Kumar, by an award of arbitrators which was pronounced on the 7th July 1907 and was made a rule of Court on the 9th August 1907. Later on, a partition was effected amongst the sons of Raj Kumar by an award of arbitrators which was made on the 22nd June 1909 and was confirmed by a decree of Court on the 1st October 1909. The dispute in the present litigation relates to the allotment made to Sarojini, the widow of Amrita Lal, under the first arbitration award, and the allotment given to Krishnalal, the son of Raj Kumar, by the second arbitration award. In the eastern wall of the portion of the house allotted to Sarojini, there are three openings on the ground floor and four on the first floor. Of the three openings on the ground floor, two are windows and one is a door; of the four openings on the first floor, one was a window and three were doors at the time of the partition, two of the doors have since then been converted into windows, so that, at the time of the suit, there were on the first floor wall three windows and one door. The existence of the windows and the doors on the ground floor and on the first floor render it possible for people in the portion of the house occupied by the first defendant, to obtain access to the premises now held by the plaintiff, to overlook his rooms and to destroy his privacy. The plaintiff accordingly erected walls on his own lands to stop these openings but they were demolished by force by the first defendant. The plaintiff has accordingly instituted this suit for declaration of his right to obstruct the doors and windows and for an injunction to restrain the first defendant from interference with the construction and maintenance of the wall which he proposes to erect. The defendant denied the right of the plaintiff to obstruct the door and windows in any manner. The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was entitled to obstruct the doors and windows, but only by the erection of wooden structures with blinds fixed up, and he has made a decree accordingly. On the present appeal, the first defendant has contended that the plaintiff was not competent to obstruct at all the doors and windows. The plaintiff, on the other hand, has presented a memorandum of cross-objection and has urged that he cannot be compelled to adopt a prescribed method for the obstruction of the doors and windows, and, that, if he so chooses, he may, for the purpose, erect a brick wall on his land instead of a wooden structure.

The principle applicable to cases of this character is well-known and was explained recently in the case of Tustu Mondal v. Kenaram Mondal (7). But before we deal with the question, it may be useful to point out, as was done by Lord Westbury in Tapling v. Jones (8), that the expression "right to obstruct" has a tendency to mislead. "If my adjoining neighbour builds upon his land and, opens numerous windows which look over my gardens or pleasure grounds, I do not acquire from this act of my neighbour any new or other right than I before possessed. I have simply the same right of building or raising any erection I please on my own land, unless that right has been by some antecedent matter either lost or impaired, and I gain no new or enlarged right by the act of my neighbour." The erection of a wall or other obstacle is, indeed, the only remedy available to a landowner if he is annoyed by the opening of new windows overlooking his ground, he can maintain no action nor can he obtain other relief at law or in equity, in building to obstruct new windows, however, he must be careful to avoid obstructing ancient lights, In the matter of W.C. Penny and the South Eastern Ry. Co. (9), Turner v. Spooner (10), Chandler v. Thompson (11). To put the matter briefly, every one may build upon or otherwise utilise his own land, regardless of the fact that his doing so involves an interference with the light which would otherwise reach the land and building of another person. On the other hand, every man may open any number of windows looking over his neighbour's land, for the interference with a neighbour's privacy or with his prospect, does not, by itself, give the latter a cause of action, in the absence of other circumstances. If windows are so opened, the neighbour may, by building on his own land, obstruct the light which would otherwise reach them. The problem, therefore, which really arises in this case is, whether the first defendant has acquired the right to use unobstructed the doors and windows. It is not disputed that she has not acquired such a right by prescription, by lapse of the statutory period since the date of the partition. Consequently, the question reduces itself to this, whether such right was impliedly reserved in her favour at the time of the partition.

It may be stated as a general rule that, whether a grant of an easement arises by implication on a conveyance of land depends on the intent of the parties, which must clearly appear; in order to determine the intent, the Court will take into consideration the circumstances attending the transaction, the particular situation of the parties and the state of the thing granted. This principle holds only where there is no express contract relating to the matter, for, where there is a valid express agreement fairly made, the law does not indulge in presumptions, and the rights of the parties will be upheld according to the terms of such agreement; in such circumstances, no question arises as to grant of easement by implication.

Thus, where the owner of an entire tract of land or of two or more adjoining parcels employs a part thereof, so that one derives from the other a benefit or an advantage of a continuous and apparent nature, and, sells the one in favour of which such continuous and apparent quasi-easement exists, the easement, being necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, will pass to the grantee by implication, Ewart v. Cochran (12), Suffield v. Brown (13), Wheeldon v. Burrows (14), Bayley v. G. W. Ry. (15), Brown v. Alabaster (16), Watts v. Kelson (17), Schwamm v. Cotton (18).

The reasons for this rule have been formulated in a variety of ways: (1) where a man grants a thing, he grants with it everything necessary to its enjoyment; (2) a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant; (3) the grant should be construed against the grant so far as to pass the privileges annexed by himself to the property conveyed; (4) if, at the time of the transfer, there are visible and apparent easements and privileges annexed to it, necessary for its reasonable enjoyment, it must be assumed that they were taken into consideration when the price was fixed. It has been maintained that these reasons, as also the rule founded thereon, become inapplicable where the tenement in respect of which the easement is claimed is carved out for the first time from the entirety, by the deed relied upon, and is substantially different from that in connection with which the easement had formerly been enjoyed: Horsfall v. Braye (19).

The principles just mentioned have been applied to cases of transfer of two tenements, and it has been ruled that if the owner of an estate, part of which is quasi dominant and part quasi servient, transfers the two portions to two different persons, the respective transferees will take the portions granted to them, burdened or benefited, as the case may be, by those rights in the nature of apparent and continuous easements which the previous owner has the right to attach to them, Barnes v. Louch (20) Allen v. Taylor (21). This rule is held applicable where there are several grants, not absolutely at the same moment, but so far at the same time that they are considered as one transaction: Russell v. Watts (22).

Analogous to the creation of easements by severance of unity of possession at Common Law, is the creation by what is known as estimation du pere defamille under the Civil Law; in other words, the disposition or arrangement which the proprietor of several heritages has made for their respective use, see the judgment of Lord Westbury in Suffield v. Brown (13). Under the Civil Law, if the owner of two estates, between which there exists an apparent sign of servitude, sells one of these estates, and if the deed of sale is silent respecting the servitude, the same continues to exist, actively or passively, in favour of or upon the estate which has been sold. The Civil Law thus does not recognise a distinction analogous to that between implied grant and implied reservation at the Common Law. This latter rule, as explained in the cases reviewed in Tustu Mondal v. Kenaram Mondal (7), has been very much shaken in recent years, if not "almost swept away."

The doctrine which we have already explained, has been applied to cases of partition of joint properties, and it has been ruled that on partition of land between heirs, the general rule is that each heir will take his share, subject to any apparent, permanent, and reasonably necessary quasi-easement, which existed thereon for the benefit of another part of such land at the death of the ancestor, unless the existence of such quasi-easement has been discontinued by the heirs before partition, or unless provision is made in the partition for a discontinuance, see Nicholls v. Nicholls (23). The substance of the matter is, that permanency, continuity and necessity are all essential qualities of the easement or accommodation claimed by implied grant. There has been some apparent divergence of judicial opinion as to the degree of necessity required, and it is plain that no inelastic formula can be framed to comprehend all concrete cases. The test is not, whether the easement or accommodation will make the enjoyment convenient; but whether it is necessary for the comfortable enjoyment of the property as it existed at the time of the severance of the title, Ewart v. Cochran (12), Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co. (24) Ray v. Hazeldine (25), Schwann v. Cotton (18), Derry v. Sanders (26), Gordon

v. Ogilvie (27), Wheeldon v. Burrows (14) Richards v. Rose (28). We may take it, then, as well settled that, on a severance of tenements by a partition of joint property, and in the absence of a contrary intention, expressed or necessarily implied, all such easements as are apparent, continuous and necessary for enjoying any of the undivided shares when the partition was effected, pass to the coparceners to whom such shares are respectively allotted in severalty. This view is supported by the decisions in Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi (29), Dwarika Nath Paul v. Sunder Lal Seal (30), Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (2), Ratanji v. Idalji (31), Purshotam Sakhararam v. Durgaji Tukaram (32) Krishnamarazu v. Marraju (33). Reference may in this connection be also made to section 13 of the Indian Easements Act and Illustrations (d) (e) (f) and (m) appended thereto, which though not directly applicable, may be regarded as enunciating principles of justice, equity and good conscience, Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (2). The statutory provisions mentioned make necessity an assential test.

Tested in the light of these principles, the case for the first defendant completely breaks down. The Subordinate Judge, upon a careful review of the evidence recorded before him and after inspection of the premises on two occasions at the request of the parties, came to the conclusion that the retention of the doors and windows was not necessary for the use by the defendant of the rooms allotted to her. He has taken the rooms, one by one, considered its situation, and given adequate reasons for his conclusion that the rooms could be comfortably occupied, even if the doors and windows in dispute were closed. The only serious dispute was as regards what is called the middle room. There is no doubt that the room would have sufficient light at all times of the day, even if the windows should be closed. There would also be sufficient ventilation for habitable or sanitary purposes, but the defendant urged that if the eastern windows were closed, there might not be a continuous current of air. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention and held, on the authority of the decision of Peterson, J., in Barrow v. Archer (1), that if the light were sufficient, the access of air might be presumed to be sufficient. This may not always be strictly true, for the grounds upon which the Court will restrain the obstruction of light may sometimes differ widely from the grounds upon which it will restrain the obstruction of air, City of London Brewery Co. v. Tennant (34) and Baxter v. Bower (35), although, generally speaking, the modes in which a right to the access of light and a right to the access of defined air can be acquired are similar, Cable v. Bryant (36). But, apart from this, the principle established in Webb v. Bird (37) was applied in this country in Barrow v. Archer (1), where the plaintiff claimed the right to have the south window on to his premises free from all obstruction. The Court declined to give effect to this argument, on the ground that it was necessary for it to see that the servient tenement was not made subservient to more than the law required. A similar claim was negatived by Peacock, C. J., in John George Bagram v. Khettranath Karjormah (38), and the same principle was followed in the case of Delhi & London Bank Limited v. Hem Lall (4). The substance of the matter is, that there is no easement for the free access of wind, Webb v. Bird (37) and Goodman & Gore's case (39) cited in Webb v. Bird (37). We have thus, on the one hand, the fact that the doors and windows are not necessary for the enjoyment of the rooms allotted to the defendant, and, on the other hand, the fact that their continuance is destructive of the security and privacy of the portion of the premises allotted to the plaintiff. In such circumstances, the defendant cannot invoke the aid of the principle of an implied grant of easement in her favour, upon severance of the tenements by partition. This, however, inevitably leads to the inference that the plaintiff cannot be restricted in his choice of the method he might adopt for the obstruction of the doors and windows, and his cross-objection must consequently prevail.

The result is, that this appeal is dismissed and the cross-objection allowed. The decree of the Subordinate Judge will be modified so as to entitle the plaintiff to close all the doors and windows by the erection of walls or such other structures as he may choose to place on his own land. Subject to this variation, the decree made by the Subordinate Judge will stand confirmed. The appellants will pay the plaintiff-respondent his costs in this Court. We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs.

On the death of one S, the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad sued the son of S. for money belonging to S. on the ground that S. was governed by the Marumakkattayam law and that the tarwad was his heir. The Court dismissed the suit holding that S. followed Makkathayam Law and the tarwad was not his heir. A subsequent suit was brought by the junior members of the tarwad to eject a person claiming under the son of S. from possession of certain other properties of S. on the ground that the tarwad was the successor-in-title to S. It was sought to be shown that the prior suit dealt only with the self-acquisitions of S. and not with his family properties which were comprised in the latter suit. There was nothing in the judgment in the previous case to show that only self-acquisitions were dealt with in that case:

Held, (1) that the question of the inheritance of the property of S. whether self-acquired or not, was directly and substantially in issue between the predecessors-in-title of the present litigants and the finding in the prior suit that S. followed the Makkathayam and not the Marumakkathayam Law was res judicata and was a final decision binding on the parties and their successors-in-title; [p. 584, col. 2.]

(2) that it was not open to the plaintiff to adduce extraneous evidence to prove that the Court was dealing only with the self-acquisitions of S. in the previous suit. [p. 584, col. 1.]

Where in a case governed by the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, on a claim by a third party obstructing delivery of possession to the decree-holder, the Court did not follow the procedure laid down in section 331 of the Code and the claim was not registered as a suit, and the matter was disposed of merely on petitions and an order passed directing the removal of the obstruction:

Held, that the order had not the force of a decree and would not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties. [p. 585, col. 2; p. 586, col. 1.]

Where it is sought to give the formality of the legal effect of a decree to an order under section 331 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 in order that it may be used as res judicata, it must be shown that there was a formal array of parties, framing of issues and trial as laid down in the section, but if the petition has been wrongly treated as a merely interlocutory application in the suit, it cannot be on the same footing as a suit itself. [p. 586, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in A. S. No. 396 of 1918, (A. S. No. 507 of 1915, District Court) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Quilandy, in O. S. No. 287 of 1914.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair, K. P. Rama Krishna Aiyar and B. Poker, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The substantive points for decision in this appeal are two, both questions of res judicata. The plaintiffs (contesting respondents) are the junior members of a Marumakkattayam tarwad in Malabar and they bring this suit to eject among others the appellant from the plaintiff-property on the ground that the plaintiff-property is the property of a Devaswom which is itself the property of their tarwad. The appellant claims under the third defendant, who was the son of Sankaran, and claims that the plaintiff property was the property of the Sankaran, that Sankaran followed Makkathayam Law, and that the third defendant, therefore, succeeded to the property after his father's death and passed it on to him. On this point, the plaintiffs claim that Sankaran followed Marumakkathayam law, and, therefore, his successor-in-title to the property was not the third defendant but their own tarwad; of which, according to them, Sankaran was the karnavan when he died. One of the main points for decision by the lower Courts, therefore, was whether Sankaran's property descended to his son or to the plaintiff's tarwad, in other words, whether Sankaran followed Makkathayam or Marumakkathayam Law. This very question was raised and decided in a previous suit, Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, on the file of the District Munsif of Payyoli, to which the third defendant and the then karnavan of the plaintiff's tarwad were parties, and it was then decided that Sankaran followed Makkathayam Law, and that the karnavan of the tarwad was not his heir. This finding was upheld on appeal by the District Court of North Malabar and is a final decision binding on the parties and their successors-in-title. The plaintiffs contend that this decision is not res judicata against them, but we are of opinion that that contention cannot prevail and that the lower Courts have erred in holding that it is not.

2. The plaintiffs' contention, which has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court in that Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, was dealing with a case of self-acquisition of Sankaran and that in such a case it was not necessary for the Court to record a general finding that Sankaran followed Makkathayam Law, and that, therefore, the finding, being unnecessary for the decision of that case, does not constitute res judicata. It was argued further that, even if it did not appear on the face of the record in that suit that the Court was dealing with a case of self-acquisition, it will still be open to the plaintiffs in this suit to adduce evidence to prove that it was so. To the latter proposition we must demur. A judgment in a matter of res judicata must stand by itself. It decides what it purports to decide, no more and no less. If there is any ambiguity as to what it decided, which cannot be cleared up without further evidence, then it will not be a clear finding and, therefore, not a case of res judicata at all.

3. A consequential contention by the plaintiffs that Sankaran followed Makkathayam as regards his self acquisition and Marumakkathayam as regards his tarwad property appear to us to be a pure speculation and contrary to the decision in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898. Taking the judgment in that suit as it stands, we can find nothing in it to indicate that the Judge was dealing with any case of self-acquisition, but much to the contrary effect. The subject-matter of the suit was an amount due to Sankaran on the redemption of a kanom which had been paid into Court pending the decision as to who was his legal representative, and the issue to be decided definitely was who was his legal representative entitled to the money. The karnavan sued on the ground that Sankaran followed Marumakkathayam and the third defendant pleaded that Sankaran followed Makkathayam. The issue was perfectly clear, and the finding equally clear, that Sankaran followed Makkathayam. There is no suggestion anywhere that it was a case of intestacy in the matter of self-acquired property. The lower Appellate Court has assumed without giving any reasons that the suit related to self-acquisition. It was obviously strongly influenced to that assumption by its conclusions that the property in the suit before it belonged to the plaintiffs' tarwad and not to the Sankaran's son. We must dissent from its assumption and hold that the question whether Sankaran followed Marumakkathayam or Makkathayam is res judicata in a decision binding on the plaintiff and their tarwad.

4. Apart from the judgment in that suit, there are three strong indications that the plaintiffs' tarwad had never dreamt that the judgment applied only to Sankaran's self-acquisition until the appeal in the lower Appellate Court. The first is the grounds of appeal to the District Court against the decision in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, vide Exhibit II, which shows clearly that the general point as to the law governing Sankaran's property was directly raised.

5. As to the second, in order to make this clear it is necessary to refer to a further litigation covering the very property now in this suit. In Original Suit No. 195 of 1902 on the file of the District Munsif of Quilandy, the third defendant sued as heir of Sankaran a lessee under Sankaran for the recovery of the present property, and the suit was resisted by the present first defendant, (now Karnavan of plaintiffs' tarwad but not then karnavan), on the ground that he held the property as manager of the Perikintayil Bhagavathi Devaswom which owned it. According to the plaintiffs in the present suit the Devaswom belongs to the plaintiffs' tarwad. So the issue in that suit again raised the question whether the successor to Sankaran's rights was his son or the plaintiffs' tarwad. It was there again held that Sankaran followed Makkathayam and not Marumakkathayam and that his son was his successor-in-title.

6. When the third defendant took out execution proceedings and attempted to get delivery through the Court, the then karnavan of the plaintiffs' tarwad obstructed the delivery and claimed the property for the tarwad. This matter was decided by the District Munsif in Miscellaneous Petition No. 936 of 1903, and by his order in that, he decided against the tarwad, and ordered the obstruction to be removed on the ground that the tarwad's claim had already been negatived and the third defendant got delivery of the property on 2nd May 1903. It is significant that even in these proceedings there was no suggestion that the previous suit, Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, which was referred to and relied on by the third defendant throughout in Original Suit No. 195 of 1902, related to Sankaran's self-acquisition. Some attempt to save the property for the tarwad was made in the execution proceedings, but even there, so far as appears from the order, the contention in the reply petition by the karnavan which had not been produced before us, was merely that the previous suit referred only to some property of Sankaran apparently not that it referred to self-acquired property. So that even so much nearer the date of the judgment in the 1898 suit as 1903 the karnavan did not plead that the 1898 suit was concerned with a case of self-acquisition. It is important to note that although in the suit, Original Suit No. 195 of 1902, the same claim as is now put forward, namely, that the suit property belonged to the Devaswom was advanced, still it was there never sought to distinguish the nature of the third defendant's title to kanom money in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898 from that of his claim to the alleged Devaswom property in Original Suit No. 195 of 1902. It is very unlikely that if such a distinction could, with any plausibility, have been then made, it would not have been made.

7. The third point of significance is that the tarwad sat down under this decision in the execution proceedings for 11 years and then brought the present suit, and that the present suit is one not by the karnavan but by the junior members of the tarwad, while the karnavan is made the first defendant, although he, throughout his written statement, fully supports the plaintiffs with a merely nominal plea, as an excuse for making him defendant that the plaintiffs are not entitled to possession of the property as against their karnavan. With the question whether such a suit for ejectment by the junior members of the tarwad only, will lie at all we are not here concerned. But, apart from that, it is obvious that the position of the karnavan as a defendant instead of as a plaintiff in the suit was dictated by the strong consciousness of the plaintiffs that the karnavan was already bound by the decision in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, if not also by that in the execution proceedings, and that the present suit is filed in a sort of desperate hope that the Court might not hold this matter res judicata against the junior members, and that the idea that it might be contended that the property in the Original Suit No. 433 was self-acquisition had not then occurred to the plaintiffs' tarwad.

8. It is, therefore, evident that there is not even any real probability that the property in the Original Suit No. 433 was self-acquisition, and that the plaintiffs were aware of that. We hold, however, for reasons, already given, that the question of inheritance of the property of Sankaran, whether self-acquired or family, was directly and substantially in issue between the predecessor-in-title of the present litigants and was once for all decided between the third defendant and the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, and that that finding is binding on the plaintiffs and we would uphold the decision of the Court of the first instance on this point. As remarked by that Court, this is enough to dispose of the suit, but we will deal with the other part of the appellant's argument, namely, that the decision in execution proceedings in Miscellaneous Petition No. 936 of 1903 already noted is also res judicata and had the force of a decree which not being set aside by appeal or otherwise still binds the plaintiffs.

9. The proceedings on the claim petition in 1903 fell under sections 328 to 331 of the previous Civil Procedure Code. Under section 331 when such a claim of a third party was put in, the claim had to be registered as a suit, the result being that the order passed therein would have the force of a decree. We are satisfied that in this miscellaneous petition, the District Munsif did not follow the procedure laid down in section 331. He disposed of the matter merely on the petitions and on his decision in the suit itself. The appellant contends that, notwithstanding the defect in procedure, the order directing the removal of the karnavan's obstruction is, nevertheless less, a decree, and relies on Gopala v. Fernandes (1) and Fonindro Deb Raikut v. Rani Jugodishwari (2). These cases do not seem to be in point. They were cases where the Court had refused altogether to act under section 331 and the rulings were to the effect that such refusal was tantamount to rejecting a plaint. No doubt, when the procedure under section 331 has been properly followed the decision will have the force of a decree, vide Muttammal v. Chinmana Gounden (3); but we are satisfied that in this case the order has not been based upon the proper procedure and that where it is sought to give the formality of the legal effect of a decree to such an order in order that it may be used as res judicata there ought to have been a formal array of parties, framing of issues and trial as laid down in section 331 and we hold, as it was held in Vishnu v. Ramchandra (4), that if the petition has been wrongly treated as a merely interlocutory application in the suit, it cannot be placed on the same footing as a suit itself. We, therefore, hold that the order in the miscellaneous petition is no bar to the present suit and is not res judicata against the plaintiffs.

10. We will note very briefly one other point raised before us on behalf of the karnavan first defendant. When the appeal from the original Court first came up to the District Court, the latter remanded the case for findings on three points. On the first two of these the original Court on remand held that the plaint-property was not the exclusive property of Sankaran, but belonged to the Devaswom and was trust property owned by the plaintiffs' tarwad. In these findings the lower Appellate Court concurred. It is contended that here we have concurrent findings of fact binding upon this Court. But these concurrent findings of fact are not based on the consideration of any title in the plaintiffs' tarwad separate from their pleaded title to succeed to Sankaran. It may be that the plaint property was originally Devaswom property and that Sankaran succeeded to it as uralan from his maternal uncle and not from his father. But the question whether plaintiffs are the heirs of Sankaran has, as we have held, been finally decided against them in Original Suit No. 433 of 1898, and plaintiffs are not now suing on any other footing than their right to succeed to Sankaran, and if the lower Courts have erred, as they have in law, in holding that the plaintiffs' succeeded Sankaran, the concurrent finding of fact is also wrong in law. The plaintiffs, who are the junior members of a tarwad, are not suing on the footing of trustees or uralans to recover trust property. They sue under title from Sankaran to eject the fourth defendant from property which he holds through the son of Sankaran, and their title to succeed to Sankaran has been finally negatived by a decision which lays down in effect that Sankaran was not the karnavan of any Marumakkathayam tarwad, and, therefore, that uralanship, could not descend by Marumakkathayam Law to them or their tarwad.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Appellate Court has erred in law in his decision. Its decision is, therefore, reversed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout to the fourth defendant.

SHER SINGH v. UDHAM SINGH.

Under section 22 of the Specific Relief Act, a Court may properly exercise its discretion where the circumstances under which the contract was made are such as to give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the defendant though there may be no fraud or misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part.

Where it was found that at the time when the contract was entered into the plaintiff held an unfair advantage over the defendant owing to the fact that the latter's faculties were enfeebled but that there was no fraud or misrepresentation and the bargain was not unequitable:

Held, that specific performance should not, under the circumstances, be decreed.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 12th of March 1919.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Pundit Sheo Narian, R. B., for the Appellant.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in this case was the owner of a square of land at Chak No. 90 R. B. in the Lyallpur District. The plaintiff alleged that on June the 7th, 1918 the defendant had executed an agreement in his favour by which he undertook to sell his square of land for Rs. 6,700. Rs. 100 were received as earnest-money; Rs. 5,000 were to be taken at the time of registration of the deed of sale and the balance of Rs. 1,600 was to be paid in Sawan Sambat 1976. The deed further provided that if the defendant committed a breach, the plaintiff would be entitled to Rs. 1,000 as damages. The defendant pleaded that the document was executed through fraud. His case was that he borrowed Rs. 100 from the plaintiff and while in a drunken condition executed what he understood to be an entry in the plaintiff's account-book relating to the repayment of this sum. An objection was also raised that the agreement required registration. The Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the document did not require registration and that it has been proved to have been duly executed by the defendant. A decree for specific performance has been passed, but the plaintiff has not been allowed damages which he claimed in addition. The defendant has appealed to this Court.

The question of registration is raised in the grounds of appeal but has now been abandoned. The main question in the case is, whether the agreement was executed by the defendant and whether he was aware of its contents. The agreement was written by Mehr Singh at the plaintiff's village and was attested by Narain Singh, Natha Singh, Harnam Singh and Amir Chand. All these persons have given evidence in the plaintiff's favour. The defendant has produced a Patwari, Gopal Chand, who states that he obtained a copy of the agreement from the plaintiff, which copy has been filed in Court, and that this copy did not contain the names of two of the attesting witnesses, Amir Chand and Harnam Singh. This copy, it is said, was obtained in consequence of a request made by the defendant who had been informed by the witness of the agreement to sell the square of land. The defendant has not produced any witness who was present at the time of the transaction. He has, however, produced evidence to show that he is addicted to opium and drink and that a Panchayat went to the plaintiff offering Rs. 100 with interest which the plaintiff refused, demanding Rs. 1,000. We think that the lower Court has quite rightly held that the defendant's version of the affair cannot be accepted. The sum of Rs. 100 is said to have been borrowed by him for the purpose of a criminal case. It has not, however, been shown that any such case was pending. The defendant had had no previous dealings with the plaintiff and his own money-lender lived a short distance from his Chak. The defendant's statement as a witness also shows that he went without any pre-arrangement to demand a loan from the plaintiff and that he was then given liquor to drink and the document was afterwards executed. It is highly improbable that the plaintiff, if he had been unprepared for the defendant's visit, would have suddenly considered the scheme of making him intoxicated and getting the agreement executed by him forthwith.

In regard to the copy of the agreement obtained by the Patwari Gopal Chand, it is probable, as the lower Court has held, that the omission of the names of two witnesses was either due to a clerical error at the time of preparing the copy or was intentionally made by the Patwari in the interest of the defendant. The omission of the defendant to take any action after the agreement had been brought to his notice by the BISAI NATH V. TARA NATH.

Patwari is another point which tends to show that his story is false. Though, however, we do not believe the defendant's version in its entirety we consider that there are some suspicious circumstances in the case which certainly render it probable that the defendant was under the influence of liquor or drugs at the time when the agreement was executed. The agreement was hastily written at the plaintiff's Chak by a school-boy and a one-anna stamp was affixed. For an agreement of this nature the services of a deed-writer would ordinarily be employed, and the plaintiff must have known that a stamped paper was required. It is admitted by the plaintiff's witnesses that the defendant is addicted to drink and opium, and his square appears to be managed entirely by his son. The circumstances certainly raise a presumption that at the time of the execution of the agreement the defendant was not in a condition to appreciate fully the effect which it would have on his interests. He had no necessity to sell the square, and the only reason suggested for his action is that he wished to buy land in his own village instead. It cannot be said that the price for which the land was to be sold was an unfair one and the bargain was not in itself inequitable; but we think that in the circumstances specific performance should not be enforced. Under section 22 of the Specific Relief Act the Court may properly exercise this discretion where the circumstances under which the contract is made are such as to give the plaintiff an unfair advantage over the defendant though there may be no fraud or misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part. We consider that the plaintiff, at the time when the contract was made, held an unfair advantage owing to the fact that the defendant's faculties were enfeebled.

We accordingly accept this appeal to this extent that the decree for specific performance will be set aside and the plaintiff will be given a decree for Rs. 1,000 as damages. The parties will pay their own costs in this Court.

Remand—Inherent power of Court—Remand on second appeal—Order, whether can be attacked in appeal from decree.

The validity or propriety of a remand order made on second appeal cannot be questioned on a subsequent second appeal. The party dissatisfied with the order of remand should either apply for a review of judgment or get the decision set aside by an appeal to a superior Tribunal. Where recourse is not taken to either of these possible methods for contesting the validity of the order of remand, its propriety is not open to consideration in second appeal against the decree made after remand. [p. 590, cols. 1 & 2.]

The power of an Appellate Court to direct a remand is wider than that indicated in O. XLI, r. 23, of the Civil Procedure Code. The Appellate Court has inherent power to direct a remand where such remand is needed in the ends of justice. [p. 589, col. 2.]

The policy of the Legislature as indicated in the Civil Procedure Code is in favour of finality of orders of remand. [p. 590, col. 2.]

Babu Mon Mohon Bose, for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession. The First Court decreed the suit. Upon appeal that decree was reversed. On appeal to this Court the case was sent back for deciding the question of limitation. Upon remand the Court below has decreed the suit. This Court having set aside the decree of the Appellate Court and remanded the case, I submit the entire appeal was re-opened. See Tarinee Kant Lahoree v. Koonj Beharee (1); *Gudadhur Dutt v. There it has been held that one Division Court cannot interfere with the directions given by another Division Court.

Babu Mon Mchan Bose, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land on establishment of title. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal that decree was reversed and the suit dismissed. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to this Court, and on the 19th February 1919, Chatterjee and Panton, JJ., set aside the decree of dismissal made by the lower Appellate Court and remanded the case for decision of the question of limitation. That question has now been decided in favour of the plaintiffs and the decree made by the Primary Court in the first instance has been restored. On the present appeal, the defendant has attacked the order of remand, and has invited us to hold that the case should never have been remanded; that not only the order of remand but whatever has followed therein should be treated as null and void; that the question in controversy should be heard in the present appeal as if there had been no order of remand. We are of opinion that this contention cannot possibly be upheld.

There were two questions involved in the suit, namely, (1) the question of title, and (2) the question of limitation. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiffs upon both the questions. The lower Appellate Court found in their favour upon the question of title but dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Upon second appeal to this Court, Chatterjee and Panton, JJ., were of opinion that the finding upon the question of title could not be successfully impeached in second appeal, and they accordingly affirmed the decision of the District Judge thereon. The question of limitation stood on a different footing. The Court was of opinion that the findings were not sufficient and consistent, and accordingly allowed the appeal. The decree of the lower Appellate Court which proceeded on the assumption that the claim was barred by limitation was necessarily reversed and the case was remanded for investigation of the question of limitation. We are now asked to hold that this order was without jurisdiction and that it is open to us to ignore it. In support of this position, reference has been made to the cases of Tarinee Kant Lahoree v. Koonj Beharee (1) and Gudadhar Dutt v. Shushee Monee (2) which are of no real assistance to the appellant, because they merely lay down that, when a case is remanded for re-trial, all the questions in controversy are open for consideration. In the present case there is no dispute possible as to the scope of the remand order. The Court expressly stated that the question of title would not be open for consideration and the only question for decision would be that of limitation. Reference has been made to the character of the order of remand and we have been urged to hold that the order was in contravention of r. 23 of O. XLI of the Code, inasmuch as the decision appealed against had not been pronounced on a preliminary point. It may be conceded that the decision was not upon a preliminary point; but it was ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (6) that the power of the Appellate Court to direct a remand is wider than that indicated in O. XLI, r. 23. The Appellate Court has inherent power to direct a remand where such remand is needed in the ends of justice. The same view was indicated by the Judicial Committee in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (10). There may, indeed, be a controversy, notwithstanding the rule in its wider form, whether in a concrete case an order of remand is or is not necessary in the interests of justice. As an illustration of this, reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Radha Prasad Singh v. Lal Sahib Rai (7).

But this argument has been addressed to us on the assumption that the question of the validity or propriety of the order of remand is open for consideration. We are clearly of opinion that the question is not so open. It has been contended, however, that an order of remand not made in accordance with O. XLI, r. 23 is null and void and may be ignored. But it is plain that an order of remand may be valid even though it is not covered by O. XLI, r. 23. Assume for a moment that an order made in the exercise of the inherent powers of this Court has been improperly made; that is made under circumstances which do not justify it. Such an order is not without jurisdiction. It is an order made with jurisdiction, though the jurisdiction may have been erroneously exercised. This view is supported by the decisions in Mohesh Chandra v. Jamiraddin (11), Durga Kinkar Norha v. Konchai Ronza (3) and Nabin Chandra v. Pran Krishna (12). There are instances to be found in the books where an attempt of this description had been made before, but failed. We need refer only to the decisions in Brojo Soondur Gossamee v. Juggut Chunder Dey (8), Latchumammal v. Gengammal (9), Gungaram Dutt v. Jummajoy Mullick (13), Suraj Din v. Chaltar (14), Ramkuwarbai v. Damodhar (15). In the case last mentioned, Sir Richard Couch, C.J., observed that a remand order made on second appeal is, unless a review of it be obtained within the prescribed time, a conclusive determination of the points of law involved in it; and the correctness of the law laid down upon a remand cannot be questioned on a subsequent second appeal; nor is the fact of the Court's adopting a different view of the law after an order has been made in general a good ground for allowing a review of such order after the time for a review has elapsed. We may point out that the policy of the Legislature as indicated in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 is in favour of finality of orders of remand. Section 105, sub-section (2), provides that, notwithstanding the provision contained in sub-section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand, made after the commencement of the Code, from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness. This provision was inserted to nullify the effect of the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Khadem Hussein v. Emdad Hossein (16) where it had been ruled by a majority that the validity of an order of remand or of a preliminary decree may be assailed either by a direct appeal or by way of an appeal against the final decree. That view was based on the opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee in the cases of Maharajah Moheshur Sing v. Bengal Government (17); Forbes v. Amceroonissa Begum (18), and Shah Mukhun Lal v. Baboo Sree Kishen Singh (19). Under the law as it now stands, the appellant, if he was dissatisfied with the order of remand, should either have applied for a review of judgment or got the decision set aside by an appeal to a superior Tribunal. He has not taken recourse to either of the possible methods for contesting the validity of that order. Consequently, that order is binding on the appellant. If that order stands, it is indisputable that what has followed has been

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 17th November 1921, reversing that of the Additional Munsif, Second Class, Ferozepore, dated the 18th July 1921.

Lala Hargopal, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a pre-emption case and the question in dispute is, whether the building which the plaintiff seeks to pre-empt is a shop as described in the sale-deed. The lower Appellate Court has held, differing from the view taken by the First Court, that it is not a shop, and it has remanded the case for the decision of the remaining issues. The vendee has presented a second appeal to this Court.

It is pointed out that in a plan which the plaintiff got prepared in 1917, when he applied to the Municipal Committee for sanction to some additions that he wished to make to his house, the building in dispute was mentioned as a shop. This is, however, of no importance as the plaintiff very likely signed and filed the plan without troubling to see how the building adjoining his house had been described in it. The same remarks apply with regard to a plan filed by the plaintiff in 1905. What has to be determined is simply the purpose for which the building in suit was used, and this purpose is clear from the evidence produced on both sides, which shows that the building has been rented by the firm of Ram Lal-Ishar Das, who stored their sleepers in it, and that, formerly, it was used for storing grain. No goods were sold in the building, and, this being so, the building cannot be said to be a shop, which, as was stated in Bhamba Ram v. Allah Bakhsh (1), denotes a building or an apartment which is primarily used for buying and selling goods. Counsel for the appellant has referred to Attar Singh v. Sant Singh (2) in which warehouses attached to shops were regarded as being in the nature of shop property, but the building now in dispute is not attached to a shop, although some shop-keepers have rented it and have been using it for storing their goods.

It is urged that if, as was held by the lower Appellate Court, the vendee had to prove that the building was a shop he should have been given an opportunity of producing further evidence since the onus had been placed by the first Court on the plaintiff, but I do not see that there is any necessity for a remand since it is not disputed that the building has been used merely for the storage of goods, and the question is only whether a building used for such a purpose is a shop.

Plaintiff sued defendants for an account of transactions carried on by the latter's Karachi firm as Commission Agents for the former for the purchase and sale of cloth at Karachi. The dealings all took place at Karachi, the persons from whom goods were bought and to whom goods were sold were at Karachi, and all the accounts relating to the dealings in question were at Karachi.

Held, that, in these circumstances, the balance of convenience was greatly in favour of the case being tried at Karachi and the case should, therefore, be transferred to Karachi.

Lala Saradha Ram, for the Petitioners.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application under sections 22 and 23 of the Civil Procedure Code for the transfer to a Court at Karachi of a suit for rendition of accounts which has been brought by the respondents against the petitioners in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Delhi.

The parties live and carry on business in Delhi, but the respondents are suing for an account of transactions carried on by the petitioners' Karachi firm as Commission Agents for the respondents for the purchase and sale of cloth at Karachi.

The dealings all took place at Karachi, the persons from whom goods were bought, and to whom goods were sold, by the petitioners, are at Karachi, and all the accounts relating to the dealings in question are at Karachi. In these circumstances, it seems manifest that the balance of convenience is greatly in favour of the case being tried at Karachi.

Mr. Jagan Nath, on behalf of the respondents, has cited various authorities in support of his contention that the suit should not be transferred, but they are not in point as they relate to cases in which the parties were at issue regarding some particular contract or transaction, whereas the present case relates to accounts of a whole series of transactions extending over several years. Witnesses belonging to various Karachi firms may have to be examined with their accounts. It would probably be impossible for them to come with their accounts to Delhi, and it would be extremely inconvenient to examine them on commission.

I accordingly direct that the suit shall proceed in the Court competent to try it at Karachi. The respondents will pay the costs of this application.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, with his No. 358 of 30th March 1922.

FACTS.—“One Mul Singh, a Station Master in the North-Western Railway, was served with summons to attend my Court on the 20th day of December 1921, in order to give evidence as a witness in Sessions Case No. 36 of 1921. Crown v. Sharif, charge under sections 457-75, Indian Penal Code. Exhibit P-1 is the summons in question, which was sent by a special constable and was duly served on Mul Singh at Mari-Indus Station on 11th December 1921 after the following endorsement had been made in the office of the District Traffic Superintendent, Rawalpindi:—

“Station Master, Mari-Indus,
For service and early return. Please arrange duties in case no relief arrives.”

“On the 20th December, I proceeded to hear the Sessions case knowing that all summons had been served. After the rest of the prosecution evidence had been taken it was found that Mul Singh was not present. I wrote to the office of the District Traffic Superintendent and he appeared and gave evidence on the 22nd December 1921. In this way my work was disorganised and the assessors had to wait for three days to try the case in question. Accordingly, after he gave his evidence I called upon him to show cause why he should not be tried under section 174, Indian Penal Code, for intentionally not attending to give evidence on the 20th day of December 1921 before me after he had been duly and properly served. He admitted that the summons had been properly served upon him after permission obtained from the District Traffic Superintendent's office in which it was stated that he should arrange for his own duties in case no relief arrived. On 19th December 1921, however, which was the day he was going to leave the Station, the District Traffic Superintendent, Mr. Brereton, arrived at his Station and told him not to go to Court and that he would arrange with the Deputy Commissioner that Mul Singh would not be fined. Though Mul Singh represented to the District Traffic Superintendent that the Court would fine him, still Mr. Brereton refused to allow him to go. He was afraid of his District Traffic Superintendent and, therefore, did not come.

“Accordingly, on 22nd December 1921, I recorded an order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and sent Mul Singh for trial under section 174, Indian Penal Code, to the District Magistrate. I pointed out in this order that matters have come to such a head in this District that no Railway Official ever dreams of attending before a Magistrate till he has been summoned three to four times. I understand that it takes sometimes even more than that to get their attendance. In fact, the behaviour of Railway Officials in this District had become a public scandal and as the summons had been properly served after permission was obtained from the District Traffic Superintendent, I considered his trial to be necessary. The District Magistrate sent the case to Mr. Abdul Haq, Magistrate 1st class. He fixed 12th January 1922 to hear the case. On that date it would appear that the accused was present along with

MUL SINGH V. EMPEROR.

Mr. Brereton, District Traffic Superintendent. The latter seems to have gone to the District Magistrate who wrote on the judicial record in his own hand and under his own signature that the case may be withdrawn against Mul Singh. This was what Mul Singh said Mr. Brereton told him at the spot he would have done.

"This order of the District Magistrate upon the judicial record was not a proper one as it does not follow the procedure laid down in section 494, Criminal Procedure Code. It was objectionable for that reason and also as exercising pressure upon the Magistrate. However, the Public Prosecutor who was conducting the case for the prosecution saw the District Magistrate's order on the judicial record, treating it as instructions to him from the District Magistrate told the Court that, under the instructions of the District Magistrate, he withdrew the case. The Magistrate then recorded the following order :—

'As the case has been withdrawn the accused is hereby discharged.'

"He gave no reason of any kind and did not even record his own consent to the case being withdrawn."

GROUND.—"On the 18th January 1922 I sent for the record and as I considered that the accused had been improperly discharged I ordered notice to issue to the District Magistrate to appear and show cause why the said order should not be set aside either by me or by the High Court. The District Magistrate, however, has not appeared before me after he was served with this notice.

"I also called upon the Magistrate to explain whether he understood that his consent was necessary to the withdrawal or whether he thought he had to discharge the accused as it had been ordered by the District Magistrate. I further asked him to explain why he simply discharged the accused without specially noting his consent to the withdrawal. He has replied that he did not know at the time that his consent was necessary, and that he believed that he had no alternative but to pass an order of discharge which he did.

"It is admitted, therefore, by the Magistrate that he did not apply his mind as to whether his consent should be given or not. It is also clear from the order itself that he never read section 494, Criminal Procedure Code. There it is specially noted that the Magistrate's consent is necessary. It is also laid down there that in summons-cases the Magistrate shall record an acquittal and not a discharge. He recorded a discharge which further proves that he never read the section or knew of it.

"It seems to me, however, that I must treat this order of discharge as an order of acquittal. The accused should have been acquitted and I must, therefore, treat the order as being one of acquittal. It is not possible, therefore, for me to revise the order of the Magistrate. The question is, whether the record should be sent to the High Court for this purpose ?

"It was held in Gopi Bari v. Emperor (1) that an order passed under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, by a Magistrate is a judicial order and if the discretion invested in Magistrates by that section is arbitrarily exercised the High Court is entitled to interfere and would be justified in passing the order which ought to have been passed by the Magistrate. A still clearer case is Rajani Kanti Shaha v. Idris Thakur (2) where it was held by the Calcutta High Court that an order by which a Court acting under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, accords consent to the withdrawal from a prosecution is a judicial order and the reasons for such an order should be recorded. I have shown in the present case that no reasons are recorded by the Magistrate and that he did not think that he had any power to do anything except to discharge the accused. He was probably also influenced by the fact that the District Magistrate had recorded the order of withdrawal himself on his judicial record instead of leaving the Public Prosecutor to move the Court. It is true that the Public Prosecutor regularised this act of the District Magistrate by acting on what he saw written but that did not take away the effect of this order. In the case quoted, the High Court interfered and set aside the order of the Sessions Judge granting consent to the Public Prosecutor's withdrawal from the prosecution in question and the consequent order of acquittal. There the Sessions Judge did give his consent but did not give his reasons. There is no doubt, therefore, that the High Court has power to set aside the order of the Magistrate dated 12th January 1922 in the present case.

"I would also refer to Municipal Board, Fyzabad v. Vidyadhari (3). There it was held that the law gives the power to Courts of revision to interfere with orders of acquittal and though interference with such orders is unusual it may be resorted to in exceptional circumstances. I have already quoted one instance of the Calcutta High Court setting aside an order of acquittal in circumstances like the present. Further, the person to move the Local Government to appeal against an order of acquittal would be the District Magistrate and this is a case in which he would never appeal as it was he himself who ordered the withdrawal of the case. This, therefore, is pre-eminently a case in which the High Court would exercise its powers of revision, if it considers it necessary to do so.

"I would like to say a few words as regards the merits which would tend to show that Mul Singh intentionally omitted to attend. I accept his word that when Mr. Brereton arrived, Mr. Brereton refused to allow him to go although the summons had already been endorsed in his own office to the effect that Mul Singh should arrange for a local relief in case no relief did come. It is probable that Mr. Brereton wanted him there for his own private convenience. Mul Singh wanted to go, which means that he had arranged his own relief. The question is, does that amount to intentional omission to attend? To hold otherwise, would mean that any servant of any person need never attend the Courts. All he need say would be that his master refused to allow him to go. I consider that Mul Singh intentionally omitted to attend in order not to displease his superior, the District Traffic Superintendent, after he had been properly served with summons with permission of the same Traffic Superintendent who was told by Mul Singh that he would be fined if he did not attend.

"Further, my purpose in taking action was to set right what has become a public scandal. In cases which come on appeal to me from the Magistrates I have frequently seen that Railway witnesses attend after many adjournments and all the Magistrates have frequently complained to me as regards this. My intention was to rectify this state of affairs by a test case. The accused was present on 12th January 1922 and I consider that it is a matter for regret that the District Magistrate should have interfered with my order in these circumstances especially when the Traffic Department of the Railway has been acting in this way for a long time.

"To give one instance of what goes on in this office I need go no further than the present record. On 4th February 1922 I issued a notice to Mul Singh to attend on 15th February 1922. On that date he was not present and I wrote a letter to the District Traffic Superintendent asking him why he had not served the notice and at the same time I enclosed fresh notices. On the next day, i. e., 16th February, 1922, I received a note from the District Traffic Superintendent, which purports to be dated 14th February 1922, asking for another date to be fixed. No reason was given for this request. In reply, however, to my letter of the 15th February he did serve the notices for the subsequent hearing and at the same time explained that he had never received the first notice. This was obviously wrong as his office returned them to me long with the note asking for another date.

"In the present case, therefore, I took action because forced to do so. I and the assessors were greatly inconvenienced by having to wait three days for this witness who had been properly served and who, owing to the personal desire of the District Traffic Superintendent, did not attend. The Government further had to pay for the three days on which the assessors attended. In all the Magistrate's Courts summons are completely neglected if issued to the District Traffic Superintendent. The case was fixed for trial before the Magistrate for 12th January 1922. It was a test case meant to stop this department from acting in future as it had done in the past. It would have taken half an hour to be decided. Instead of that, the District Magistrate, at the request of the District Traffic Superintendent, wrote an order on the judicial record of the Magistrate withdrawing the case instituted by me whereupon the Magistrate discharged the accused instead of acquitting him without giving his consent and without recording his reasons for this consent. It has also been shown that the Magistrate thought that he had to obey the District Magistrate's order and that he himself had no power of any kind. I have also made it clear that in a case like this the High Court has power to interfere if it considers it necessary, and I think I have given good enough reasons why it should interfere in the present case. The principle of this is that there was no reason why a special favour should have been shown to the Traffic Department of the Railway by the District Magistrate. It is extremely unlikely that he would have interfered with the case of a private person.

"I would, therefore, send up the record of the Magistrate to the High Court with the recommendation that it should set aside the order of the Magistrate dated 12th January 1922, acquitting the accused and return the case to a specially selected Magistrate for trial according to law.

"Order announced to Mul Singh's Counsel."

ORDER.—This case has been reported for revision by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi; by his order dated the 27th March 1922, which fully sets forth all the facts of the case and which may be only briefly referred to here.

One Mul Singh, Station Master of Mari-Indus Railway Station, on the North-Western Railway, was summoned to give evidence in a dacoity case, fixed for trial in the Sessions Court for the 20th December 1921. The summons had been duly served on him through the District Traffic Superintendent and the instructions given to him by the office of the District Traffic Superintendent were that he should arrange for his duties in case no relief arrived. He did not, however, turn up on that date, but he sent a telegram to the Sessions Judge to the following effect, on the morning of the 20th December.

"Due to Agent's Special not allowed by District Traffic Superintendent to attend Court to-day kindly postpone case Crown v. Sharif."

As Mul Singh was an important witness for the prosecution, the Sessions case could not be finished on the 20th December and fresh date had to be given for his attendance, of which the office of the District Traffic Superintendent was informed. The District Traffic Superintendent then sent a telegram to the Station Master, asking him "to attend the Sessions Court on the 22nd." He appeared on that date and gave his evidence. After he had done so, he was called upon by the learned Sessions Judge to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 174, Indian Penal Code, for intentionally omitting to attend the Court at the time mentioned in his summons. Mul Singh repeated what he had stated in his telegram, dated the 21st December 1921, but the Court was not satisfied with his explanation and, taking the view that his absence did amount to intentional non-attendance, sent him up to the District Magistrate for trial, purporting to take action under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate entrusted the case for trial to a Magistrate 1st Class who fixed the 12th January 1922 as the date of hearing. The District Traffic Superintendent wrote to the Sessions Judge on the 4th January 1922, explaining the circumstances to which the absence of Mul Singh from Court was due on the 20th December 1921, and requested that the prosecution against him might be withdrawn. Failing to get any favourable consideration of this request from the Sessions Judge, the District Traffic Superintendent approached the District Magistrate and explained matters to him and asked for the withdrawal of the case. Thereupon the District Magistrate made a note on the judicial record of the case against Mul Singh to the following effect:—

"The case may be withdrawn against Mul Singh."

It does not appear from this note for whom this direction was meant, but the Public Prosecutor, who, it seems, was in charge of the case, understood the note to be addressed to himself and made a statement to the Magistrate in whose Court the case was pending, that under instructions from the District Magistrate he withdrew the case. On this the following order was passed by the Magistrate concerned:—

 "As the case has been withdrawn the accused is hereby discharged."

The learned Sessions Judge, for reasons given at length in his order dated the 27th March 1922, wants the High Court to revise this last order of the Magistrate allowing the withdrawal. He recognises that this order should have been an order of acquittal and must be treated as such, because the case under section 174, Indian Penal Code, was a summons-case in which the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate an order of discharge if the case is withdrawn. He urges, however, that though, as a rule, the High Court does not interfere with orders of acquittal in cases in which no appeal has been filed against them by the Local Government under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, this order may be interfered with under the special circumstances of this case, inasmuch as the District Magistrate, who has withdrawn the case, cannot be expected to move the Local Government under section 417, Criminal Procedure Code. He adds that the case was an important one from an administrative point of view and has not been properly withdrawn in conformity with the procedure laid down for such withdrawals, particularly because the Magistrate allowing the withdrawal has given no reasons for it and did not even understand at the time of passing the order that his consent was necessary for such a withdrawal. He also complains that the action of the District Magistrate in interfering in this case in the way above described was not proper. An exception is specially taken to the District Magistrate recording the order dated the 12th January 1922 on the judicial record of the case, of which a Subordinate Magistrate was duly seized.

Reference is made in the report of the Sessions Judge to Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satis Chandra Roy (4), in which a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court has laid down that in withholding or according consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, the Court acts in a judicial capacity and should record its reasons for its order. Exactly the same opinion is expressed in another decision of the Calcutta High Court published as Rajani Kante Shaha v. Idris Thakur (2). Gopi Bari v. Emperor (1) is also referred to. This is a case decided by the Patna High Court, in which it is held that if the discretion vested in a Magistrate by that section is arbitrarily exercised, the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision. Another case relied on by the Sessions Judge is Municipal Board, Fyzabad v. Vidyadhari (3), in which the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that the law gives the power to Courts of revision to interfere even with orders of acquittal, and adds that, although interference with such orders is not usual, it may be resorted to in exceptional circumstances.

It is contended on behalf of Mul Singh, who is present before me with Counsel, that the order of the Magistrate, dated the 12th January 1922, allowing the case to be withdrawn, clearly amounts to an order of acquittal, which should not be interfered with when Government is not appealing against it. Reliance is placed in support of this argument on In re Sinnu Gounden (5). This was a case in which an accused person procured his acquittal by a fraud on the Court concerned, and the High Court was moved in revision to set aside that acquittal and to order a new trial, but the High Court declined to interfere on the ground that it was a case in which the Local Government might have directed the filing of an appeal against the acquittal but did not do so. The High Court recognised that the case was a fit one for a retrial being ordered if the matter had come before it by way of appeal presented by the Local Government, but it did not see its way to interfere in revision in the absence of any indication of an error in law apparent on the face of the record. Now, what has happened here is, that the Public Prosecutor, who was in charge of the case, took action under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, to withdraw it. This he was empowered by law to do and it is not laid down in section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, that he is bound to state his reasons for doing so. It is true that, according to the authorities referred to by the learned Sessions Judge, the Magistrate should have given his reasons for allowing withdrawal and did not act properly in passing the very brief order he did, without reference to section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, which would have shown him that his consent was necessary and that under certain authorities he had to state his reasons for giving that consent; but I do not think that the absence of any statement of reasons in the present case vitiates that order to such an extent as to make this case a fit case for exceptional treatment and to justify the setting aside of an acquittal on revision. In the first place, it may be pointed out that there is some conflict of opinion between the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras on the point under discussion. The Counsel for the respondent draws my attention to In re Sadayan (6) in which it is laid down by the Madras High Court that, where a Public Prosecutor withdrew a charge at a Sessions trial, the accused had a statutory right to an acquittal and the High Court could not set it aside even though the Sessions Judge recorded no reasons for the action he took and the Public Prosecutor offered no reasons for the withdrawal. This is no doubt dissented from by the Calcutta High Court in Umesh Chandra Roy v. Satis Chandra Roy (4) but inasmuch as this, too, is a ruling by a Division Bench, it is entitled to weight, until the conflict between the two Courts is set at rest by a pronouncement more authoritative than either. One of the reasons mentioned by the Sessions Judge for treating this case as an exceptional one is, that here the District Magistrate having authorised the withdrawal of the case, would not obviously take action under section 417 to move the Local Government for filing an appeal against the acquittal, but I think that cannot be a justification for substituting a revision in place of an appeal. So far as the wording of section 417, Criminal Procedure Code, is concerned, there is nothing in it which shows that it is the District Magistrate alone who can move the Local Government to file an appeal. It is, in ordinary cases, a matter of practice that the Local Government is moved by private applicants or the Police through the District Magistrate, or the latter, as the head of Criminal administration in his District, himself moves the Local Government, but in a case like the present, I think the Government could have been moved otherwise, but that has not been done. I see no reason why the salutary rule laid down in In re Sinnu Gounden (5) be not followed in this case and why the order of acquittal should not be allowed to stand.

In the above view of the case it is hardly necessary to say anything about its merits, but as a reference to the merits has been made in the report dated the 27th March 1922, it may be added that this case does not appear to me to be one in which a retrial could have been ordered with any advantage, even if what is virtually an order of acquittal had not been in existence. What is made punishable by the law under section 174, Indian Penal Code, is an intentional disobedience to the summons of a Court. The word 'intentional' does not appear to have been defined in the Indian Penal Code, but it has been interpreted to mean non-attendance which amounts to wilful disobedience (vide Gour's Penal Law of India, Volume I, paragraph 1525, II Edition).

Counsel for the respondent cites before me In the case of Sreenath Ghose (7), where Jackson and Hobhouse, J.J., laid down that a conviction for non-attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant, under section 174, Penal Code, cannot be had unless the person summoned was legally bound to attend, and refused or intentionally refused to attend. In the said case a man employed in the District Judge's Court was summoned to attend the Court of Small Causes to give evidence. He failed to attend. On being prosecuted he stated that he did not attend because the Judge under whom he was employed would not let him go. It was held by the learned Judges that on these facts there was no intentional omission on the part of the accused to attend in obedience to the summons, as he obeyed the orders of his superiors whether those orders were right or wrong. Another case cited on behalf of the respondent is Empress v. Ramdhir (8) in which a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court consisting of Brendreth and Rattigan, JJ., expressed the view that the word 'intentional' seemed to limit the application under section 174 to cases where the omission was clearly wilful and was not intended to be applied to a case where the omission arose from some circumstance which rendered it impracticable for the person to attend. I am not sure if the two rulings above cited do not go a little too far, but the report under consideration has no reference to any authority expressing an opinion to the contrary and in the light of the above no good object could be served by persisting in the prosecution of Mul Singh. He was not only admittedly detained under the express orders of his superior but was prevented because neither a relief was available nor was any of his subordinates able to carry on his duties owing to abnormal sickness among the Staff. This was pointed out to the Sessions Judge by the District Traffic Superintendent in his letter No. 485E, dated the 4th January 1922. If the learned Sessions Judge is anxious, in the interests of the administration, to have a test case put up to prevent the frequent non-attendance of Railway servants, I am afraid he has chosen a somewhat bad case for a test. Mul Singh's conduct further negatives all intention of wilful disobedience inasmuch as he promptly informed the Court on the date of hearing as to the reasons of his unavoidable detention. The learned Sessions Judge urges that if the principle was once laid down that a superior officer could prevent a subordinate of his from attending a Court in obedience to summons, the logical conclusion would be irresistible that any servant could be so detained by his master and this would have a very pernicious effect. There is considerable force in this reasoning, as I do not see that the law, in this respect, makes any difference between a man in private employ and a man in State service. There is, however, this much to be said in favour of construing the provisions of the law liberally in favour of persons in State employ that they would be detained in many cases by exigencies of public service, which may be entitled to as much respect as the needs of the judicial administration.

In conclusion, I may point out that, though this particular individual who had been proceeded against under the orders of the learned Sessions Judge has got off, yet the complaint of the Judge is justified that the Railway Authorities failed properly to assist the Court, inasmuch as they did not arrange to relieve Mul Singh in time to attend the Court on the date of hearing originally fixed. They had been warned sufficiently before and could have made some arrangement for relieving the Station Master for a day, if they realized the importance of their duty in this respect, especially in case of a Sessions trial, which cannot be postponed without serious dislocation of judicial work and involves great expense. With these remarks, I decline to interfere in revision with the order of acquittal passed in this case.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

October 11, 1922.

Present.—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Devadoss.

K. KUNHAMMAD HAJI—PRISONER

—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 420, 421—Jail appeal dismissed by Vacation Judge—Appeal, second, whether maintainable—Review in criminal cases—Powers of Vacation Judge—Constitution of Benches.

Where an appeal presented by a convict under section 420 of the Criminal Procedure Code through the officer in charge of the Jail is dismissed under section 421 by the Vacation Judge of the High Court, a second appeal to the High Court against the same conviction is barred and is not maintainable.

Per Oldfield, J.—There is no power of revision under the Criminal Procedure Code against the judgment of one or more Judges of the High Court in a criminal appeal. The High Court is a Court of Record and can direct any mistake of the Court Clerk in making up the record and in general all slips in legal proceedings, to be amended by an order of the Court to be obtained in a summary way. But there is no power of review in a criminal case vested in the High Court either by virtue of any power conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code or of the position of the High Court as a Court of Record or any general inherent power. The powers of the Vacation Judge of the High Court are not to be looked for in the Registrar's Notification as though it was a self-contained and exhaustive advertisement to the public of their scope and nature. Such a Notification is no more than a general statement of the powers which a Vacation Judge will ordinarily exercise and cannot be read as derogating from those which by virtue of Statutes and Rules he possesses and of which he cannot consistently with them be deprived. [p. 603, col. 2.]

Per Devadoss, J.—Under section 14 of Charter, 24 and 25 Victoria, Chap. 104, it is the function of the Chief Justice to determine what Judges in each case shall sit alone and what Judges shall constitute a Division Bench. When once work has been assigned, the Judge or Judges have full jurisdiction to dispose of all matters except those which by Statute they could not dispose of. A Vacation Judge has, therefore, jurisdiction to dispose of not only urgent matters but also all other matters coming up. [p. 605, col. 1.]

In the case of a criminal appeal or a criminal revision petition, there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for dismissal for default of appearance. In a criminal case the matter is not between party and party and it is the duty of the Court to go into the case and dispose of it on the merits. Where a criminal appeal or a revision is dismissed without hearing, there is no judgment at all and the Judge or the Bench which disposed of the matter for default of appearance can re-hear the matter. [p. 608, col. 1.]

The order of dismissal for default in such cases is no judgment at all and the order is tantamount to an adjournment of the case till someone appears and moves the Court to hear him. [p. 608, col. 1.] (Case-law discussed.)

The High Court, although it is not bound to hear Counsel in support of a criminal revision petition is not entitled to dismiss it for default of appearance but can only dispose of it on the merits. [p. 608, col. 1.]

Ranga Row v. Emperor, 16 Ind. Cas. 518; 12 M. L. T. 350; 23 M. L. J. 371; 13 Cr. L. J. 710; (1912) M. W. N. 982, dissented from.

The exception contained in section 369 of the Criminal Procedure Code in favour of the High Court is with reference to the power of review in regard to cases decided by a Judge of the High Court presiding over the Sessions when points are reserved for consideration by the Full Bench or on the certification of the Advocate-General. [p. 603, col. 1.]

A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to revise its judgment pronounced in a criminal revision case or a criminal appeal. [p. 609, col. 1.]

Where a Judge or a Bench of Judges is properly asked to dispose of a certain matter he or they have jurisdiction to dispose of it. [p. 606, col. 1.]

The constitution of Benches is the province of the Chief Justice and if the Judges refuse or neglect to be constituted into Benches, arranged by him and choose to dispose of cases as they please they would be acting without jurisdiction. [p. 606, col. 1.]

Appeal against the sentence of the Court of the Special First Class Magistrate, Tirur, in Summary Case No. 3 of the Calendar for 1922.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, for the Accused.—A Jail appeal presented by the present accused against the same conviction was dismissed by His Lordship Mr. Justice Krishnan during the summer vacation on the ground that the appeal was out of time and that there was no ground to excuse the delay. The present appeal was filed in ignorance of the said order of dismissal. Mr. Justice Krishnan admitted it as regards sentence, also without knowing the prior dismissal order. The preliminary point to be met is, whether the first order of dismissal is a bar to the hearing of this present appeal.

Mr. Justice Krishnan's first order of dismissal is ultra vires and a nullity. Firstly, a Vacation Judge of the High Court who has power to deal only with urgent matters has no jurisdiction to dispose of Jail appeals. Section 14 of the Charter Act empowers the Chief Justice to arrange for the sittings and the constitution of the Bench and in exercise of these powers, the Chief Justice had constituted the Vacation Judge to dispose of urgent work only as the notification under the Registrar's signature shows. Secondly, assuming that the Vacation Judge had all the powers of the High Court, the notification to the public is expressly limited only to receiving Jail appeals and not to hearing or disposing of them. If the notification extended to hearing them, the accused might have taken adequate steps to be represented by Counsel and present his case properly. He has now been deprived of the opportunity of being heard.

KUNHAMMAD RAJI V. EMPEROR.

The order of Mr. Justice Krishnan is without jurisdiction and is not a bar to the hearing of the appeal.

Even if the said order was passed with jurisdiction, the present appeal may be regarded as one to review it. True, the case was not admitted as on review but if this Court has jurisdiction and if there are grounds for review the character of the admission would not be a bar.

[OLDFIELD, J.—If it is a review, then only Mr. Justice Krishnan could hear this appeal.]

This is not a civil case and there is no statutory prohibition against other Judges hearing a review in criminal cases.

As to the grounds for review, the order of Mr. Justice Krishnan dismissing the appeal as out of time and refusing to excuse delay is obviously wrong. The new Limitation Act of 1922 will clearly apply and if time taken in obtaining copies is deducted the appeal would be in time. I may concede there is no power to excuse delay if the appeal was really out of time. But it is clear the new Act was not present in the Judge's mind at all. The order is wrong and liable to be reviewed.

On the question of High Court's jurisdiction to review, section 369 is conclusive. The language is "No Court other than a High Court can review" and there is no warrant to limiting the prima facie general reservation of the powers of High Court to the powers of review under section 434. The decisions in Queen-Empress v. Durga Charan (1), Queen Empress v. Fox (2); In the matter of Gibbons (3) are wrong. See High Court Proceedings, 7th November 1873 (4); Emperor v. Komesh Chandra (5); Rajjab Ali v. Emperor (6); Amodini Dasee v. Darsan Ghose (7), Bibhuty Mohun Roy v. Dasimoni Dassi (8). Ranga Rao v. Emperor (9) is not a decision on this point.

Apart from section 369, the High Court as a Court of Record has inherent powers of review. It is the duty of the High Court to see that its records are not tainted by manifest absurdity. Vide section 106 of the Government of India Act; Stephen's Commentaries, Volume III, page 501, also Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (10); High Court Proceedings, 7th November 1873 (4); Rajjab Ali v. Emperor (6); Emperor v. Kallu (11). His Lordship Mr. Justice Spencer recently restored a criminal revision case dismissed for default.

On the admission of the appeal itself, the restrictive admission of the appeal as to sentence only is wrong. See Nafar Sheikh v. Emperor (12); Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra (13); Rajjab Ali v. Emperor (6), citing In the matter of Gibbons (3).

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The powers of the Hon'ble the Judges are regulated by the Charter and cannot be derogated by any notification issued by the Chief Justice whose powers are limited to constituting the Bench and assigning work: Sections 13 and 14; In the matter of Abdool Sobhan (14); Queen v. Zuhiruddin (15) see also the observation of Mr. Justice Hamilton in Ex parte George Wise (16).

Further, the actual notification appointing His Lordship Mr. Justice Krishnan as Vacation Judge without any reservation or qualification whatever and the practice of the High Court has always been to dispose of jail appeals during the vacation. The Vacation Judge's powers were not and cannot be limited. The order of dismissal was, therefore, made with full jurisdiction.

the High Court in a criminal case. Section 369 must be read with section 434. The position is well-settled by a series of decisions and it is too late now to question them. See Queen-Empress v. Durga Charan (1); Queen-Empress v. Fox (2); In the matter of Gibbons (3); Ranga Row v. Emperor (9) and as a Court of Record the powers of the High Court are the same as those of the inferior Courts under section 369.

There being no power of review and the order of Mr. Justice Krishnan being well within his powers, the present appeal is incompetent.

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—This appeal is by the third accused in S. C. No. 3 of 1922 on the file of the Special First Class Magistrate of Tirur, against the conviction and sentence therein. The Public Prosecutor opposes it on the ground that Criminal Appeal No. 395 of 1922 against the conviction and sentence has already been dismissed by a learned Judge of this Court. The facts are, that Criminal Appeal No. 395 was presented by the accused under section 420, Criminal Procedure Code, through the officer in charge of the Jail, where he is, on 6th May 1922, and was dismissed under section 421, as it was out of time, by Krishnan, J., sitting as Vacation Judge on 2nd June 1922. The accused, presumably in ignorance of this, presented the present appeal on 17th July 1922 on the re-opening of the Court through Counsel. It is not disputed that, unless the decision of 2nd June 1922 can, on some grounds, be disregarded, we are debarred from disposing of the present appeal on the merits.

We have been asked, first, to meet this difficulty by treating the present appeal as an application for the revision of the previous decision of Krishnan, J. But that is not the way in which it is expressed; and in any case section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, notwithstanding the reference to procedure ordinarily to trials in a High Court, does not empower a High Court to revise the judgment of one or more of its own Judges. For, that reference may be explained either, as it was by Mitter, J., in In the matter of Gibbons (3) as applicable to the exceptional cases in which the High Court procedure has been extended to other Courts, or intended ex abundantii cautela to prevent any possible conflict with the Letters Patent or other legislation by which High Courts are affected. It cannot be read as conferring or recognising by implication a power the existence of which is negatived by the wording of the remainder of the section. That is supported by the case already referred to, and the obvious anomalies, which the contrary view entails are probably, the reason for the absence of further authority against it. On behalf of the accused we have been referred to no case in which revision of the judgment of one or more Judges of a High Court has been allowed. The conclusion must be that there is no power to revise it.

The next suggestion is, that the appeal before us should be treated as an application for a review of Krishnan, J.'s. previous order; and here again that is not the form of the petition. But, if that can be treated as immaterial, the accused relies next on the fact that the present appeal was, it happens, actually admitted by Krishnan, J., sitting in admission, and urges that this amounts to a setting aside by the learned Judge of his previous order and a re-opening of the case on its merits, such as takes place when an application for review is granted in civil proceedings. This can be rejected on the short ground that, as Mr. Srinivasagopalachariar admits on accused's behalf, the learned Judge was not conscious that there was any previous decision which would be a bar to the present appeal and which would have to be set aside before that appeal could be heard.

We have then to deal with the argument that we can ourselves review the decision of Krishnan, J., as that of the Court, although it was given by a Single Judge, and it is not necessary to rely on the fact that the Court is now constituted differently from the Court which passed that decision in order to hold that we cannot do so with reference either to any power conferred by the Code or to the position of the High Court as a Court of Record or any general inherent power. As regards this, section 369 expressly negatives (subject to certain exceptions not at present in question) the power of Courts other than High Courts to review and no other provision authorising High

KUNHAMMAD HAJI v. EMPEROR.

Courts to exercise that power, their exclusion from the purview of the section cannot be read as conferring it by implication. High Courts, no doubt, under section 106 (Government of India Act 5 and 6 Geo. V, Chap. 61) are Courts of Record and in a Court of Record, if there appears any mistake of the clerk in making up the record, the Court will direct him to amend it; and in general all slips in legal proceedings may be amended by an order of the Court to be obtained in a summary way. Stephen's Commentaries, 16th Edition, Vol. III, 501. But this which, in fact, goes no further than section 363 does as regards inferior Courts, is not sufficient to support accused's argument, since the question is of a dismissal which may or may not have been mistaken, but which was certainly deliberate, on a ground of limitation, to which the Court must be supposed to have applied its mind. As regards authority, decisions such as Rajjab Ali v. Emperor (6) and High Court Proceedings, 7th November 1873 (4) (if the latter was really given judicially) are not in point, because they deal with cases in which the accused not having had the reasonable notice enjoined in section 420, Criminal Procedure Code, a condition precedent to the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction, was not fulfilled, the conclusion not being reached strictly in review, but on the ground that there was no previous valid adjudication to bar a hearing on the merits, and the absence of reasonable notice is not in question here, since it is not disputed that accused had the notice to which the appellants from Jail are entitled under Criminal Rules of Practice No. 59. Generally, the course of authority is plainly against the power to review. For a fact conclusive, in the nature of the case, against the existence of an inherent power, no instance of its exercise has been produced and it is negatived in the case last referred to and in In the matter of Gibbons (3) Queen-Empress v. Durga Charan (1), Queen-Empress v. Fox (2) and in Ranga Row v. Emperor (c). The accused's claim must, therefore, fail if it is regarded as to a review.

The accused finally argues for his right to a hearing of this appeal on its merits on the ground that the dismissal of his previous appeal is void, because it was not within the power of Krishnan, J., sitting (as he was) as Vacation Judge, to deal with it at all. This can, no doubt, at first sight be supported to some extent by the terms of the Notification of 20th March 1922 regarding Krishnan, J.'s sittings. For it is notified that the Vacation Judge will dispose of "urgent applications which require to be heard immediately" and, in spite of the wording of Appellate Side r. 1 (1) (f), it is doubtful whether an appeal can be described as an application, the only reference to appeals is that implied in the specification of "urgent criminal work" as to be disposed of by an Appellate Court of two Judges; and although there is no doubt provision for the reception of appeals under section 420, Criminal Procedure Code, from appellants in Jail, it is made in the portion of the Notification which refers to the Registrar's Office, not to the Judge. But, even so, the appointment of Krishnan, J. as Vacation Judge was notified with no qualification of his powers in the usual way in accordance with an order of the Chief Justice, nominating him for that function, which we have seen, and even if no definition of the powers and duties of the Vacation Judge could be deduced from Statute or Rules, the practice of the Court would afford guidance and the fact that, as we have ascertained, some Vacation Judges in past years have admitted or dismissed appeals from accused in Jail without complaint would go some way towards negating the argument before us. In fact, however, the answer to that argument is that the powers of the Vacation Judge are not to be looked for in the Notification, as though it was a self-contained and exhaustive advertisement to the public of their scope and nature. For it need not and must not be regarded as more than a general statement of the powers, which the Vacation Judge ordinarily will exercise and cannot be read as derogating from those, which in virtue of Statute and Rules he possesses and of which he cannot, consistently with them, be deprived. Appellate Side Rule 4, which has the force of law, directs that during the vacation of the Court its "appellate jurisdiction may be exercised by a Single Judge acting as Vacation Judge this being subject only to an exception not alleged to be in question at present. Section 108, Government of India Act, 1915-(5 and 6

KUNHAMMAD HAJI V. EMPEROR.

Geo. V, Chap. 61, provides that "each High Court may by its own rules (the Appellate Side Rules, above referred to) provide as it thinks fit for the exercise by one or more Judges of the appellate jurisdiction vested in the Court," and that "the Chief Justice shall determine what Judge is in each case to sit alone." Appellate Side Rule (1) provides for the hearing and determination by one Judge of appeals from the judgment or order of a Criminal Court. It is not necessary for the present purpose to attempt an exhaustive enumeration of the Vacation Judge's powers or to go beyond these references to establish that Krishnan, J., was competent to dismiss accused's appeal. Its dismissal, therefore, cannot be regarded as a nullity or otherwise than as a bar to the hearing of a second appeal against the same conviction.

The result is, that the appeal cannot be heard and must be dismissed.

Devadoss, J.—This is an appeal presented under section 419, Criminal Procedure Code, by one Kunhammad Haji against his conviction by the Special First Class Magistrate of Tirur, under section 436, Indian Penal Code. The appellant presented, under section 420, Criminal Procedure Code, what is commonly known as a Jail appeal, which was dismissed by Mr. Justice Krishnan, the Vacation Judge of 1922, with the remark "the appeal is out of time, and there is no proper ground for excusing the delay and the case is proved against the accused by the prosecution evidence which there is no reason to discredit. The sentence is a correct." Mr. Srinivasa Gopalachari who appears for the appellant urges that the judgment of Krishnan, J., on the appeal presented by the appellant through the Superintendent of Jails was passed without jurisdiction, and that this Court has power to hear the appeal presented by him on the merits.

He urges three points: (1) the order of Krishnan, J., having been passed without jurisdiction, the order is no order at all, and, therefore, his appeal could be heard on the merits; (2) the appellant had no reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his appeal and so the appeal could be heard; (3) the order of Krishnan, J., could be reviewed by a Bench of two Judges hearing criminal appeals.

The appellant was convicted on 13th April 1922, the copy of the lower Court's judgment was given to him on 24th April 1922 and the Jail appeal was forwarded to the High Court on 4th May 1922. The High Court was closed for the long vacation on 6th May 1922 and the Jail appeal was dismissed on 2nd June 1922. Mr. Srinivasa Gopalachari presented the appeal petition on behalf of the appellant on 17th July 1922. It was moved before Krishnan, J., who was sitting in the Admission Court; he ordered notice on 27th July 1922 with the remark "Admitted as regards sentence only. It is not clear why the third accused should have been given a fine also." It is contended by Mr. Srinivasa Gopalachari that the learned Judge was not informed of the dismissal of the Jail appeal when he moved for notice on his appeal, and that both Counsel and Judge were not aware at the time of the order of 2nd June 1922.

The learned Counsel's contention is that the Vacation Judge could only hear urgent applications and the Jail appeal not being an application regarding an urgent matter, Mr. Justice Krishnan had no jurisdiction to dispose of it and that the notice published under the signature of the Registrar simply said that the office of the Registrar would be open for the receipt of urgent applications, Jail appeals under section 420 and application in non-contentious matters.

The question for determination is, whether a Judge of a High Court sitting as Vacation Judge has or has not jurisdiction to dispose of not only urgent matters but also matters which came up before him.

By section 2 of 24 and 25 Vict., Chap. 104, an Act for establishing High Courts of Judicature in India, it was provided that the High Court of Judicature at Madras shall consist of a Chief Justice and as many Judges, not exceeding 15, as Her Majesty may from time to time think fit and appoint. By section 13, of the Act it is provided "subject to any laws or regulations which may be made by the Governor-General in Council, the High Court established in any Presidency under this Act may, by its own rules, provide for the exercise by one or more Judges or by Divisional Courts constituted by two or more of the Judges of the said

KUNHAMMAD HAJI v. EMPEROR.

High Courts of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction vested in such Court in such manner as may appear to such Court to be convenient for the due administration of justice."

Section 14 is in these terms: "The Chief Justice of each High Court shall from time to time determine what Judge in each case shall sit alone, and what Judges of the Court whether with or without the Chief Justice, shall constitute the several Division Courts as aforesaid." It is clear from these two sections that the High Court may by its own rules provide for the exercise by one or more Judges or by Division Courts of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction of the Court. The rules framed by the High Court under section 13 would give jurisdiction to Judges to dispose of any matter excepting those which by Statute they could not dispose of. The function of the Chief Justice is to determine what Judge in each case shall sit alone, and what Judges of the Court shall constitute Divisional Benches. He has to assign work, and when work has once been assigned, the Judge or Judges have full jurisdiction to dispose of it. The contention of Mr. Srinivasa Gopalachari is that the learned Chief Justice restricted the power of the Vacation Judge to urgent applications. In the first place, there is no evidence that the learned Chief Justice, granting he has the power to do so, ever intended to restrict the jurisdiction of the Vacation Judge to urgent matters only. The Notification published under the signature of the Registrar is only to inform the public that the Vacation Judge was prepared to hear urgent applications and not that the Vacation Judge had power only to hear urgent matters. Secondly, the jurisdiction of a Judge can only be restricted by Statute as in the case of appeals by persons under sentence of death (Vide section 377, Criminal Procedure Code) and as in the trials under the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, section 11 or by rules framed by the High Court under section 13.

The case of In the matter of Abdool Sobhan (14) throws considerable light on this question. In that case an objection application for transfer was made before a Division Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Cunningham and Mr. Justice

Prinsep. When the Counsel opened the case for transfer, the learned Judges intimated there was no use in going on further with the matter and dismissed the application. Thereupon, another Counsel moved the Chief Justice to have the matter re-heard on the ground that the learned Judges composing the Division Bench did not give full hearing to the case. In the course of the argument the Chief Justice Garth observed: "Suppose, I did the same thing, who is to set me in order? Is a Division Bench consisting of two puisne Judges in a different position from a Division Bench consisting of myself and another Judge? In such a case the proper course is to appeal to Government." The Counsel answered: "Your Lordship is undoubtedly above the other Judges of the Court." To which he replied, "As Chief Justice I have certain functions to perform in constituting Benches but having done so, have I power to call them to account?" The learned Chief Justice held that as Chief Justice he could not ask the learned Judge to re-hear the case. In that the application was an application for transfer of a case from one Court to another which could be renewed on proper grounds as the order on a transfer application is not res judicata. The learned Chief Justice intimated that they might renew the application or ask the Judges, if they were disposed to do so, to hear Counsel fully. In the course of the judgment reference was made to a precedent which happened during the time of Sir Barnes Peacock, Chief Justice of Bengal. To quote the words of Chief Justice Garth in respect of that case: "A Criminal Bench of this Court, consisting of two Judges, had been appointed by the Chief Justice in the usual way, for the purpose of hearing criminal appeals; instead of sitting together to hear these appeals, the Judges thought proper to hear them separately, that is to say, one Judge sitting alone heard some of them, and the other sitting alone heard the rest; but the judgments in all the cases were signed by both Judges. Upon this being represented to the Chief Justice, he considered that, in point of law, there had been no hearing at all of these appeals, because they had not been heard by a legally constituted Court, and one Judge sitting alone had no jurisdiction to hear them. He, therefore, ordered the same Criminal Bench to hear them again; and upon the Judges of that Bench declining to do so upon the ground, that they had been already judicially decided, the Chief Justice sent them to another Division Bench by whom they were finally determined. In this view of my learned predecessor I entirely agree. It is the province and duty of the Chief Justice under section 14 of the High Courts Act, to determine what Judge or Judges shall decide each case; and if two Judges are appointed by him to hear an appeal, it is quite clear, I think, that no Single Judge has any jurisdiction to hear it." With regard to the case of the Queen v. Zuhiruddin (15), the learned Chief Justice observed: "In that case a prisoner was committed to take his trial at Patna. On the application of the District Magistrate by letter to this Court, the Judge in the English Department made a summary order transferring the case for trial to Shahabad. The prisoner then applied to this Court for a Rule calling on the Crown to show cause why the order of the transfer should not be rescinded, upon the ground it had been made without notice to him, and that the Judge in the English Department had no power to make it. This Rule was heard by a Full Bench, of which the Judge of the English Department was a member, and with his entire concurrence the Rule was made absolute." It is clear, therefore, that where a Judge or a Bench of Judges is asked to dispose of a certain matter they have jurisdiction to dispose of it. The constitution of the Bench is the province of the Chief Justice and if the Judges refuse or neglect to be constituted into Benches as arranged by him and choose to dispose of cases as they please they would be acting without jurisdiction. If a learned Judge who has been asked to do admission work takes into his account or without his being asked to do Original Side work calls up Original Side cases of his own accord and disposes of them he may be said to be acting without jurisdiction. That a Vacation Judge has all the powers of the High Court can be inferred from clause 36 of the Letters Patent which is in these terms: "We do hereby declare that any function which is hereby directed to be performed by the said High Court of Judicature at Madras in the exercise of its Original or Appellate jurisdiction, may be performed by any Judge, or by any Division Court thereof appointed or constituted for such purpose under the provisions of the 13th section of the aforesaid Act of the 24th and 25th years of Our Reign." The Government India Act of 1915, 5 and 6 George V, Clal. (1, section 108 re-produces sections 13 and 14 of the older Act. In England the Rules of the Supreme Court regulate the sitting during vacation. Order XLIII, r. 11 provides for the selection of two Judges at the commencement of the long vacation to be Vacation Judges. Rule 12 provides for the arrangement of the sittings, Two Judges sit separately together as a Divisional Court as occasion shall require and may hear and dispose of all causes, matters and other business to whichever Division the same may be assigned. In Ex parte George Wise (16) Hamilton, J., (now Lord Sumner) issued a writ of mandamus during the vacation. In the course of the arguments by Mr. F. E. Smith, (now the Lord Chancellor) the learned Judge observed: "If you satisfy me that I have the jurisdiction to do so, I should certainly grant a Rule Nisi. A Vacation Judge is not a Divisional Court." The learned Counsel answered: "It is provided by O.LXIII; r. 12 that Vacation Judges may sit either separately or together as a Divisional Court as occasion shall require and may hear and dispose of all causes, matters and other business to whichever Division the same may be assigned." Hamilton, J., said "You may take your Rule Nisi," and passed an order to that effect. This shows that an application for a prerogative writ of mandamus which according to the Supreme Court Orders has to be made to a Divisional Court or King Bench was made before a Single Vacation Judge who granted a Rule Nisi and considering who the learned Judge is and who the learned Counsel who appeared before him is, we may assume that the issue of the Rule was within the jurisdiction of the Single Vacation Judge.

The practice for the office is to circulate Jail appeals presented under section 420 to the Judges. Jail appeals are disposed of by only one Judge. Notice is issued on Jail appeals or they are dismissed summarily by a Judge in Court after the appellant's name has been called. The Vacation Judge has been pursuing this practice at least for some years. The Vacation Judge disposes of matters which are ordinarily disposed of by a Bench of two Judges. Transfer applications are as a rule made to a Bench of two Judges. But during the vacation, a Single Judge disposed of transfer applications. Till recently, it was the practice in the High Court to post second appeals for notice before a Single Judge sitting in the Admission Court. The Admission Judge either ordered notice or dismissed the appeal. For the last few years, the practice has been changed, and second appeals are circulated to the Judges who order notice if they find there are sufficient grounds for notice and if they find there are no points of law they order the cases to be posted under O. XLI, r. II and then they come up before a Bench of two Judges who after hearing appellant's Counsel or Vakil either order notice or dismiss them.

If the practice obtaining here is an indication of what is considered to be the jurisdiction of a Vacation Judge we find he disposes of matters which are usually disposed of at other time by a Bench of the High Court consisting of two Judges. I hold that Krishnan, J.'s jurisdiction to dispose of Jail appeals was not in any way restricted by the Notification of the 20th March 1922 under the signature of the Registrar.

The next contention is, that the appellant had no opportunity to engage a Counsel to argue his case because the Notification specifically stated that only urgent applications could be made. The Notification runs thus: "The Vacation Judge will dispose of urgent applications which require to be heard immediately whether in proceedings on the Appellate or Original Side of the High Court. In any case of great urgency application may be made by delivering to the Registrar a request to transmit the necessary papers to the Vacation Judge." Under the heading "Registrar's Office" the Notification is "Except petitions and applications in non-contentious testamentary and intestate matters and appeals received under section 420 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from appellants who are in Jail, no application other than an urgent application as above-mentioned will be received or filed during the vacation." The appellant contends that the office would not receive a memorandum of appearance on behalf of an appellant in Jail during the vacation because in the case of Jail appeals unless there is a bail application, the appeal is considered not to be an urgent matter. Under section 420 of the Criminal Procedure Code an appellant in Jail may present his petition of appeal to the officer in charge of the Jail who shall thereupon forward the same to the Appellate Court. Section 421 provides "that no appeal presented under section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his Pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same." This provision does not apply to appeals presented under section 420, Criminal Procedure Code. Rule 50 of the Criminal Rules of Practice lay down "that no appeal shall be summarily rejected until seven days have elapsed after its receipt by the Appellate Court. In forwarding such an appeal the officer in charge of the Jail shall invariably certify that the appellant has been informed that if he intends to appoint a Pleader, an appearance must be put in within seven days from the date on which his petition may reach the Appellate Court." Seven days' time is allowed before a Jail appeal is circulated to the Judges. So an appellant has an opportunity of engaging Counsel if he wishes to do so. I do not think the office could have refused to receive a memorandum of appearance from a Practitioner on behalf of an appellant in jail if it was brought to the notice of the office that the Jail appeal might be disposed of during the vacation. There is nothing to show that in this case the appellant had not had an opportunity of engaging a Counsel before his appeal was disposed of. So there is no substance in this contention.

It is further urged that as the appellant was not heard there ought to be a re-hearing of the case. When an appeal has once been disposed of, the Court is functus officio and cannot re-hear the appeal. This is quite clear from a number of decisions of the Madras High Court as well as of other High Courts. In Ranga Row v. Emperor (9) it was held that if a criminal revision petition is dismissed on account of the non-appearance of the Practitioner who had filed it, the High Court is not competent to restore to its file such a petition. In the course of the judgment reference is made to Referred Trial No. 40 of 1905 of this Court. It appears that after the dismissal of the appeal the learned Chief Justice thought that his order was wrong and he wanted to allow the appeal. On the matter being argued before him and Mr. Justice Moore, they both thought that they were functus officio the moment they delivered their judgment and that they had no power to re-open the matter and they directed that a letter be addressed to Government for the exercise of the prerogative of mercy in view of the doubt which they entertained as to his guilt. It has been brought to our notice that in a recent case Mr. Justice Spencer who dismissed a criminal revision petition for default of appearance of a Practitioner restored it to file and heard the case on the merits. In the case of a criminal appeal or criminal revision petition there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for dismissing an appeal or revision petition for default of appearance. In a criminal matter the question is not between party and party and it is the duty of the Court to go into the matter and dispose of it on the merits. The only way of reconciling the conflicting decisions on this point is to hold that when a criminal appeal or a criminal revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance there is no decision on the merits and, therefore, there is no proper disposal of it according to law and the Court may re-hear it. The order of dismissal for default of appearance in such cases is no judgment at all, and the order is tantamount to an adjournment of the case till some one appears and moves the Court to hear him. With due respect to the learned Judges who decided Ranga Row v. Emperor (9) I think that the High Court, though it is not bound to hear a Practitioner in support of a criminal revision petition, is not entitled to dismiss it for default of appearance but could only dispose of it on the merits.

In High Court Proceedings, 7th November, 1873, (4) a ruling is given to the effect that when a criminal appeal has been rejected without hearing the appellant's Pleader, under the corresponding section 421 of the Criiminal Procedure Code and if it appears that an adequate excuse has been made for the Pleader's non-appearance, the Court could restore the case to its file and hear him. In Emperor v. Kallu (11) it was held that a Judge who passed an order on a Jail appeal to the effect that no appeal lay and that no sufficient ground appeared for interference in revision was not precluded from entertaining the application for review presented by a Counsel in relation to the same matter. It has been held in some cases that a judgment or order is not complete until it is signed and sealed and, therefore, the matter could be re-opened. Under section 369 of the Criminal Procedure Code when a judgment has been signed it is final, and there is no power left in the Court to re-open the case.

The Bombay High Court in Empress v. Mahomed Yashin (17) takes a narrow view with regard to the power to re-hear criminal appeals and revision petitions dismissed for default. But with great respect to the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court, I consider that when a criminal appeal or revision petition is dismissed without hearing, there is no judgment at all and the learned Judge of the Bench which disposed of the matter for default of appearance could re-hear the matter.

The third point argued is, that the High Court had power to revise an order passed in a criminal matter. I think this is concluded by authority. The earliest case on the point is in Queen v. Godai Ravi (18). A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court presided over by Sir Barnes Peacock held that the High Court could not entertain the application to review a judgment passed by it in a criminal case. The learned Judge observed at page 63: "The Code of Criminal Procedure does not contain any provision expressly authorising a review of judgment in a criminal case after the judgment has been recorded. The Code of Criminal Procedure was passed after the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter contains a section expressly authorising review of judgment but the former contains no corresponding section. From this it may reasonably be inferred that the Legislature did not intend to confer in criminal cases a power similar to that which they had been given in civil cases." Now, the Code of Criminal Procedure has been amended a number of times, and the Legislature has not chosen to give a power of review to any Court in a criminal case. Section 369 is relied upon as showing that the High Court had power by implication to review a judgment passed in a criminal case. I think such a contention is untenable. Section 369 runs thus: "No Court, other than a High Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except as provided in sections 395 and 484 or to correct a clerical error." The exception contained in section 369 is with reference to the power of review in regard to cases decided by a Judge of the High Court presiding over the Sessions when points are reserved for consideration by the Full Bench, or on the certificate of the Advocate-General. The cases reported as Queen-Empress v. Durga Charan (1), Queen-Empress v. Fox (2), In the matter of Gibbons (3) are all authorities for the position that a Division Bench of the High Court has no power to review its judgment pronounced in a criminal revision case or a criminal appeal.

In this case the appellant has not applied for review and I consider that this Bench which did not hear the case originally has no power to review the order. In these circumstances, the order of Mr. Justice Krishnan made during the vacation on the appeal of the appellant is good and the matter cannot be re-opened. That being so, we cannot hear the appeal before us and it must be dismissed.

Prisons Act (IX of 1894), s. 42 (3)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 107—Communicating with prisoner—Abetment by prisoner.

A prisoner who by his active co-operation aids a stranger outside the Jail in communicating with himself abets the former in the commission of an offence under section 42 (3) of the Prisons Act and is himself guilty of an offence under the section.

Second accused sent a written message to first accused, a prisoner, through a Warder. First accused wrote an answer on the back of the paper containing the message and sent it back to the second accused:

Held, (1) that the second accused was guilty of communicating with a prisoner within the meaning of section 42 (3) of the Prisons Act;

(2) that the first accused was guilty of abetment of the same offence.

Petitions, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, dated the 3rd August 1922, in C. C. No. 11023 of 1922.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Petitioners.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The first accused was convicted of the offence specified in clause (3) of section 42 of the Prisons Act, IX of 1894. He was a prisoner in the Penitentiary and the second accused, an uncle of the first accused, who received a wire from a relation at Coimbatore which contained matters pertaining to the first accused, wrote a message on the back of the telegram intending that that writing should be read by the first accused, and handed the telegram to a Jail Warder who was employed to, and did, carry the telegram to the first accused in Jail. The latter, thereupon, read the telegram as well as the communication written on the back of it and wrote a reply on the back of the same telegram and handed it to the Warder for being carried to the second accused. The Chief Presidency Magistrate convicted the first and the second accused of an offence under section 42 of the Prisons Act and sentenced each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

STREENIVASA CHETTY V. EMPEROR.

The material portion of the section is as follows:—

"Whoever * * * * communicates or attempts to communicate with any prisoner shall, on conviction before a Magistrate, be liable to imprisonment * * * *."

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, who appears for the accused, admits that the second accused has committed the offence but says that the sentence passed on him is unduly severe. As regards the first accused, he contends that it is communication with a prisoner that is made an offence under the section and that it makes only the person who communicates with a prisoner liable to punishment and that a prisoner cannot communicate with himself and that a prisoner cannot, therefore, commit the offence described in clause (3) of section 42. But the question still remains whether a prisoner may not abet the offence, for, the same section provides that whoever abets any offence shall also be liable to punishment. The word "abet" is not defined by the Prisons Act, but the General Clauses Act, X of 1897, says that the word "abet" shall have the same meaning as in the Penal Code. Under section 107 of the Indian Penal Code "a person abets the doing of a thing who intentionally aids, by any act, the doing of that thing." It is quite possible for a person to communicate with a prisoner without the latter's aid or co-operation, for instance, a person may walk into the Jail and when the prisoner has no intention to speak to him or does not even expect that the stranger will speak to him, the latter may do so, and the prisoner may unintentionally, without even an effort, hear the word spoken, or, to take another instance, the prisoner may find by accident a piece of paper which has been introduced into his cell without his knowledge; and picking it up, he may find that it contains a message for him. In these two instances the person who communicates with the prisoner has committed the offence but the communication is made without the co-operation of the prisoner. But, if the prisoner is aware that a certain piece of paper contains a communication intended for him, receives it from the Warder and reads it, I am inclined to think that he has, by his active co-operation, aided the commission of the offence, for he, by his acts, facilitated the commission of it, and, in fact, the commission of the offence would have been impossible without the active participation in it of the prisoner himself.

In the present case, not only did the prisoner read the letter but he also wrote a reply and handed it to the Warder, who was acting in concert with the accused Nos. 1 and 2. In the view I have taken, it is unnecessary to consider what the effect of this additional act on the part of the prisoner is. It may be noted that the first accused pleaded guilty and the Magistrate thereupon convicted him; but, altogether apart from this, I am prepared to hold that he was rightly convicted of an offence under section 42 of the Prisons Act read with section 107, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the sentences passed I have just a word to say. I have been told that for the acts described above, constituting a breach of prison discipline, the first accused was adequately punished under the prison rules; and, in my opinion, it is not, therefore, necessary to sentence him to pay more than a nominal fine. I, therefore, reduce the fine in his case from Rs. 200 to one rupee, and direct that, if the fine has already been recovered, the balance shall be refunded to him. As regards the second accused, I am of the opinion that the punishment awarded is unduly severe and that an imposition of a fine of Rs. 50 will meet the ends of justice and I reduce the fine to Rs. 50 and direct that, if the fine has already been recovered from him, the balance shall be refunded to him.

I may add that the learned Crown Prosecutor has very properly not pressed for severe sentences in the circumstances of this case.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 100, 304, 325—Fatal blow, doubtful which of two accused struck—Offence—Private defence, when Court to give effect to plea.

Where it is impossible to decide which of two accused struck the fatal blow, the offence committed by them falls under section 325 of the Penal Code, and not under section 304.

If on the record a right of private defence can be clearly raised, the Court should give effect to it, even although not pleaded by the accused.

Appeal from an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Ferozepur, dated the 31st March 1922.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. H. Carden Noad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Waryam Singh and Godha Singh, sons of Pesar Singh, Jats of Mauza Wandar, in the District of Ferozepur, have been found guilty of having caused the death of their cousin Prem Singh, and, under the second part of section 304, Indian Penal Code, have each been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200. In default of payment of the fine the appellants were ordered to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for six months. The fine, if realised, is to be paid to the sons of the deceased. Against their convictions and sentences they have come to this Court in appeal through Dr. Nand Lal whom I have heard, and Mr. Carden Noad has addressed me on behalf of the Crown.

The facts of the case are detailed in the judgment under appeal and need not be repeated here. The evidence of P. W. No. 6 Sajjan, P. W. No. 8 Kehra and P. W. No. 9 Phumman clearly establishes the fact that the two appellants engaged in a fight with the deceased and his brother Harnam Singh. The dispute arose out of a trivial matter, the appellants having used up certain water for irrigation of their fields which the deceased and his brother thought they were entitled to. There is no evidence to show how the actual fight commenced. The appellants, although bearing marks of injuries, denied having been anywhere near the place at the time. The brother of the deceased Harnam Singh, although hurt, states that he arrived after the affair was over and knew nothing about it. Thus, all that has been shown is that over a trivial matter the appellants, and it is said another brother of theirs named Urjan Singh who is absconding, had a fight with the deceased Prem Singh and Harnam Singh, all the parties being armed with kahis which they all used, taking care, however, to use the blunt portions. Dr. Nand Lal did not attempt to urge that his clients were not responsible for the injuries received by Prem Singh. He, however, contended that on the finding arrived at by the Court below, the offence is not one under section 204 but under section 325. According to the medical evidence Prem Singh received two injuries both of them on the head. One of these proved fatal and the other, according to the medical evidence, would not have proved fatal. Which of the two appellants struck the fatal blow it is impossible to decide. Agra v. Emperor (1) is, therefore, in point and I consider that the offence committed by the appellants falls under section 325, Indian Penal Code, and hold accordingly.

Next, Dr. Nand Lal contended that it should be presumed that the appellants were acting in self-defence and that the Court could give effect to the right of private defence even though self-defence was not specially pleaded. In support of this the learned Counsel cited In re Pachai Gounden (2). I have no doubt that if on the record a right of private defence can be clearly raised the Court would give effect to it, even although not pleaded by the person accused. In the present case, however, it seems to me that I am asked to presume too much. According to the evidence the appellants were accompanied and assisted by their brother—thus the numbers were three to two. That Harnam Singh and Prem Singh used abusive language would, in the circumstances, be natural, but that they would attack the appellants and Arjan Singh is another matter. It seems to me far more likely that the appellants were actually the assailants and I am, therefore, not prepared to raise the presumption that Dr. Nand Lal wants me to. I hold that the appellants are guilty of an offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. In the circumstances, however, I think the sentences are excessive, both parties were similarly armed and both parties were injured, while unfortunately Prem Singh received an injury on the head which resulted in his death. I think, therefore, that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment will suffice. I accordingly reduce the term of imprisonment to one or two years in each case. The sentences of fine and the imprisonment in default will stand as also will the order as to payment of the fines to the sons of the deceased on the fines being recovered.

It is argued that it does not constitute the offence of criminal breach of trust (section 406) for which the petitioner has been convicted, for the reason that the promissory-notes were his own.

I am not prepared to hold that it would be impossible under any circumstances for a person to commit criminal breach of trust in respect of his own property. The possession of the promissory-notes, even without endorsement in the hands of the person with whom they were pledged, was of some value to the complainant as it gave him control over the accused and, so long as they remained with him, prevented the accused from using them to discharge the debts due by him to other creditors in preference to him. The complainant thus had some sort of beneficial interest in this property and when he gave the notes to the accused for a definite purpose and the accused dishonestly disposed

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Begusarai under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment each. They preferred an appeal which was admitted on the 11th December 1922. On the 5th January, when the appeal came on for hearing, the petitioners filed a petition for time to get copies of certain documents. This petition was rejected, and thereupon it appears that the appeal was not argued before him; but the learned Additional District Magistrate went through the record and in the order-sheet he made a note to the effect:

Mr. G. Lakshmanna, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Venkatachala Sastri, for Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The accused is the proprietor of a rice-mill in Bezwada. He was convicted under the Municipal Act, Madras Act V of 1920, under sections 199, 216 and 250 read with section 317 and sentenced to fines of various amounts for the offences.

On appeal, the Appellate Magistrate, holding that it was unnecessary to punish him for an offence under section 199 of the Act, he being liable to be punished under section 250 of the Act, as the two offences really overlapped, acquitted him of the offence under section 199 and remitted him the fine on that charge, but confirmed his conviction under the other two sections, 216 and 250. It is argued in revision that no offence under section 250 has been made out and that he ought to be acquitted under that section.

As I understand the findings of the lower Court, part of the accused's rice-mill where the Sheller Machinery was installed was burnt down some time ago and what he did was to put up a brick building to install the old Sheller Machinery in it and he did so without obtaining the permission of the Municipal Chairman under section 199, and, further, in spite of a notice sent to him by the Chairman he carried on his work and completed it. The Machinery that was installed in the new room was, as I understand, the old Sheller Machinery that was in the Factory itself.

Section 250 of the Act, it seems to me, cannot well be applied to this case. For, the accused cannot be said to have established any Factory, or installed any new machinery in any Factory; he was not bound to apply in writing to the Council for permission to put in the old Sheller Machinery which was already in the Factory, in the room newly built. Section 250 only applies when a person intends for the first time to construct or establish any Factory, workshop or workplace in which it is proposed to employ steam-power, water-power or other mechanical power or electric power.

But it does not apply to a case like this where the machinery has not been interfered with, only the shed in which the machinery was kept has been altered by changing the original room into a new room of brick and mortar. The accused, therefore, must, I think, be acquitted on the charge under section 250. Section 250 itself expressly exempts the application of section 197 in clause (5) and accused was, therefore, clearly punishable for having put up the brick building that he did without the sanction of the Municipal Chairman. He has, however, been acquitted of this offence and as no steps have been taken to have that acquittal set aside, I regret I cannot interfere with the acquittal in revision. That acquittal, therefore, must stand. There can be no doubt whatever of his guilt under section 216 read with section 317, for he clearly disobeyed the Chairman's notice by constructing this new building without his permission. That being so, the conviction under sections 216 and 317 must be confirmed. In the result, the fine that has been imposed upon him under sections 250 and 317 must be remitted, but the fine under sections 216 and 317, viz., Rs. 25 or simple imprisonment for five days in default must be confirmed.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was fined Rs. 50 on conviction under section 379 of the Indian Penal Code on a charge of having removed the crops belonging to Peary Dusadh on the 24th March 1922. It appears that the lands are diara lands and the complainant and the accused have fields adjoining each other. As there was no dividing line an Amin was brought who demarcated the boundaries on the 23rd March. The case for the prosecution is that on the following day the accused removed some crops from the complainant's side of the line. The contention on behalf of the petitioner is that there is a distinction between the lands and the crops grown thereon and although the land on which the crops are alleged to have been grown by the complainant had been awarded to him the accused may have been under the belief that he was entitled to the crops. The distinction is obvious and it seems to me that the conviction in this case has rested merely on the facts that a demarcation had taken place and that the land on which the crop was grown had been awarded to the complainant. But it is not clear how on these facts the accused was guilty of theft in removing the crops if he removed them under the impression that the crops were sown by him and that he was entitled to them. In fact, the Magistrate expressly says that it may be that the accused may have been under the impression that he sowed that disputed portion and was, therefore, entitled to remove the crops thereon. He goes on to say that this plea could have been put forward with some force if there had been no demarcation on the 23rd March. But how the demarcation affects this question I have not been able to understand. In my opinion, there is no reason on the record for holding that the accused was not acting bona fide in taking the crops in dispute although the demarcation line had been given against him. The application is allowed and the conviction and the

(2)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 323—Order requiring security on conviction—Finding as to breach of peace whether necessary—"Other offence involving breach of the peace," meaning of.*

In order to give jurisdiction to a Court to take action under section 106 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is not necessary that the Court should record a finding that a breach of the peace was actually caused. If the offence of which the accused is convicted is one which does not of itself necessarily involve a breach of the peace such as criminal trespass, mischief or unlawful assembly, it is proper that the Court should make it clear in its order that a breach of the peace was committed, but where the offence is one which implies the use of violence it is unnecessary to say more.

The expression "other offences involving a breach of the peace" in section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code embraces all offences ejusdem generis with the offences of assault and rioting mentioned in the section.

Where the offence of voluntarily causing hurt includes an assault on the person to whom the hurt has been caused, the Court has jurisdiction to pass an order under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code when convicting the accused.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Court of Session of the Tinnevely Division, in Case No. 51 of the Calendar for 1922.

Mr. F. S. Vaz, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The only question argued at the hearing of this is, whether the order under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, requiring the accused to give security to keep the peace is a legal order. It is argued (1) that the offence of voluntarily causing hurt (section 323, Indian Penal KANMA KONDIAH, In re.

Code) is not one of those specified in section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, and does not of itself necessarily involve a breach of the peace; (2) that there ought to be a finding by the Sessions Judge that a breach of the peace was actually caused, before the Court made the order under this section.

On the first point, I find that the accused's act included an assault on the prosecution 9th witness in a public place, and assault is one of the offences specified in section 106. The expression "other offences involving a breach of the peace" would embrace offences ejusdem generis with the offences of assault and rioting which are specified in the section. It is only because the accused's act was more serious than one of petty assault that they were not convicted of that minor offence.

But the circumstances spoken to by the witnesses as those in which hurt was caused to prosecution 9th witness were such that there can be no doubt that there was a breach of the peace on that occasion.

On the second point, I do not think it is necessary that the lower Court should record a finding that a breach of the peace, was involved in order to invest itself with power to make an order under section 105 (1), Criminal Procedure Code.

If the offence of which the accused were convicted was one which did not itself necessarily involve a breach of the peace such as criminal trespass, mischief, or unlawful assembly, it would be proper that the Magistrate or Judge should in his order make it clear that a breach of the peace was committed.

But the section does not require such a finding to be recorded, and when the offence of which the accused is convicted is one which implies the use of violence, it would be superfluous to say more. The Judge has recorded his opinion that it is necessary in this case to require the convicted persons to execute a bond for keeping the peace, and that is all that the section in terms demands.

The order will, therefore, stand. The appeal is dismissed.

Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 24—Rescuing Cattle—Driving cattle away by shouts and cries—Force or violence, whether necessary.

Driving cattle away by shouts and cries constitutes "rescuing" them within the meaning of section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act.

Semble:—The word "rescue" does not necessarily imply the use of force or violence.

Inducing an animal to move may even amount to using force.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Nellore, in his Letter No. 10318—22 C. 1 dated 11th October 1922.

The Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown.

ORDER.—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate's opinion that driving cattle by shouts and cries does not constitute "rescuing" them under section 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act is erroneous. Inducing an animal to move may even amount to using "force" (see definition in section 349, Indian Penal Code, and illustration (h) to that section), so that, even if the Magistrate is right in saying that the word "rescue" implies the use of force or violence, it does not follow that there was no force used in this case.

The reasons given for acquitting the accused are unsound, the acquittal is set aside, and the appeal must be re-heard and disposed of according to law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 134, 135, 138, 439—Obstruction to public way—Question of title—Duty of Magistrate—Revision—Mode of service of notice—"Forthwith", in s. 138, meaning of.

Under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code the duty of determining whether the site of an obstruction is a public place or a public way is cast on the Magistrate in the first instance, and under no circumstances can it be left to the Jury. If the Magistrate finds, on the parties appearing before him to show cause against the conditional order, that a question of title to the locus in quo is involved, he must refuse to act in that particular case unless he comes to the conclusion that the claim of title is not bona fide; and unless he finds that the place or way, as the case may be, is public, he has no power to proceed with the investigation. Where the question as to the public nature or private ownership of the locus of an obstruction is left to a Jury under Chapter X of the Criminal Procedure Code, the order of the Magistrate referring the determination of such a question to the Jury is bad and should be quashed. [p. 620, col. 2.]

Petition under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Multan, dated the 14th November 1922, refusing to stay proceedings in the case,—King-Emperor v. Khushi Ram and others, pending in the Court of District Magistrate, Multan.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondant.

JUDGMENT.

Scott-Smith, J.—On the 3rd and 4th September 1922, on the occasion of the Moharram Festival there were serious riots in the City of Multan between the Muhammadans and Hindus. Shortly afterwards, the Hindus living in certain Mohallas erected obstructions with the object of making gateways at the entrances to the lanes in which they lived in order, it is said, that they might prevent Muhammadans coming in and attacking them. The Secretary, Municipal Committee, reported the erection of these obstructions to the District Magistrate who, on the 13th October 1922, passed conditional orders, under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, addressed to the residents of the Mohallas, where the obstruction had been made, directing them to remove them before the 1st November 1922 or to appear before him on the 15th October to take legal proceedings for the cancellation or revision of the orders. The order in each case begins as follows "it has been reported to me and I have satisfied myself by personal inspection that in the Mohallas * * * unlawful obstructions have been built on the public way which is open to the use of the public and that by such obstruction inconvenience is caused to the public * * *."

On the 25th October 1922 certain of the Mohalladars, along with Vakils representing the residents of the 17 Mohallas in regard to which orders had been issued, appeared before the District Magistrate and applied under section 135, Criminal Procedure Code, for the appointment of a Jury. Upon this the Magistrate fixed five as the number of the Jury and asked the objectors to nominate two Jurors and they nominated two accordingly. The Magistrate said that he would himself appoint the other members of the Jury on the 27th October, Counsel asked him that, if possible, the foreman and the two remaining Jurors, should be Europeans and, in accordance with their request, three Europeans were appointed on the 27th October, and the Jury was duly constituted.

KHUSHI RAM V. EMPEROR.

The Magistrate gave certain orders as regards the inspection of the spot by the Jury and, under section 138 of the Code, fixed November the 10th as the date on which they should deliver their verdict. He also revised his original provisional order and fixed the 15th November as the date before which the obstructions were to be removed. He then added the following:—"Counsel admit that the obstructions have been built by their clients without the permission of the Municipal Committee. They wish to produce evidence in this and similar cases:—

(1) that the Mohallas concerned are occupied by Hindus only;

(2) that the obstructions do not cause inconvenience to any one;

(3) that in particular cases, the obstructions are not in a public way, and

(4) that in particular cases they are necessary for the protection of religious places.

He went on to say that as the Municipal Committee of Multan was interested in these four issues, notice would issue to it that the proceedings were in progress and the Committee would have the opportunity of deputing a servant or representative to watch the proceedings before the Jury should it wish to do so. The Jury returned their verdict on the 9th November and, in accordance therewith, the Magistrate cancelled his order in four cases and in 13 cases made it absolute. In these 13 cases petitions for revision have been filed in this Court and we have heard Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri on behalf of the petitioners and the Assistant Legal Remembrancer for the Crown.

The first point urged by Mr. Puri on behalf of the petitioners is that, when the District Magistrate came to know that his clients put forward a claim that the property on which the obstructions were built was their private property, or that it was not a public way, it was his duty to enquire into the matter himself and that he could not leave it to a Jury. In support of this contention he refers to the case of Dharam Mandal v. Gossain Das Mandal (1) where it was held that "it is the duty of the Magistrate in a proceeding in respect of an obstruction to a foot-path under Chapter X of the Criiminal Procedure Code, before referring the matter to the Jury to decide himself whether or not the claim is made in good faith, and whether the pathway is a public one or not, and it is only on deciding that there was no such claim that any matter can be referred to the Jury." The same view was taken in Dularam Deb v. Baishnab Charan Deb (2) where it was pointed out that "it is not competent to the Magistrate to leave to the Jury the decision of the question whether a pathway is a public or not and whether the claim of a private pathway set up is bona fide or not." I entirely agree with these authorities.

The objection of Counsel is based on the fact that the District Magistrate in his final order noted that Counsel said that they wished to produce evidence that, in particular cases, the obstructions were not on any public way and that this showed that the objectors set up a claim to the effect that the places on which the obstructions were raised were not in every case public ways.

Now, it was the duty of the persons who appeared in answer to the original order, either to show cause against the order or to apply for the appointment of a Jury under section 135, Criminal Procedure Code. When they appeared they did not attempt to show cause against the orders but immediately applied that a Jury should be appointed. Even after the Jury had been appointed, their Counsel did not specify the particular cases in which the objectors wished to show cause that the obstructions were not on a public way. It appears, moreover, from the subsequent proceedings that in only one case, that of Mohalla Nawan Shahr, was any claim put forward to the effect that the obstructions were on private property. In that case, as well as in three others, the District Magistrate cancelled his conditional order. In none of the cases which are before us was any claim put forward that the obstruction was on private property, but evidence was led on behalf of the objectors to the effect that the places were not thoroughfares, that they were only used by the inhabitants of the Mohallas or the persons visiting them on business, that the inhabitants were entirely Hindus and that their places of worship were included in the Mohallas. The minority of the Jury found in accordance with this evidence and were of opinion that, in these circumstances, no inconvenience was caused to the general public and that, therefore, no order for the removal of the obstructions should be passed. On behalf of the Crown evidence was led to prove that the places were public ways and that inconvenience was caused to the public. It seems to me that the real point before the Jury was, whether the places were public ways or not, and this was a point which the Magistrate should himself have decided. It is quite clear from the order of the District Magistrate of the 27th October 1922 that it was brought to his notice that in certain cases evidence was intended to be produced that the obstructions were not on a public way. He, therefore, should not have left it open to the Jury to enquire into any cases in which this claim was put forward. He should, in my opinion, have called upon the parties to specify the particular cases in which they intended to lead such evidence, and should then have himself disposed of the question. I notice that in his final order of the 10th November the District Magistrate says, "Practically all of them (i. e., the obstructions) including those in which I have taken no action under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, were built on the public way; and in all cases now under consideration the Municipal Committee claim that they were built on the public way." This shows that, even at the time of his final order, the District Magistrate had not reached a finding as to which obstructions were and which were not on the public way. The words "practically all" make this clear."

The next objection raised by Mr. Puri was that the order passed by the District Magistrate was not served on the persons against whom it was made within the meaning of section 134 of the Code. He urges that the names of the persons affected should have been given in the order and that they should have been served personally in the manner provided for the service of summonses in section 69 to 72 of the Code. The word 'person' includes any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not; see the definition in section 21 of the Indian Penal Code and also in the General Clauses Act. It can, therefore, I consider, include all the male adults residents in a certain Mohalla. In the present case the order was served on 8 or 10 of the principal residents of each Mohalla and by sticking it up in conspicuous places in the Mohallas, and the fact that a number of persons appeared in each case and instructed Counsel to urge their objections shows that they were duly informed. It has been held that, when the order is communicated to those concerned, it is immaterial that the method in which it was served on them is not strictly in accordance with the provisions of section 134 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Nur Jan v. Queen-Empress (3).

The third point raised was, that the appointment of the Jury was bad because two of the Jurors were appointed on the 25th October and the remainder on the 27th. All that section 138 lays down as regards the appointment of a Jury is that the Magistrate shall forthwith appoint a Jury consisting of an uneven number of persons and so on. The word 'forthwith' must be interpreted, in my opinion, in a reasonable way. I think it merely means that the Magistrate shall appoint a Jury as soon as he reasonably can. In the present case he appointed at once the two nominees of the objectors and had to consider whom he should appoint as the remaining three members. On behalf of the objectors he was especially asked if possible to appoint three Europeans and he had to ascertain who would be willing to act. The remaining three were appointed within two days and, in my opinion, there was no unreasonable delay and the terms of the section were substantially complied with.

Mr. Puri also adds that the question whether there was an obstruction or not was not one for the Jury to decide. This question was not, however, left for the Jury at all. The District Magistrate has noted on the record that the existence of the obstructions was admitted. There is, therefore, no force in this objection.

The first objection has, however, in my opinion, force. The District Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in not deciding but leaving to the Jury the question whether the obstructions or any of them were on a public way, and I would, therefore, set aside his orders in all the cases before us, leaving him if so advised to take fresh proceedings.

Florde, J.—I concur.

There are two questions arising for determination in this case. The first is, whether certain orders made by the Magistrate under the special powers conferred upon him by Chapter X, section 133 to 143 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are valid; and the second is, whether, if the orders are not valid, this Court should interfere in the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction to set these orders aside.

The orders which are impugned are dated, respectively, the 27th October and the 10th of November 1922. The first of these purports to be made under the provisions of section 138 and the second under section 139 of the Code.

The order of the 27th October, after appointing the three members of the Jury whom the Magistrate has power to appoint, and fixing dates for the Jury to inspect the various sites and consider the matters they had to determine, proceeds as follows: "Counsel admit that the obstructions have been built by their clients without the permission of the Municipal Committee. They wish to produce evidence in this and similar cases that:—

(1) the Mohallas concerned are occupied by Hindus only;

(2) that the obstructions do not cause inconvenience to any one;

(3) that in particular cases the obstructions are not on a public way; and

(4) that in particular cases they are necessary for the protection of religious places.

The order then concludes by stating that "Since the Municipal Committee, Multan, is interested in the above issues notice will issue to it that these proceedings are in progress and it will be given the opportunity of deputing a servant or representative to watch the proceedings before the Jury should it wish to do so."

Now, this order is objected to on two grounds; firstly, that it leaves it to the Jury to determine whether or not some of the obstructions are in a public way; and, secondly, that it is vague and indefinite as it does not specify in what particular cases that issue is left to the Jury.

In my opinion both these objections are sound. The duty of determining whether the site of the obstructions is a public place or a public way is cast by Statute on the Magistrate in the first instance, and under no circumstances can it be left to the Jury. If the Magistrate finds, on the parties appearing before him to show cause against the conditional order, that a question of title to the locus in quo is involved, he must refuse to act in the particular case unless he comes to the conclusion that the claim of title is not bona fide. Further, unless he finds that the place or the way, as the case may be, is public, he has no power to proceed with the investigation. In the present case it is apparent on the face of the order itself that this question which goes to the root of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, has been wrongly left to the Jury.

On this ground alone the order is bad.

The same objections applied to the order of the 10th November in referring to the obstructions complained of the orders reads as follows:—"Practically all of them, including those in which I have taken no action under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, are built on the public way; and in all cases, now under consideration the Municipal Committee claim that they are built on the public way." Here, again, it appears that even after the Jury have investigated the question as to whether or not the obstructions are on a public way, the order infers that some are not, and as in the case of the former order, it has the added defect of ambiguity, inasmuch as it does not specify which of them are and which are not so built. It has been urged by Counsel for the Crown that, even if the orders are bad, this Court should not interfere as the issue of title left to the Jury was so left at the instance of the objectors themselves. I cannot accept that view.

The Courts in India have by a series of decisions made it clear that, where questions as to the public nature or private ownership of the locus of an obstruction are left to a Jury, the order of the Magistrate referring the determination of such a question to the Jury is bad and should be quashed. [In the matter of the petition of Chundermath, Sen (4), Matuk Dhari Tewari v. Hari Madhab Das (5), Nasaruddi v. Akiluddi (6), Dularam Deb v. Baishnab Charan Deb (2) and Churaman v. Emperor (7). This has been held even in cases where the defect in the proceedings does not appear, that is, where a want or an excess of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceedings themselves; or where the order of the Magistrate is itself indefinite or ambiguous, the objection to allowing an order in such a case to stand is far stronger.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that this Court has no alternative but to quash the two orders objected to.

of the District Magistrate, Jhang, dated the 13th February 1922, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Jhang, dated the 6th December 1921, restoring the possession of the disputed land to the complainant under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioners.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This petition for revision has arisen out of certain proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, in connection with some agricultural land situate in village Gilawala in the District of Jhang.

The proceedings were instituted by Bawa Duni Chand who alleged that he had been in possession of the lands in question since 1904, and that Bahawala and others, kamins of the village, had forcibly taken possession of the same on the 14th March 1921.

On the 21st March 1921 the Magistrate passed the order contemplated by Section 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, and called on the parties to file their written statements and produce evidence.

On the 6th December 1921 the Magistrate passed the final order in the case.

He held that the complainant had been in continuous possession of the land till the 14th March 1921 when he had been forcibly dispossessed by Bahawala and his companions. He, therefore, acting under the first proviso to clause (4) of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, treated the complainant as if he had been in possession at the date of the order calling for written statements, i. e., 21st March 1921, and then proceeded as follows:—

“Accordingly, under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, I direct that the complainants’ possession of the disputed land be restored, and further forbid any interference with his possession till he is evicted in due course of law.”

The kamins filed a petition for revision in the Court of the District Magistrate which was rejected and they have now come up to this Court through Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda. For the respondent I have heard Dr. Gokal Chand Narang.

The first point raised was, that the whole of the proceedings were vitiated by the omission to give the notice to the petitioners that is required by section 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. A reference to the record shows that on the 6th May 1921 the Magistrate recorded an order in which it is specifically set out that notice to the parties had been issued in accordance with law. I, therefore, hold that there is no force in this objection. It was then contended that the order directing that "the complainant's possession of the disputed land be restored" was bad inasmuch as the Magistrate had no power to make such an order.

In this connection, my attention was drawn to Kaku v. Harnaman (1), Emperor v. Rameshar (2), Tulshi Ram v. Abrar Ahmad (3) and Moore v. Monoranjan Guha (4). A reference to these authorities shows that they are in point and in them it is clearly laid down that, in proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order restoration of possession.

The section (145) itself contains no provision to the effect that a party in whose favour the order is made is to be put into possession nor does this section provide any machinery by which the successful party can have his possession restored by the Court. All that the Magistrate is empowered to do is to declare that he is entitled to possession.

At the same time, if a party is declared to be entitled to possession, and the world at large is forbidden to disturb his possession, he would be entitled to take possession and no one would have any right to interfere with his doing so. It follows, therefore, that, though the order of the Magistrate in this case is technically erroneous, the ultimate result is practically the same. The order being wrong, however, must be amended, and I accordingly eliminate the words directing restoration and substitute therefor a declaration that the complainant is entitled to possession. In all other respects the order will stand.

Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We have no hesitation in finding that the conviction of the accused in this case was vitiated by the joinder of the charges for more than three offences at one trial. The third charge related to two false entries EE—12 and EE—9, and these entries were concerned with separate transactions by which the accused took out two advances of Rs. 28,700 and Rs. 1,950, respectively, on two separate deposits of areca, of which 525 maunds of old areca and 520 maunds of new areca were not received. These constitute, in our opinion, two separate offences, for, as was pointed out in Queen Empress v. Mati Lal Lehiri (1), which was followed in another decision of the same Court in Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (2) each false entry which amounts to an act of falsification constitutes a separate offence, although a number of false entries might be proved to cover one defalcation.

In this instance under the third charge there were two acts of defalcation covered by two false entries and the only thing to connect them together was the fact that the goods were received on the same day from the same depositor. There were, besides this third charge, two other charges. The joinder of more than three charges at a single trial is fatal to the trial as laid down in Subrahmaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (3) and the conviction is, therefore, quashed and the accused is acquitted. We do not consider that there should be re-trial of the accused on the present charges.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 156 OF 1922.
May 12, 1922.

Present:—Sir Shadi Lal, Kt., Chief Justice.
THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF LAHORE—PETITIONER

versus

RATTAN CHAND—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 250 —"Person," meaning of—Municipal Committee, whether can be directed to pay compensation.

The word "person" in section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code includes not only a natural person but also a juristic person, for instance, a Municipal Committee.

A Municipal Committee is, therefore, not exempt from the operation of section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Lahore, with his No. 106 of 25th January 1922.

FACTS.—It is alleged that the accused (Rattan Chand) had been depositing certain articles on the foot path and the Municipal Committee of Lahore directed the prosecution of Rattan Chand for an offence under section 173 of Act III of 1911. The Magistrate discharged the accused and ordered the Municipal Committee to pay Rs. 15 as compensation to the accused under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code.

GROUND.—This is an application to set aside the order passed by the Magistrate, under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, against the Municipal Committee, Lahore.

The facts are that the Municipal Committee of Lahore, directed the prosecution of a man called Rattan Chand, for an offence under section 173 of Act III of 1911. The Magistrate discharged the accused and ordered the Municipal Committee to pay Rs. 15 as compensation to the accused under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code. That section lays down that a Magistrate may direct the person upon whose complaint and information the accusation was made to pay compensation to the accused. In my opinion, a Municipal Committee cannot be described as a person and, therefore, the order of the Magistrate was illegal.

I forward the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the order be set aside.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The Magistrate, while acquitting the accused of an offence under section 173 of the Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), has directed the Municipal Committee, upon whose complaint the accusation was made, to pay Rs. 15 as compensation to the accused. The Sessions Judge is, however, of opinion that a Municipal Committee cannot be described as a "person" within the meaning of section 250, Criminal Procedure Code; and he has accordingly reported the case under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, for the order of this Court.

The learned Sessions Judge is evidently under the impression that the expression "person" denotes only a natural person; but this is clearly a wrong view of the law. The expression includes not only a natural person but also a juristic person. Indeed, section 3 (39) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) makes it perfectly clear that the word "person" includes "any company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not."

I must, therefore, hold that the Municipal Committee is not exempt from the operation of section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the order of the Trial Court is not open to any legal objection.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 427 OF 1922.

(CASE REFERRED NO. 40 OF 1922.)

November 1, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wallace.

In re PUNIYA SYAMALO—ACCUSED.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), s. 221—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435, 439—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. V., C. 61), s. 107—Magistrate acting under s. 221, Local Boards Act, whether "inferior Criminal Court"—Revision—Order directing payment of fees—Fine, whether can be imposed.

A Magistrate taking action under section 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 is an "inferior Criminal Court" within the meaning of section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and an order made by him under section 221 is subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code or section 107 of the Government of India Act.

Under section 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 the imposition of a fine in addition to directing the payment of the fees due is illegal.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Sessions Judge of Ganjam, at Berhampore, in his letter dated 24th April 1922.

Mr. Vaz, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—This is a case referred by the Sessions Judge of Ganjam. The Town Sub-Magistrate of Berhampore purporting to act under section 221 of Act XIV of 1920 (Madras Local Boards Act) not only directed a toll gate lessee to pay up fees due from him to the Ganjam District Board, but fined him Rs. 25 as well. The Sessions Judge is of opinion that the levy of fine is illegal and I quite agree with him.

The point of some difficulty raised is, whether this Court, sitting in the exercise of its powers of criminal revision, has authority to deal with such a case; in other words, whether the Magistrate is, when he takes action under section 221 of Act XIV of 1920; an inferior criminal Court within the meaning of section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The word "Magistrate" is not defined in Act XIV of 1920, consequently, I must fall back on the definition in the Madras General Clauses Act, viz., "any person exercising all or any of the powers of a Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure." The word "warrant" is also not defined in Act XIV, of 1920, but I think it can have no other meaning than a warrant for the collection of a fine as if in a criminal case, such as the Magistrate would ordinarily issue under section 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the collection of a fine in a criminal case. Otherwise, the Local Boards Act provides no machinery by which the "warrant" issued under section 221 is to be carried out.

Section 221, therefore, has to be read as if the Magistrate had fined the defaulter for the amount due to the Local Board and issued a warrant under section 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for its collection, and the collection of the fine is not by any method of execution of a civil order or decree, but by the method for the collection of a fine in a criminal case.

In this view, I think it must be inferred that the Magistrate, in acting under section 221 of the Local Boards Act, is acting as a Criminal Court, and that his orders thereunder are, therefore, subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court.

In imposing a fine in addition to the recovery of the fees due, the Magistrate was clearly acting beyond the jurisdiction conferred on him by section 221, Local Boards Act. If the power in this Court to set aside such an order made without jurisdiction is not conferred by section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, this Court can interfere under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate, so far as it relates to the imposition of the fine and the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 18th September 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Bettiah, dated the 27th March 1923, in Execution Case No. 705 of 1921.

Mr. A. P. Upadhyaya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, against an order of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur reversing the decision of the Munsif of Bettiah and setting aside the sale.

Two points are urged in support of the application. The first is that, as there is no allegation of fraud against the auction-purchaser, the sale cannot be set aside. Reference is made to the decision in Mohesh

Chunder Bagchee v. Dwarka Nath Moitra (1). All that was said in that case was that, however fraudulent the conduct of the plaintiff may have been, if the purchaser is not implicated in the fraud, the validity of the sale would not be affected by the badness of the decree under which the sale took place. There is no question of the decree being vacated in the present instance. We are now concerned with the question of setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code. Now, it is plain from the terms of that rule which empowers the Court to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it, that it is not necessary that fraud should be alleged against the auction-purchaser who had no existence at the time of publishing or conducting the sale, and it will seldom be possible. There is also direct authority in the decision in Bipin Bihari Bejali v. Kanti Chandra Mandal (2), that a sale in execution may be annulled on the ground of fraud, even if it were not proved that the auction-purchaser had been a party to the fraud.

The second ground taken is that there is no allegation or proof that the judgment-debtor was kept out of knowledge of his right to make the application by any fraud of the decree-holder and, consequently, section 18 of the Limitation Act cannot apply, and unless section 18 does apply, the application is out of time because it was not made until the 16th December 1921, whereas the sale took place on the 15th September 1921. Now, the finding of the District Judge is, that there was a gross under-valuation in the sale-proclamation where the property, which was probably worth Rs. 1,400, was valued at Rs. 80 only. He further found that everything pointed to the conclusion that the processes were fraudulently suppressed by the landlord's servants and the judgment-debtors were kept in the dark about the sale until it was over, and that they made their application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code when they came to know of the sale owing to the auction-purchaser applying for delivery of possession. The learned District Judge found that they were kept in the dark by fraud and so their application was not barred by limitation. In support of his argument, the learned Vakil referred to Kailash Chandra Halder v. Bissonath Paramanic (3), Babu Das Narayana Singh v. Mir Muhammad Yusuf, (4), Abubaker Sahib v. Mohidin Saheb (5) and Pasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (6). The principle, however, has been laid down by the Judicial Committee in Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (7) and it is that, in order to make limitation operate when a fraud has been committed by one who has obtained property thereby it is for him to show that the injured complainant had had clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud at a time which is too remote for the suit to be brought. It seems clear that the party guilty of fraud must show that the continuing effects of the fraud have been removed. The judgment-debtors were kept from knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holder and, consequently, must also have been kept from knowledge of their right to apply to set the sale aside so long as that fraud continued and its effect was not removed. There is direct authority on this point in Jolindra Mohun Rai Chowdhury v. Brojendra Kumar Dalla Munshi (8). It is true that the under-valuation would not have this effect and mere non-publication of the notices would also not have this effect; but the finding is that there was a fraudulent suppression of service, and unless the effect of that fraud is removed, the judgment-debtors were entitled to the benefit of section 18 of the Limitation Act.

(2) 18 Ind. Cas. 715.

SHIDDAPPA v. PANDURANG VASUDEV.

In my opinion, therefore, both grounds of this application fail and it must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow—Mortgage by widow without necessity—Improvements by mortgagee—Mortgagee, whether entitled to compensation.

Where a Hindu widow mortgages property without necessity agreeing that the mortgagee should re-build a shop standing on the property which, at the time of the mortgage, was in a ruinous condition, and the mortgagee re-builds the shop, the reversioner of the widow cannot seek to obtain possession of the property without making compensation to the mortgagee, or to his successor. The mortgagee, at any rate, is entitled to remove what he has placed on the property at his own expense.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is, whether this case is exactly similar to the case of Vrijbhukandas Dwarkadas v. Dayaram Jadavji (1), so that the plaintiff-reversioner could be held entitled to recover the property in the condition in which it was when the widow died. The Trial Court directed that the plaintiff should recover possession of the land on which the shop in suit stood, with liberty to defendants forthwith to commence to remove their building, the removal to be completed within one year from the date of the order.

The decision was reversed by the Appellate Judge who directed the plaintiff to recover possession of the shop as it stood. The widow, when she mortgaged the property without necessity, agreed that the mortgagee should practically re-build the shop, which, at the time of the mortgage, was in a ruinous condition. It seems to us difficult to see how, under the principles of Hindu Law, or any principles of equity, the reversioner can seek to get possession of the property, with the shop standing on it, without making any compensation to the person who built the shop or to his successor. It seems to us that the facts in Vrijbhukandas Dwarkadas v. Dayaram Jadavji (1) are entirely different, and that the question which we have to decide here is whether, under general principles, the mortgagee should lose the benefits of the money he spent on the building with the consent of the widow, or whether the reversioners are entitled to the whole of the benefit. Clearly, if there had been a sale by the widow, which would be voidable against the reversioner, the reversioner would be bound to pay the purchaser the amount by which the value of the property had been enhanced by improvements effected by him. That was decided in Kidar Nath v. Mathu Mal (2). There the respondent on the death of a Hindu widow brought a suit as the next heir of her husband to set aside an alienation made by the widow in favour of the appellant. The Chief Court allowed the alienee Rs. 1,400 which represented half the expenditure by him on the property. The appellant contended that he was entitled to what he had spent. The Privy Council decided that that was not the right principle on which to assess the amount payable to the alienees as compensation, as in such cases it should always be borne in mind that the amount of the expenditure made had occasionally very little to do with the real issue, and that that issue was, to what extent had enhancement of the subject-matter been produced.

That is the issue and we cannot agree with the contention of Mr. Thakor, that the judgment of the Privy Council does not uphold the principle that compensation to an alienee from a Hindu widow may be awarded in certain circumstances.

In the next place, we cannot see how the position of the mortgagee who improves the property with consent of the widow can be distinguished, except that the position of the mortgagee who improves the property mortgaged to him is not exactly the same as the position of a person who thinks he has got an absolute title to the property by sale, still, there is equity in favour of the mortgagee. The only question to our mind is, to what extent has that equity been established.

If the successful reversioner is not prepared to compensate either wholly or in part the mortgagee for what he has spent on the property, then we think the mortgagee is entitled to remove what he has placed on the property at his own expense. We think, therefore, that the decree of the Trial Court was the proper one to make in this case, and the decree must be restored with costs in this Court and the Court below.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—The suit was brought to recover certain lands, known as Kunnathupadam lands on the ground that they belong in jenm to the Kurichimalai Deva-swom represented by the first plaintiff; that they were granted to the first defendant on condition of rendering Kazhagam service in the temple; that he has ceased to render Kazhagam service and hence the lands are liable to be resumed; that the first defendant's right in the lands was sold in execution of a decree (Original Suit No. 25 of 1915) and purchased by the second and third defendants, and that the first defendant though called upon to surrender the lands failed to do so.

The defendants plead that the lands were not held on condition of rendering Kazhagam service and were not resumable.

I will now refer to the previous litigations bearing on the tenure under which the suit-lands were held. In 1851 the predecessor-in-title of the first plaintiff sued the predecessor-in-title of the first defendant for possession of the same lands on practically the same allegations; but the suit was compromised, Exhibit B. was the petition of compromise in which it was stated that "the lands and paramba involved in the above suit had been given away long time back as offering (Vazhipaddu) and as Uruliyilvadakam for the Kurichimala Thevar (deity) to the Kurichimala Variyam of the first and third to sixth defendants who are the Karaima Kazhagam holders of the temple." It then proceeds to state that first plaintiff executed a deed of consent "to the effect that the said properties may be held and enjoyed on Saswatham right after conducting the offerings (Vazhipadu) in future." The deed referred to in this petition is Exhibit A, the operative words in which are, "you are to hold the said properties for ever as Swastham as in the past and to enjoy the same conducting Vazhipadu to the deity." In my opinion the tenure on which the suit-lands are held depends on a construction of Exhibit A.

In Original Suit No. 501 of 1890, the present first defendant and other members of his tarwad obtained a decree against the then karnavan of the plaintiff's tarwad for wages for Kazhagam service and Original Suit No. 152 of 1892 was filed by the junior members of the plaintiff's tarwad for declaring that as the defendants held the present suit-lands as wages for Kazhagam service, the decree in Original Suit No. 501 of 1890 was improperly obtained. It was found that the present suit-lands were not held as wages for Kazhagam service but for utilising the income for the nivadyam in the temple. The Courts below, relying on the latter part of this finding and considering that nivadyam is a kind of Kazhagam held that the suit-land is held on condition of performing Kazhagam service and decreed the plaintiff's suit as the first defendants has ceased to perform the services.

In the first place, it is clear that as the real issue in Original Suit No. 152 of 1892 was whether the decree in Original Suit No. 501 of 1890 was properly obtained and the nature of the tenure of the suit-lands arose only incidentally, therefore, the decree in Original Suit No. 152 of 1892 is not res judicata against the plaintiff on the question whether the suit-lands were held for Kazhagam service or not. Still less is it res judicata against defendants on the question whether they were held for any other service. The proper view is thus not to regard the observations in the judgment of Original Suit No. 152 of 1892 as. finally deciding anything regarding the tenure of the suit lands.

One point is obvious from the history of the suit-lands as set forth above, viz., that whatever the defendant had to do in connection with the suit-lands was certainly not Kazhagam. From 1851 onwards, the defendants always denied that the lands had anything to do with Kazhagam service and they always succeeded in this plea. It is significant that neither Exhibit A, or B connects the lands with Kazhagam. Having regard to the terms of Exhibit A (1):—"you are to enjoy the same conducting Vazhipadu to the deity" and to the meaning of the term Vazhipadu in Guntart's Dictionary—"Offering of rice and of which the greater part returns to the donor." It seems to me that the grant was not at all a service-grant. The obligation to make the show of an offering being a nominal obligation seems to be a merely moral one. The burden of proving a resumable tenure is on the grantor: [Lakhamgavda v. Keshav Annaji (1) and the words in Exhibit A (1) are too vague to connote a condition, on breach of which the lands could be resumed. On a construction of Exhibit A (1) the third issue ought to be found against the plaintiff. The second appeal must be allowed, and plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs of appellants throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This application is directed against an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 28th October 1922.

The petitioners were the defendants in a suit filed against them by the opposite party in the Court below. On the 16th of March 1922 the Court came to the conclusion that the Court-fees paid by the plaintiffs upon the plaint were insufficient and the Court directed the plaintiffs to pay the deficit Court-fees on or before the 19th April 1922. On the 19th April 1922 the plaintiffs were unable to comply with the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and they asked for time and the Court gave them time till the 20th of May only. On the 20th of May they again applied for time and the Court gave them time till the 22nd of June. On the 22nd of June the plaintiffs made another application for further time to enable them to pay the deficit Court-fees. The Court declined to accede to their application and rejected their plaint under the provision of O. V I, r. 11 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. Thereafter, the opposite party presented an application under O. IX, r. 9 and section 151 of the Code for restoration of the suit.

It was contended before the Court by the petitioners that the only remedy of the plaintiffs was to apply under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code and that neither O. IX, r. 9, nor section 151 gave any power to the Court to restore the suit after it had rejected the plaint and had signed the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge conceded that an application under O. IX, r. 9 was not maintainable. He also thought that the plaintiffs could not apply under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code. The reason that he gives for this opinion may be stated in the words of the learned Subordinate Judge. It is as follows :

"It is clear from the language of the order of dismissal that the plaint was rejected under the provision of O. VII, r. 11 (c) though it is not clearly stated there. There is no special provision in the Code for an aggrieved party to get an order made under that rule to be considered and reviewed."

Having rejected the contention of the petitioners that the only remedy of the plaintiffs was to apply under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code, the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded to consider whether he could give the plaintiffs any relief under section 151 of the Code. He came to the conclusion that there was power in the Court to restore the suit under section 151 of the Code and that, in the circumstances, he should exercise that power. He accordingly ordered that upon the plaintiffs depositing the deficit Court-fees and paying Rs. 100 as costs to the defendants, the suit would be restored.

In my opinion, there was no power in the learned Subordinate Judge to restore the suit under section 151 of the Code. The order rejecting the plaint under O. VII, r. 11 (c) of the Code operated as a decree, and O. XX, r. 3 provides "that a judgment once signed shall not afterwards be altered or added to save as provided by section 152 or on review." There can be no doubt, in my opinion, that once an order of the Court is perfected, there is absolutely no power in that Court under its inherent jurisdiction either to alter or add to that order, save as provided by section 151 or on review. The order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge must accordingly be set aside.

It is, however, contended by Mr. P. K. Sen on behalf of the opposite party that in coming to the conclusion that an application under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code was not maintainable, the learned Subordinate Judge declined the jurisdiction which was vested in him by law.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed on behalf of the opposite party contends before us that, in point of fact, there was no application under O. XLVII, r. 1, before the Court and that, therefore, we are at liberty to disregard the view of the learned Subordinate Judge expressed on this point. There is, in my opinion, no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge had power to review its order rejecting the petition under O. VII, r. 11 (c). I do not say whether, in the circumstances of the case, the learned Subordinate Judge would have been right in reviewing the order. That point is not before us and it is not right that we should express our opinion on it; but all that we do say is this, that there was complete power in the Court under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code to review the order passed by it in rejecting the plaint under O. VII, r. 11 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. It is quite true that there was no application on behalf of the opposite party asking the Court to deal with the application as an application under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code; but the Court having taken the view that it had no jurisdiction whatever to review its own order in rejecting the plaint, it was plainly impossible for the opposite party to ask the Court to deal with that application as an application for review.

In the circumstances, I think, that the opposite party should have an opportunity to ask the Court to deal with his application as an application for review under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code.

We set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that, upon the opposite party paying the proper Court-fees upon his application as an application for review, the learned Subordinate Judge will proceed to deal with the application of the opposite party as an application for review.

The petitioners are entitled to the costs of this application, hearing fee three gold mchurs.

The learned Subordinate Judge will proceed to deal with this application within a month from the time he receives the record from this Court. If within that time the Court fees are not paid by the opposite party upon the application considered as an application for review, his application will JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for possession of certain property on the basis of a sale-deed from the daughters of one Krishnaji, dated 14th March 1919. There was an agreement that Rs. 2,000 should be paid after the vendee had recovered possession, and that fact alone leads one to think that the parties to the sale-deed were aware that there was some defect in the title. Krishnaji was the last male-holder of the property. He died leaving a widow, Radhabai, who adopted the first defendant on the 20th May 1913. The second defendant was a vendee from the first defendant.

Obviously, if the adoption was good, the plaintiff would have no rights against the first defendant. But the plaintiff contended that the first defendant had no title as the adopted son of Krishnaji, because he had been previously adopted by one Ramchandra Waman Patki. The factum of that adoption was proved. It was also proved, however, that the first defendant was the sister's son of Ramchandra. The parties being Deshastha Brahmins, prima facie the adoption of a sister's son would be invalid. No attempt was made to show that in the community to which the parties belonged, a custom had been established to permit the adoption of a sister's son. That being the case, the fact that the first defendant had gone through the ceremony of adoption purporting to result in his passing into the family of Ramchandra, must be considered as a nullity, and would not operate as a defect against his being validly adopted by Radhabai into the family of Krishnaji.

The question whether an invalid adoption confers any rights in the adoptive family is considered by Mr. Mayne in his 9th Edition of Hindu Law, paragraph 176, and the following paragraphs, and after discussing the cases the conclusion arrived at in paragraph 179 that the view taken by the Madras High Court, that an adoption must either be effectual for all purposes, or a nullity, has the merit of being practical and intelligible while doing substantial justice to all parties. We think, therefore, that there was no obstacle in the way of the first defendant being adopted by Radhabai, and it follows that Krishnaji's daughters then had no title to sell the property to the plaintiff. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Negligence—Duty of person carrying on dangerous operation—Damages, suit for—Volenti non fit injuria, applicability of—Fatal Accidents Act (XIII of 1855), s. 1—Damages, ascertainment of.

If persons choose to carry on dangerous operations, it is their duty, not only to the public but also to their servants to take adequate precautions that those operations shall not cause injury to any person. They ought to exercise ordinary care, caution and skill to prevent an accident happening. The mere fact that an accident has happened is strong evidence, in a case of this kind, that the ordinary care, caution and skill required for preventing the happening of an accident have not been exercised. [p. 633, col. 2.]

A mere warning to persons working in the neighbourhood does not amount to taking sufficient precautions. [p. 633, col. 2.]

For a defence based on the maxim volenti non fit injuria to succeed it is necessary to prove that the person injured knew of the danger, appreciated it and voluntarily took the risk. [p. 633, col. 1.]

A man cannot be said to have voluntarily undertaken a risk the extent of which he does not appreciate. [p. 633, col. 1.]

Under section 1 of the Fatal Accidents Act, the person suing for compensation is not entitled to claim anything on account of the pain or suffering caused by the death, but only for the financial loss sustained by the death. [p. 633, col. 1.]

The proper way of assessing damages in such a case is to form some estimate of what the value of the continued life of the deceased would have been to the plaintiff and how long it was probable that it would continue. [p. 633, col. 1.]

The fact that the accident was an extraordinary or an unfortunate one is entirely irrelevant so far as the amount of damages to be awarded is concerned. [p. 633, col. 1.]

Mr. E. Doraiswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is a quite hopeless appeal. The facts are that the defendants, for the purposes of their own business, used a method of breaking up cast-iron which consisted of dropping a heavy weight on a piece of iron resting on a bed of iron with the intention that these pieces should be broken into smaller pieces. The weight was dropped from a height of 35 feet with the inevitable result that pieces of iron flew about. It is common ground that they habitually flew to distances of four or five yards from the pit. If persons choose to carry on dangerous operations of that kind, it is their duty not only to the public but to their servants to take adequate precautions that those pieces shall not cause injury. They ought to exercise ordinary care, caution, and skill to prevent that. The mere fact that an accident has happened is strong evidence in a case of that kind that they had not taken the ordinary care, caution, and skill required for preventing the happening of the event. They knew that these pieces were being thrown out of the pit. They put up a screen which was obviously so inadequate that, as I have said, pieces were habitually thrown out of the pit. They issued warnings to persons near, appreciating full well that they were carrying on a dangerous operation. They did not trouble themselves to issue warnings to persons at a distance, but chose to allow their workmen at a distance, to go on working at the risk of being hit. It is suggested that human foresight and skill could not have discovered that pieces of iron would go to a distance of some 70 to 90 feet, at which the deceased was standing at the time of the accident. I am not prepared to accept that view. Scientific knowledge has surely by this time reached the length of being able to tell with some accuracy what the effect of dropping a weight of a certain amount from a height of 35 feet upon pieces of iron will be and to what distance pieces of iron will or may be sent. I am quite satisfied that the learned Judge was right in holding that sufficient care was not taken and that, therefore, the defendants were guilty of negligence.

It has been suggested by the defendant's Engineer and Manager of the Factory that no further precautions have been taken since the accident. I hope that this evidence is not true, because that such a thing should have happened as happened in this case and that they should continue the operation without taking further precaution against the recurrence of such accident is, to my mind, negligence of the grossest kind.

The defence is put forward that the deceased voluntarily undertook the risk of this happening to him. That is the defence which is expressed in the maxim volenti non fit injuria but, for this to succeed, it is necessary for the other party to prove that the person injured knew of the danger, appreciated it, and voluntarily took risk. There is no evidence of any of these three things. The suggestion is, that he had some knowledge of the danger because another man working in the same place spoke to the fact that a short time before pieces of iron had flown from north to south as far as the place at which that man was standing. That he appreciated the risk of pieces striking him is impossible to find in view of the fact that the skilled European Manager swore that he himself did not appreciate that there was any risk. Of course, a man cannot voluntarily undertake a risk the extent of which he does not appreciate.

This appeal will accordingly be dismissed.

There is a cross-appeal against the amount of damages awarded. Under the Fatal Accidents Act, the widow or the person suing is entitled to compensation for the financial loss sustained by the death. She is not entitled to anything for pain or suffering or anything of the kind, but purely for the financial loss sustained. The learned Judge has awarded somewhere about one year's wages. He says that, in coming to that conclusion, he has taken into consideration that the accident was rather an extraordinary one, a consideration which, in my judgment, was wholly irrelevant. What he had to consider was the financial loss. Once he found that the defendants were liable, the question was how much they were liable for and not whether it was unfortunate for him that he was struck, but only what was the financial loss the plaintiff has sustained. The proper way of arriving at that is to form some estimate of what the value of the continued life of the deceased would have been to the plaintiff and how long it was probable that it would continue. I think that one year's wages is ridiculous in the absence of any evidence that the man was of ill-health or that his earning life was likely to be no more than a year. Giving the best consideration that I can to the facts of this case I think, taking about Rs. 13 as the monthly wages and somewhere about three years as the right period, we can arrive at the correct figure if we increase the damages awarded by the lower Court to Rs. 500 and I accordingly fix the damages at Rs. 500.

The cross-appeal will therefore, be allowed with costs on Rs. 500 the amount awarded; and the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree. When it is admitted by D. W. No. 1, that even with the existing fence of three feet, iron pieces were at times flying over the fence to a distance of 12 or 15 feet from the pit, it is clear that it was within the knowledge and the experience of the defendant Company that a fence three feet high was not an adequate protection. In these circumstances, had the Company taken "reasonable precaution" it would have raised the fence so as to prevent this intermittent scattering of iron pieces to a distance of 12 or 15 feet at least. A mere warning to those working in the neighbourhood is not sufficient precaution, as the defendant Company itself recognised when it put up a fence to the height of three feet. The defendant Company has, therefore, failed to take reasonable precaution to avert even the danger of which it was admittedly aware, and not having adopted such reasonable precaution, it cannot be absolved from the charge of negligence and default, or escape the legal consequences thereof.

As to the contention based on the maxim volenti non fit injuria, when the defendant Company itself pleads that it did not anticipate and could not have anticipated pieces flying over a distance of 90 feet, I do not see how they can plead that their deceased workman could possibly have anticipated it for himself, and thus the essential ingredient of that defence is lacking. As to the contention that deceased must have known that ordinary care and caution were being exercised, and yet continued working, that defence also fails, as, in my view, such ordinary care was not exercised.

Where the plaintiff claims that the land entered in the Survey khatain as ghair mazrua am appertains to his ancestral holding, it is not necessary to make the general public parties to the suit, as the decree will be good as against the parties to the suit and will not affect the general public.

A khasra prepared in an old batwara proceeding is admissible in evidence. It is evidence for what it may be worth, and where an entry in the khasra is in favour of the tenants, it is very good evidence and evidence on which the Court is entitled to rely.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts, J.—The plaintiffs in the two suits out of which these appeals arise are tenants in Mauza Dajipur of which the defendants are the maliks. The land in dispute has been entered in the Survey khatain as ghair mazrua am. The plaintiffs claimed that it appertained to their ancestral holding consisting of some 34 bighas which are said to be covered by plots Nos. 88 and 89 in an old batwara proceeding and they alleged that the land has been always in their possession. They, therefore, prayed for a declaration of their title to the disputed land as appertaining to their ratyati and for recovery of possession. The suit was contested by the defendant No. 2 who alleged that the land was the exclusive land of the maliks which had been settled with tenants under various pattas and kabuliyats. The suits were dismissed in the Court of first instance, but on appeal the suits have been decreed. The defendant No. 2 has appealed to this Court.

The first point urged in appeal is, that the land having been recorded in the Record of Rights as ghair mazrua am the suits cannot proceed, the general public not being made parties. This is obviously an unsustainable contention, because the decree will be good as against the parties to the suit and will not affect the general public.

The second point urged is, that the lower Appellate Court has relied to a great extent in coming to its decision on the khasra which was prepared in the old batwara proceeding and it is contended that this is inadmissible in evidence. There are various authorities that the batwara khasra is admissible in evidence and I need only refer to a decision of this Court in Ajodhya Prasad Singh Kumar v. Kamal Narain Singh (1) in which it was held that such a batwara khasra was admissible in evidence. This was a decision of a Judge of this Court sitting alone whose decision on this finding was upheld in Letters Patent Appeal. The batwara khasra is evidence for what it may be worth and in a case such as the present case where the entry in the khasra is in favour of the tenants it is, in my opinion, very good evidence and evidence on which the Court was entitled to rely.

The last point urged is, that a partition decree (Exhibit E) which was filed on behalf of the defendant has not been considered by the lower Appellate Court. I find however, from the judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge that he has considered this document and, although he has not discussed it at length, he has certainly considered it.

In the result, I see no reason to interfere with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and I would dismiss these appeals with costs.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib, G. Sivarama Krishniar and S. V. Narayana Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs founded their title in their pleading upon an adoption of one Toolasi Naicken by Thathappa Naicken, Toolasi Naicken being the person from whom the plaintiffs derived their title through the first three defendants. The learned Judge, in fact, decided in favour of the plaintiffs not on the adoption, the existence of which he disbelieved, but on a supposed title by prescription acquired by Toolasi Naicken for the benefit of the joint family of which he was a member with survivorship to his sons, the first three defendants. No issue is raised as to that, and indeed, we think it is very doubtful whether he really clearly found that, because he does not clearly say that Toolasi Naicken acquired it for any interest wider than his own. However, an issue will be framed, 'Whether the joint family of which Toolasi Naicken was a member acquired title to the property in suit by prescription.'

Finding should be submitted in two months, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Fresh evidence may be taken.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the City Civil Judge, Madras, submitted the following FINDING.—This suit has been remanded for a finding on the issue, "Whether the joint family of which Toolasi Naicken was a member acquired title to the property in suit by prescription," and the parties were declared to be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence.

I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the joint family of which Tholasingam Naicken was a member has been in continuous and exclusive possession of the house from the date (25 years ago) on which Kullammall was given in marriage to some one in Royapuram and that they have acquired by prescription a title adverse to the said Kullammall. The one and only piece of evidence on which the defendants are able to rely, that she (5th defendant) took away limes from the suit-house, is ambiguous. It does not appear that she did so as owner but she might just as well have been presented with them when she was going away to her own house in Royapuram.

I find, therefore, that the joint family of which Tholasingam Naicken was a member has acquired and completed its title for the property in suit by prescription.

This Appeal and Memorandum of Objections coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The finding which we have called for in this case has been returned and the learned Judge finds that the joint family, of which

BROACH CITY MUNICIPALITY V. GULAM RASUL HAJI BANUBHAI.

Tholasingam was a member, acquired a title to the property in suit by prescription. That finding of fact is challenged on the ground that though this old lady had married and gone away to Royapuram and never again resided in the property in the ordinary sense, she is to be held to have kept alive her rights in it against the accrual of prescription by the fact that, occasionally, she came and stayed a few days as a guest. That seems to be so, but that will not operate to make the possession of the family of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 less exclusive so as not to extinguish the rights of the old lady in the property. This contention does not require discussion.

It is next argued that the suit is not maintainable because at the time it was brought the plaintiffs were not in possession of the property and that no stranger, even after the completion of the prescription, can sue anybody for possession, because she had not got an iota of title at all as he is merely a man who has prescribed against the title of the true owner and who is left with nothing, unless by mere brute force he can succeed in holding the property against anybody who tries to come up. To my mind this is an absolutely untenable argument and is based on what to my mind is a complete misunderstanding of the decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Tichborne v. Weir (1). There a tenant had a lease and somebody, a stranger, came and stood for thirty years in the shoes of the tenant and paid rent to the landlord. It was sought at the end of a very long period to enforce against the person in occupation of the premises by the landlord the performance of a covenant to repair, and the argument on which it was sought to base that contention was this: the Statute in effect transferred the estate of the person prescribed against to the lands of the person in occupation. Their Lordships observed that it was an incorrect interpretation of the law and that what the Statute did was not to transfer the title of the person prescribed against with all its burdens to the person in occupation but to extinguish the whole title and to create, not by transfer but by an act of creation, a new title in the person who completed the prescribed statutory term. That being so, that case has no application to the present circumstances and we must hold that the person who has completed the statutory prescription is entitled to eject any person with no title who seeks to retain possession of the premises.

The result is, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of the first respondent.

Where a District Court passes an order under section 160 (3) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, that order can be executed as a decree. It is not necessary for the successful party to make an application to the Court to pass a decree in accordance with the order or decision.

Application praying for the reversal of an order passed by the District Judge, Broach, in Darkhast No. 3 of 1921.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Applicant.
Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this application made on behalf of the Broach City Municipality is, whether an order made or a decision given by the District Court under section 160 (3) of the District Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1901) can be executed, or whether it is necessary to make an application to the Court to pass a decree in accordance with the order or decision. It would certainly be very remarkable, when a summary method has been provided for by the Legislature for determining disputes arising for money, compensation or damages which are directed to be paid by the Act that it should be necessary in order for the successful party to obtain relief to file a suit when the District Court has come to a definite conclusion on the merits. The District Court in cases in which the compensation is claimed in respect of land, should follow, as far as may be, the procedure provided by the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for proceedings in matters referred for the determination of the Court. Under the Land Acquisition Act, in the case of a reference, the Court proceeds to hear the parties, and to determine the value of the land, and to make an award. Clearly, that award could be executed as a decree. It follows that where a District Court makes an order under section 160 (3), it must be treated for the purpose of execution in the same way as an award made in a reference under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

We have been referred to the decision in Chunital Virchand v. Ahmedabad Municipality (1), but that, if anything, is against the present applicant's contention. It was decided there that no appeal lies from the decision of the District Court under section 160 (3) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. Once we find that the decision of the Court under that section is considered as an order, though it may not be a decree, it must follow that there is some way for the parties entitled to the benefit of the order to get satisfaction without having to file another suit. Again, it is clear from section 160, proviso (b), that the Court has full power to give and apportion the costs of all proceedings in any manner it thinks fit. According to the applicant's contention, although the Court had full power to apportion costs, it had no power to issue execution in order that a successful party might get his costs given to him already by the Court.

In my opinion, therefore, there can be no doubt that the decision of the lower Court was right and that the Rule should be discharged with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts, J.—The facts of the case are shortly as follows: Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are maliks of the patti in which the land in suit lies. Defendant No. 1 and the mother of defendant No. 2 brought a suit for arrears of rent of this land against defendant No. 5, plaintiff No. 4, and his brother Gajadhar Rai, raiyats of the holding. They obtained a decree and in execution of the decree they purchased the holding, subsequently parting with some of their interest to the other defendants. The plaintiffs Nos. 1, to 3 were not parties to the rent-suit and their case is that they were necessary parties as they were co-sharers in the holding. The case of the plaintiff No. 4 is that, although the decree was against him, he was a minor at the time of the suit and was not properly represented. The plaintiffs accordingly brought this suit for a declaration that they were entitled to the land in suit. The defendants contended that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 had no interest in the holding and that the plaintiff No. 4 was properly represented by his mother who had been appointed his guardian ad litem by the Court.

The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 had no interest in the holding and that the plaintiff No. 4 was properly represented. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs appealed and on appeal the decision of the Court of first instance has been upheld in so far as the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 are concerned but so far as the plaintiff No. 4 is concerned it has been held that he was not properly represented and that the suit, in so far as his half share in the holding is concerned, must succeed. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The only question in appeal is, whether in fact the plaintiff No. 4 was properly represented by his mother in the rent-suit. It appears that the Court appointed plaintiff No. 4's mother as his guardian; notices were issued on her, but her consent was not taken and she did not appear in the suit which was decreed ex parte as against the plaintiff No. 4. The learned Subordinate Judge has held, on the authority of Krishna Chandra Mandal v. Jogendra Narain Roy (1), that it was not competent to the Court to appoint the mother of plaintiff No. 4 as his guardian without her express consent, that the appointment was without jurisdiction and that the minor was not represented. I am in agreement with this view. It is the view which has been expressed in this Court in the case of Mohan Krishna Dar v. Har Prasad (2); it is the view which has been uniformly adopted in Calcutta, vide Annada Prasad v. Upendra Nath Dey (3) and it is undoubtedly, in my opinion, the correct view of the law. We have been referred by the learned Vakil for the appellants to certain decisions of the Privy Council and of this and other High Courts in India in which it has been held that, although no appointment of a guardian has actually been made by the Court, yet if the mother appears and effectively represents her minor son a formal order for her appointment is not necessary. These, however, are entirely different cases. In the present case the minor was not only not effectively represented but was not represented at all. We have also been referred to certain decisions of the Allahabad High Court in which it has been held that, where an appointment has been made without consent and where a decree has been passed ex parte, unless it has been shown that the minor's interests have been prejudiced by the irregularity the minor has no right to set aside the proceedings: Chhatter Singh v. Tej Singh (4). With all respect to the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court who decided this case and other cases relied on in this decision, I am unable to accept the view. The provision of O. XXXII, r. 4 (3) in respect of consent is mandatory and I can find nothing in the law to suggest that, unless it is established that the minor is prejudiced, he cannot get relief.

This case has, in my opinion, been rightly decided and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Das, J.—I agree.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the Small Cause suit out of which this revision petition arises may be briefly stated as follows :—

Certain properties were mortgaged jointly to Chandan (1st defendant) and Bapputti (now represented by the 3rd defendant). Chandan sub-mortgaged his interest to Damayanti (plaintiff) and Bapputti, his interest to Rarichan the (2nd defendant). The Jenmi (Ayyappan) brought a suit to redeem the mortgage in Original Suit No. 145 of 1916. In that suit Dayamanti was not a party; but Rarichan was impleaded as 4th defendant and claimed compensation for a shop on the footing that it was in the portion sub-mortgaged to him by Bapputti, and in appeal this question was decided in his favour. Appeal Suit No. 138 of 1917 (of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat).

Damayanti filed the present suit on the ground that the shop was in the portion sub-mortgaged to her and not in the portion sub-mortgaged to Rarichan; that Original Suit No. 145 of 1916 was wrongly decided on account of the collusion and fraud of Chandan and Rarichan, that the amount of compensation ought to have been awarded to Chandan, and that she is now entitled to it as his sub-mortgagee. The District Munsif found there was no collusion but also found that the shop was in the portion belonging to the 1st defendant and gave plaintiff a decree. The 2nd defendant (Rarichan) filed this revision petition.

Before me it is contended by the petitioner (1) that after the decree in Original Suit No. 145 of 1916, the rights of the sub-mortgagee were extinguished; (2) even if they were not, the plaintiff's remedy is against the 1st defendant.

In support of the first proposition, the petitioner relied on in Singaravelu Udayan v. Ramayer (1) and Poosarla Chinna-swamy v. Kattamoori Venkataramakrishnayya (2). The former decision was dissented from in Venkatarama Iyer v. Esumsa Rowthen (3) which followed Gosto Behary Pyne v. Shib Nath Dutt (4). As to the latter case, all that was meant by it is that a sub-mortgagee after redemption of the mortgage has no further right against the mortgaged property and his remedy, if any, is against the sub-mortgagor. It is clear from Gosto Behary Pyne v. Shib Nath Dutt (4), that the sub-mortgagee can still pursue his rights against any property in the hands of the sub-mortgagor into which the security was converted.

But, does it follow from this that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree against the 2nd defendant on the ground that he obtained the compensation which ought to have been paid to the 1st defendant? There is no privity of any kind between plaintiff and 2nd defendant. It is true that the findings in Original Suit No. 145 of 1916 do not bind plaintiff. But the decree therein binds 1st defendant. While it may be open to the plaintiff to show against Chandan that the findings in Original Suit No. 145 of 1916 are erroneous and that he got in redemption a much smaller amount than he was entitled to, (assuming that it serves any useful purpose). I do not think she can earmark the compensation in the hands of 2nd defendant as money still belonging to 1st defendant and still available to plaintiff as security for her sub-mortgage, by reason of such error. The facts in Gosto Behary Pyne v. Shib Nath Dut (4) are distinguishable. There the money decree-holders of the patnidars drew out the sale-proceeds in execution of their decrees against the patnidars to whom they were considered to belong, apart from the decrees. In the present case, it cannot be said that the compensation originally belonged to the 1st defendant and that the 2nd defendant drew the money on account of some decree or other right he was seeking to enforce. It was held, as between the 1st and 2nd defendants, that the amount did not belong to the 1st defendant and this decision is binding on the 1st defendant. Except on the ground of fraud or collusion which the District Munsif has found against, the plaintiff cannot regard the amount in the hands of the 2nd defendant as money belonging to the 1st defendant so as to be available as security for her sub-mortgage. The plaintiff as sub-mortgagee can, as against a stranger, subrogate herself only to such rights as her sub-mortgagor can have as against the stranger and is bound by the decree between her sub-mortgagor and the stranger and cannot get rid of it by showing it was erroneous.

The petition is allowed and plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout, so far as 2nd defendant is concerned. The plaintiff will have a decree for the amount sued for against the 1st defendant with costs in the First Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 20—Settled raiyat who is—Condition to be fulfilled.

Where a person is alleged to be a settled *raiya*t within the meaning of section 20 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be proved that he continuously held as a *raiya*t land situated in the village, although the land need not be identical throughout the period of 12 years. The holding of land is to be continuous and, further, it is to be in the character of a *raiya*t. [p. 642, col. 1.]

But though the land must be held as a *raiya*t, this does not necessarily mean that the land should have been actually cultivated, because land may be held by a *raiya*t as his homestead under section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is, however, not sufficient for a *raiya*t that the character of land is such as would justify its use as a homestead, it must be established that the land is used by the *raiya*t as his homestead. [p. 642, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 21st June 1920, affirming that decree of the Munsif, Jamalpore, dated the 3rd May 1919.

Babu B. Chakravarty, with him Babus Ram Charan Mitter, Mukund Nath Roy and Parmanand Lahiri, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect and that the holding is governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. One Srikanta executed a kabuliyat in 1295 engaging to pay a consolidated rent for several plots of land in Dewangunge and other villages. The lease was for 10 years. The question is, whether an occupancy right under the Bengal Tenancy Act can be created by contract, estoppel or otherwise except by fulfilment of the conditions laid down in the Act. In the kha. tan the two plots of lands in suit were recorded as occupancy holdings. The Munsif found that there was no evidence to show that the lands were cultivated

PRODYOT KUMAR TAGORE v. UMESH CHANDRA SAHA.

Both Courts have dismissed the suit. The defendants are the sons of Srikanta. They have sublet a portion of the shop premises to a medical practitioner and to another shopkeeper. These two have also been impleaded as defendants. I submit the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. The Munsif, though finding that the case must be determined on the basis of the kabuliyat, holds that we are estopped from challenging the correctness of the entry inasmuch as it was made in our presence. The defence was that the expressions khod fasl and chukaini mean permanent tenancies having special incidents. They themselves admit that they are shopkeepers. They nowhere said that they are cultivators. The finding is that they never cultivated. The Courts below held that the lands being fasal must have been agricultural lands at the inception of the lease. I submit that view is clearly wrong. The tenancy was for 10 years. After the expiry the tenant held over. All the lands in the bazar have been treated as chandina or hut lands. Only these lands have been treated as occupancy holding because we raised no objection at the time of Settlement.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondents.—The view of the learned Judge is correct. The purpose for which the kabuliyat was given was for cultivating the lands. Some of the lands were in possession of Ramkumar Saha. He left. Then this settlement was made with Sreekanta.

He was an agricultural tenant in respect of plot No. 937 and the lands contiguous to it from 1291. The possession of plots Nos. 926 and 927 began in 1295. Section 5 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not contemplate an actual cultivator. Land may be held by a raiyyat as his homestead, see section 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. B. Chakravarty, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that three entries in a Record of Rights finally published are erroneous and for correction thereof. The three parcels in dispute are those numbered 926, 927 and 937. The defendants are recorded in the Record of Rights as settled raiyyats in respect of those lands. The case for the plaintiff is, that the lands are not agricultural and, consequently, the status of settled raiyyats could not be acquired in respect of such lands. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, though it is difficult to gather from the judgment the precise facts in relation to each of these parcels.

It is not disputed that on 27th March 1889, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff granted a lease for 10 years to Srikanta Saha, the father of the first two defendants. The parcels now in dispute were included in the lease. The real question in controversy is, whether Srikanta Saha was a settled raiyyat at the time in respect of one or other of the three parcels, and, if not, whether he or his successors-in-interest have subsequently acquired the status of such a raiyyat. We have been informed that before the grant of this lease plots Nos. 926 and 927 were in the occupation of one Ram Kumar Saha. He left the village and these two plots were included in the lease granted to Srikanta Saha. We have further been told that Srikanta Saha was in occupation of plot No. 937 from 1884. These are the statements which have been made before us on behalf of the respondent. But they are not admitted by the plaintiff.

It is plain that no question arises as to the applicability of section 19 of the Bengal Tenancy Act because there is no suggestion that a right of occupancy had been acquired by the defendants before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force. The status of the defendants must, consequently, be determined with reference to the provisions of sections 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Section 20, sub-section (1), provides as follows: "Every person who, for a period of 12 years, whether wholly or partly before or after the commencement of this Act, has continuously held as a raiyyat land situate in any village, whether under a lease or otherwise, shall be deemed to have become, on the expiration of that period, a settled raiyyat of that village." Sub-section (2) provides that a person shall be deemed for the purposes of the section, to have continuously held land in a village notwithstanding that the particular land held by him has been different at different times. Section 21 provides that every person who is a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of section 21 shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time being held by him as a raiyat in that village. The term 'village' has a technical meaning which is explained in section 3, clause (10) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In view of these provisions, it is clear that if Srikanta Saha is alleged to have been a settled raiyat it must be proved that he continuously held, as a raiyat, land situated in the village, although the land need not be identical throughout the period of 12 years. The Courts below have not found whether Srikanta fulfilled this condition. It is to be observed that the holding of land is to be continuous and, further, that the holding is to be in the character of a raiyat. This becomes obvious when we turn to the definition of the term 'raiyat' given in section 5, clause (2). 'Raiyat' means primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself, or by members of his family or by hired servants, or with the aid of partners, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right. The question consequently arises whether plot No. 937 was held by Srikanta Saha as a raiyat for a term of 12 years, or, whether, independently of plot No. 937, Srikanta held other lands in the village as a raiyat, for the prescribed period. If, by such continuous holding of land in the village as raiyat, Srikanta Saha acquired the status of a settled raiyat, he might acquire a right of occupancy in respect of plots Nos. 926 and 927, provided he held these parcels as a raiyat. We observe that the defendants have been recorded, not as occupancy raiyat, but as settled *raiya*s; in other words, it must be shown, in order that the record may be maintained, that Srikanta Saha or his sons had acquired that status in respect of each of the plots Nos. 926, 927 and 937. But, though the land must be held as a raiyat, this does not necessarily mean that the land should have been actually cultivated, because land may be held by a raiyat as his homestead under section 182. It must be remembered, however, that section 182 is not applicable unless the land is held as homestead; in other words, as pointed out by this Court in Dina Nath Nag v. Sashi Mohan Dey (1), it is not sufficient for a raiyat that the character of land is such as would justify its use as a homestead, it must be established that the land is used by the raiyat as his homestead. These are very material elements in the determination of the controversy between the parties, and the facts found by the Courts below do not enable us to hold that the defendants have the status of a settled raiyat in respect of one or more of the disputed parcels.

The result is, that this appeal is allowed; the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case remitted to the Court of first instance to be re-tried. Each party will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence as to the character and antecedent history of each of these parcels. Evidence will also be admissible to prove the status of Srikanta Saha. The case will be re-tried, however, on the footing that the tenancy originated with the lease of the 27th March 1889 and the user of land by other persons prior to that date can have no bearing upon the nature of the tenancy created by the document.

As the true bearing of the case does not appear to have been appreciated by either of the parties in the Courts below, we direct that the parties do bear their own costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court. The costs in the Court of the first instance before and after remand will be in the discretion of the Court.

Where, in a deed of transfer, the premises conveyed are sufficiently described, as by giving the particular name of the close or otherwise, an erroneous additional description will be rejected as a 'false demonstration', but if there is not this certainty in the first description, as if it is expressed in general terms, and a particular description is added, the latter controls the former and limits the generality of the earlier description. [p. 645, col. 1.]

The test is that, if the first description is sufficient in itself to identify the land which is conveyed, then, if there is a conflict between the first description and the second description, the second description ought to be rejected as a false description; but if the first description is not sufficient by itself to identify the lands intended to be conveyed then the second description ought to be read as restricting the operation of the grant. Messrs. S. P. Varma, Rai T. B. N. Sahai and Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—One Phekan Singh, who has been cited as defendant No. 12 in this action, held a raiya holding of 244 bighas on a rental of Rs. 41-12-0. The landlord instituted a rent-suit against Phekan Singh and recovered a decree as against him. In execution of that decree he caused the holding to be sold and it was, as a matter of fact, sold to defendant No. 15 for Rs. 500. On the 13th of December 1912, so it is alleged by the plaintiffs defendant No. 15 obtained delivery of possession. The plaintiffs' case is that defendant No. 15 was their benamidar, and that they obtained possession of Phekan Singh's holding on the 13th of December 1912, and was dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 to 13 acting in collusion with each other in April 1916. The suit, out of which the appeal arises was thereupon instituted by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the disputed lands, which are specified in schedules A and B, and for mesne profits. The defendants Nos. 1 to 11 claimed to be in possession of 30 bighas of land set out in schedule A under a conveyance executed in their favour by Phekan Singh. Defendant No. 13, it appears, has taken a conveyance of schedule No. A lands from defendants Nos. 1 to 11. Their conveyance is dated the 5th of January 1918. Defendant No. 12 is the original tenant, Phekan Singh, and he claims title to 15 bighas of land set out in schedule B by virtue of a compromise with the plaintiffs in a certain criminal proceeding. The defendants filed separate written statements in which they denied that they acted in collusion with each other. Defendants Nos. 1 to 11 disclaim all interests in schedule B lands, and defendant No. 12 disclaims all interests in Schedule A lands.

The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment has recorded a finding to the effect that the defendants did not act in collusion with each other. He has also disbelieved the case of the plaintiffs that they obtained possession of the disputed lands on the 13th of December 1912, and that they were dispossessed in April 1916. According to the learned Subordinate Judge the plaintiffs never at any time obtained possession of the disputed lands although in his view they are undoubtedly entitled to possession thereof. In the result he has given the plaintiffs a decree for possession of schedule A lands and for mesne profits as against defendants Nos. 1 to 11, and against defendant No. 13. In regard to schedule B lands he has come to the conclusion that the case of the defendant No. 12 is substantially correct. Accordingly, he declined to give the plaintiffs any decree for possession in respect of schedule B lands.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 11 have appealed to this Court and the plaintiffs have presented a cross-objection as against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their case in regard to schedule B lands as against defendant No. 12. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellants takes the point that, in the circumstances to be at once mentioned, the plaintiffs' suit was not maintainable, and that it should have been dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

I have already said that the ostensible auction-purchaser was defendant No. 15. The case of the plaintiffs is that defendant No. 15 was their benamidar, and that the purchase was made by them, although in the name of defendant No. 15. In this view the plaintiffs cited the auction-purchaser as a defendant in the action. Defendant No. 15, however, filed a written statement in which he claimed a beneficial interest in the property purchased. In other words, he wholly denied the claim of the plaintiffs that in the matter of the auction-purchase he acted as the benamidar for the plaintiffs. Now, this was the position up to the 31st of May 1920. On that date the plaintiffs presented a petition to the Court asking the Court to dismiss defendant No. 15 from the action. Thereupon, the Court directed that the name of defendant No. 15 should be struck off from the record of the suit. The contention of Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick is, that the suit could not proceed in the absence of defendant No. 15. He says that it is not right that he should be subjected to another action at the instance of defendant No. 15, and that it is only right and proper that his liability, if any, should be determined in the presence both of the plaintiffs and of the defendant No. 15. In my opinion, the objection is one that should have been taken in the Court below. It does not appear from the order sheet or the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that it was ever contended before the Court below by the plaintiffs that the consequence of dismissing defendant No. 15 from the record of the suit was that the suit could not proceed. Had the defendants taken this point in the Court below it would have been open to the plaintiffs to bring defendant No. 15 again on the record. That objection was not taken, and it is quite impossible for us in this Court to entertain an argument as to non-joinder of parties. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick explains to us that his point is not that the suit should be dismissed; but that his liability should be determined in the presence of defendant No. 15. But as, for the reasons to be presently stated, we have come to the conclusion that the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 are not liable for mesne profits, it is wholly unnecessary to examine the contention of Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick.

It is next urged by Mr. Mullick that the sale-certificate which is the document of title of the plaintiffs has not given the plaintiffs any title to schedule A lands. The argument is founded upon the evidence of one of the plaintiffs, to be found at page 21 of the paper-book. Pratab Mandal, one of the plaintiffs, giving evidence in the suit said as follows: "The entire jote of Phekan is in 7 days. Only 3 big days are in the sale-certificate but are in my possession. Those 4 days. The other four days are not in the sale-certificate; are 40 to 50 bighas in area. I took delivery of possession according to the sale-certificate. At the time of auction-sale I did not know that there were 4 other days besides the 3 days that were to be sold. It was at the time of taking delivery of possession I came to know of the other 4 days." Now this evidence establishes that he took delivery of possession of the entire area, namely, 244 bighas; but that the sale-certificate mentioned only 3 days, and it does not mention the other 4 days which are undoubtedly included within this block of 244 bighas.

In order to succeed, Mr. Mullick must establish that the sale-certificate has not given the plaintiffs any title to schedule A lands. In my opinion, the contention is one which cannot for a moment be upheld. The argument must be based, if at all, upon the sale-certificate itself. In other words, we must decide, upon the construction of the sale-certificate, whether the Court conveyed schedule A lands to the plaintiffs. The sale-certificate declares the title of the purchaser to the land specified at the foot of the certificate. It is necessary then to see what are the lands so specified. If Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick is right in his contention, that the lands specified did not include the disputed lands then, of course, it will be impossible to hold that the plaintiffs have any title to the disputed lands. The specified lands are described in these words:—"Inventory of 244 bigas 10 kathas jote lands at an annual rental of Rs. 41-12-0 besides cess, together with trees and clumps, houses, and bamboo (clumps) standing on the same, situate in Mauza Shankerpur, Parganah, Haraut, Thana and Sub-Registry Office Araria. The decree-holder is the 16 annas proprietor. The lands have not been subject to Survey operations." If the sale-certificate ended here, the argument which has in fact been advanced before us could not for a moment be entertained by this Court; but then there are these words which follow and the whole argument is based upon a description which, in my opinion, is a subsidiary description and a false description. The words are these:—

	Kitas.	North.	South.	East.	West.
1.		Chaman Miser.	Ajab Mandal.	Sukan Gope.	Samda Ghat.
2.		Gopal Miser.	Padu Singh.	Samda-dhar.	Lachadhar.
3.		Govt. lands.	Hiyalal Miser.	Rupan Mandal.	Samda-dhar.

The question then is, was the land sold by the area which is to be found in the document, or, was it sold by the boundaries mentioned in the document. The question is essentially a question of fact; parcel or no parcel that is how it has been described in the cases on the point. Now the rule is this:—

"When the premises is sufficiently described, as by giving the particular name of close, or otherwise, an erroneous additional description will be rejected as a 'false demonstration'; but if there is not this certainty in the first description as if it is expressed in general terms and a particular description is added, the latter controls the former and limits the generality of the earlier description." There is undoubtedly a conflict between the two descriptions, and the question which we have to consider is, whether the words constituting the second description should be rejected as a false description, or whether they should be read as words of restriction. The test, in my opinion, is this: if the first description is sufficient in itself to identify the land which is conveyed, then, if there is a conflict between the first description and the second description, the second description ought to be rejected as a false description; but if the first description is not sufficient by itself to identify the lands intended to be sold, then the second description ought to be read as restricting the operation of the grant. The question then is this: is the first description sufficient in itself to identify the lands in dispute? In my opinion, there can be no doubt that the words are quite sufficient to identify the disputed land. Not only is the area given but the annual rental is given which is Rs. 41-12-0. The description is quite sufficient itself to identify the entire block of land which was held by Phekan Singh and for which he paid a rent of Rs. 41-12-0. That being so, the second description must be rejected as a false description.

It follows, therefore, from this finding that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession of schedule A lands. The next question is, whether the defendants or any of them are liable for mesne profits. Now, on this point the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' case as to possession and dispossession is wholly untrue. There is no evidence on the record that the defendants or any of them at any time before the summons was served on them were or was aware of the fact that Phekan Singh's holding had been purchased by the plaintiffs in execution of a rent-decree obtained against Phekan Singh. The defendants Nos. 1 to 11 had admittedly a good title to schedule A lands by their purchase. That being so, it was necessary for the plaintiffs to give them notice of their purchase before they could make the defendants liable for mesne profits. Now, the defendants Nos. 1 to 11 sold the schedule A lands to defendant No. 13 long before the suit was actually instituted. In my opinion defendants Nos. 1 to 11 are not liable for mesne profits.

Defendant No. 13 contends that the question as between him and defendants Nos. 1 to 11 should be left open. I am unable to agree with this contention. Defendant No. 13 was in actual occupation of the land when summons was served upon him. He should have delivered possession of the disputed land to the plaintiffs forthwith.

KISHORI MOHAN PAL, v. PROVASH CHANDRA.

From the time he received summons in the suit he became a wrong doer. That being so, he is liable for mesne profits from the date when summons was actually served upon him. We accordingly modify the decree passed by the Court below. The plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession as against defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and defendant No. 13. They are also entitled to a decree for mesne profits in respect of schedule A lands from defendant No. 13 from the date of the service of summons upon defendant No. 13 up to the date when defendant No. 13 makes over quiet and peaceful possession of the lands to the plaintiffs. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

There is a cross-objection by the plaintiffs against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in respect of schedule B lands. In my opinion the cross-objection should not be entertained. The plaintiffs and defendant No. 12 are all in the category of respondents, and it is unusual for one respondent to maintain cross-objection as against another respondent. It appears that the plaintiffs were out of time and they could not possibly have filed an appeal as against defendant No. 12. They, therefore, adopted this device to get rid of the question of limitation. That being so, we will not consider the cross-objection of the plaintiffs which must be refused.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

Partition decree, execution of—Delay in furnishing stamped paper—Limitation, operation of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182.

Although a decree in a partition suit is not formally drawn up until paper bearing the stamp prescribed by Art. 45 of Sch. I to the Stamp Act is supplied to the Court, limitation for the execution of such a decree runs, under Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, from the date of the decree, i.e., the date on which the judgment is pronounced, and not from the date on which the Court receives the requisite stamped papers. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, of 24 Pargannas, dated the 28th of September 1920.

Babu Mahendranath Roy, (with him Babu Savat Chandra Mookerjee), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff applied for the execution of the decree made in a suit for partition. The learned Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that the period of limitation was to be counted from the date on which the Court received the necessary stamped paper. But the wording of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act is clear and plain. It says, "three years from the date of the decree and the date of the decree is undoubtedly the 24th of March 1914 and the decree bears that date." The application for execution was made on the 21st July 1920. The judgment was pronounced on the 25th March and that was the date of the decree, vide Order XX, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code.

Golam Gaffar Mandal v. Goljan Bibi (1), Bhajan Behari Shaha v. Girish Chandra Shaha (2).

Babu Jatindra Nath Lahiri, for some of the Respondents.—I submit that the decision in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bejoy Chand Mahatap (3), cited by the learned Subordinate Judge has been correctly relied on and so the application for execution is not barred as is contended by the other side. It does not matter that the decree is dated the 25th March 1914, as the Commissioner's report and the map which forms part of the decree are dated the 27th June 1914. Moreover, the decree in the present case was signed by the learned Judge on the 2nd January 1920 as no stamped paper was supplied till then. A decree for partition cannot be finally drawn up until the proper stamped paper is supplied. So limitation is to run from the 2nd January 1920. The cases cited by my learned friend do not touch the point in the present case.

Babu M. N. Roy, for the other Respondents, agreed with the contention of Babu J. N. Lahiri.

Babu Mahendranath Roy, replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff arising out of an application for the execution of the decree made in a suit for partition. The respondents who have appeared are four of the defendants in the suit. They are described in the application as judgment-creditors while the plaintiff and the remaining defendants are described as judgment-debtors. The decree bears date the 25th March 1914. The application was made on the 21st July 1920, more than six years later. The only question is, whether execution is barred by limitation. No previous application for execution having been made, the period of limitation provided by Art. 182 of the Limitation Act is three years from the date of the decree. The words are plain and unambiguous and prima facie this application is out of time.

Under the Stamp Act of 1899 a decree for partition is chargeable with duty to the amount prescribed by Art. 45 of Schedule I of the Act and the expense of providing the proper stamp is to be borne by the parties to the decree in such proportions as the Court directs. The result is, that a decree for partition is not formally drawn up until paper bearing the proper stamp is supplied to the Court. The decree is then engrossed on the stamp paper and signed by the Judge.

In the present case the decree was signed by the Judge on the 2nd January 1920, no stamped paper having been furnished till on or shortly before that date.

In the judgment appealed from the learned Subordinate Judge has held that in the case of a decree for partition limitation runs from the date on which the Court receives the requisite stamped paper. He has given no reason or authority for this view other than the decision of this Court in the case of Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bejoy Chandar Mahatap (3).

It is not necessary to say whether one agrees or does not agree with that decision. The question discussed is not the question which arises in the present case. The learned Judges were not there construing Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.

In this Court the learned Vakil for the respondents has said all that could be said for his clients. He has in particular called our attention to the fact that, although the decree is dated the 25th March 1914, it is expressed to be "passed in terms of the Commissioner's report dated the 27th June 1914 which and the map filed along with it do form parts of the decree." The 25th March 1914 is, nevertheless, the correct date of the decree because that is the day on which the judgment was pronounced (O. XX, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code). The report of the Commissioner appointed to make the partition had already been received, by the judgment the report was adopted subject to certain variations and, in connection with those variations, certain directions of a ministerial character were given to the Commissioner which the Commissioner had merely to obey. The order-sheet shows that the Commissioner submitted a report on the 27th June 1914. That report has not been placed before us. But I have no doubt that it did no more than state that the Commissioner had done what he was directed to do by the judgment of the 25th March 1914. That judgment was the final judgment in the suit and it was so regarded, by the Subordinate Judge who delivered it. The decree is in accordance therewith. The directions in the judgment were sufficient to indicate how the decree should be framed, and there was no need of any further judgment.

The delay in signing the decree was due not to any fault of the Court or to any cause beyond the control of the parties but solely to the delay of the parties in supplying the requisite stamped paper. Any party desiring to have the decree executed might have furnished the stamped paper at any time leaving the expense of providing it to be adjusted by the Court in connection with the costs of the execution.

GHATRAPAT PRATAP V. C. G. LEES.

The circumstances disclose no ground for saying that limitation did not run from the date of the decree as provided by Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, and if authority be needed, reference may be made to Gulam Gaffar Mandal v. Goljan Bibi (1) and Bhajan Behari Shaha v. Girish Chandra Shaha (2).

I may add that much time and labour would be saved if the Court would resist such attempts as the present to go behind the plain words of a positive enactment.

In my opinion the appeal succeeds and the application for execution must be dismissed.

In the circumstances, we make no order as to the costs of this Court or of the Court below.

Sanderson, C. J.—I agree.

Adverse possession—Ejectment suit—Burden of proof—Suit arising out of order in proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code—Necessary parties—Thakbast map, value of.

In an action for ejectment it is incumbent on the plaintiff not only to prove his title but also that he has been in possession within twelve years of the date of the suit. [p. 649, col. 2.]

In a suit for possession arising out of an order made under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the plaintiff has a cause of action only against the person whose possession has been confirmed by the order and is not bound to implead as parties to the suit any other person who might have a claim to the property in dispute. [p. 649, col. 2.]

The object of the Thakbast Survey which preceded the Revenue Survey, was to ascertain the position of boundaries and areas of estates and villages, it was no part of the duty of the Revenue officers conducting the thakbast operations to record prescriptive rights. [p. 650, col. 1.]

Thakbast maps, therefore, are good evidence of possession at the time they were made, but they are no evidence of title acquired by prescription or adverse possession. [p. 650, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—Mauza Majharia Shaikh in Tappa Khadda, District Champaran, originally belonged to the Bettiah Raj and it was granted by the Raj as a rent-free tenure to the predecessors of the plaintiffs more than 60 years ago and it is now owned by the plaintiffs and they are in possession thereof. Within the said Mauza there is a lake which has been surveyed in the last Cadastral Survey and bears Khasra Nos. 1446, 1448, 3233 and 1446-3275, to 1446-3298. Out of these survey plots, plots Nos. 1446, 1448 and 3233 measuring about 163.48 acres are under water and the parties claim jalkar rights therein. Survey Nos. 1446-3275 to 1446-3298, measuring about 2.33 acres, are culturable lands. The defendant is the Manager of the Lalsaraya Factory and Mauza Lalsaraya and several other Mauzas are held by the Factory under a mokarrari grant, dated the 3rd November 1888, under the Bettiah Raj and in the mokarrari deed the jalkar right in Tappa Khadda is expressly excluded from the grant. The plaintiffs allege that they have been in peaceful possession of the jalkar bearing Survey Nos. 1446, 1448 and 3233, but during the last Revisional Survey the plaintiffs came to know that the defendant had settled Survey Nos. 1446-3275 to 1446-3298 with several tenants and wrongfully appropriated the rental in respect thereof on the allegation that the said lands appertain to Mauza Jawakatia covered by their mokarrari, but ultimately those plots were recorded in the Record of Rights as appertaining to the plaintiffs' Mauza Majharia Shaikh and the tenants with whom the lands had been settled abandoned the same, and the lands are now in the khas possession of the plaintiffs. As regards the jalkar 1446-1448, and 3233, there was a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure between the defendant and the servants of the plaintiffs wherein the Magistrate found the defendant to be in possession and the plaintiffs allege that they have been dispossessed from these jalkar plots by reason of this order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The plaintiffs brought the present action on the 21st October 1918 praying for adjudication of their title to plots Nos. 1446, 1448 and 3233 and for recovery of possession thereof with mesne profits and for the recovery of Rs. 117-9-0 being the amount of rent alleged to have been realised by the defendant and appropriated by him on account of the rent of plots Nos. 1446-3275 to 1446-3298. The defendant raised various pleas and contended inter alia that the plaintiff did not disclose any cause of action as against him, as he was merely the Manager of the Factory; that the disputed jalkar was in possession of the Factory for more than 70 years, and that the plaintiffs were never in possession thereof and he denied the plaintiffs' title to possession and their right to recover mesne profits and damages. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the jalkar plots Nos. 1446, 1448 and 3233 are situated within and appertain to Mauza Majhariah, but that the plaintiffs have failed to prove possession within 12 years of plots Nos. 1446 and 1448, and that the defendant has proved adverse possession for more than 12 years. He has, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as regards those two plots. As regards plot No. 3233, he has found that the plaintiffs have proved their possession within 12 years and has made a decree in their favour in respect of this plot. As regards the claim for damages for plots Nos. 1446-3275 to 1446-3298 the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiffs' claim and the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs does not press his claim as regards the damages in this appeal. There were two plaintiffs in the suit, but the present appeal has been filed only by the plaintiff No. 2, and the plaintiff No. 1 who is a ward of the Court of Wards, has been made respondent in the appeal. The only point pressed in the appeal is as regards the plaintiffs' right to plots 1446 and 1448.

The first point which arises for decision in this appeal is as to whether the suit is maintainable as against the defendant in the case as he is merely the Manager of the Lalsaraya Factory, the proprietors whereof have not been made defendants. Mr. Kennedy for the respondent argues that the action being in ejectment and the defendant being merely a Manager of the Factory, the suit is not maintainable without the proprietors of the Factory being made parties. To my mind there is no substance in this objection. The cause of action alleged in the plaint is the dispossession by the defendant on account of the proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that proceeding Mr. Lees, the defendant, was declared to be in possession and the plaintiffs have got a cause of action against the person who has actually dispossessed them. Moreover, the suit cannot be defeated on account of non-joinder of the proprietors of the Factory. If it be shown that they are not properly represented in the present action by the Manager, the defendant No. 1, they might not be bound by this decree, but that is no reason for dismissing the suit.

The main question, however, for decision in the appeal is as regards the title of the plaintiffs to the Jalkar. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Jalkar appertains to Mauza Majharia Shaikh and it is apparent on a reference to the Thukbust Map of 1845 and the Revenue Survey Map of 1846 that the disputed Jalkar is situated within the ambit of Mauza Majharia. The plaintiffs would, therefore, be prima facie entitled to possession of this Jalkar unless they have lost their title by being out of possession for more than twelve years. The learned Government Advocate for the appellant argues that the title being in the plaintiffs, the onus was on the defendant to prove adverse possession for more than twelve years but the action being in ejectment it is incumbent upon the plaintiffs not only to prove their title but also that they have been in possession within twelve years of the date of the suit. The question of onus, however, is not of any importance in the present case inasmuch as both sides have produced evidence and the Court is entitled to come to a finding upon the evidence as a whole as to whether the plaintiffs or the defendant have been in possession within the statutory period. As regards the evidence of possession, the plaintiffs rely on the Survey Map of 1846, which shows the western portion of the Jalkar to be in Majharia. They also rely on the Khatian of 1895, Ex. 20, which shows the disputed Jalkar in the possession of Dhanukdhari Singh and others, ancestors of the plaintiffs, in Mauza Majharia Shaikh through their tenant Teka Kamkar. They also rely on Jamabandi papers, Exhibits 1 to 12, for the years 1904 to 1913 which show settlements made by the 8-annas proprietors of village Majharia and realization of rents for the Jalkar. In addition to this, they have produced oral evidence to prove the fact of their possession and they argue that the evidence on the record proves their possession from the years 1846 down to 1913. As against this, the defendants rely on the Thakbust Map, Exhibit A. A. of the year 1845 wherein there is an entry as regards the disputed Jalkar to the following effect: "River Mun Jalkar appertains to Mauza Sundaria and land belongs to this Mauza." (The translation in the printed paper-book to the effect that the land belongs to the "said Mauza" is clearly a mistake for "this Mauza", the word in the original being haza which means 'this' and not 'said'). Now the defendant's case is that the Jalkar in dispute, although situated within the ambit of Mauza Majharia Shaikh, is a part of a continuous Jalkar which is known as Jalkar Sinduria and which belongs to the Factory and reliance is placed upon the Thakbust Map to show that in the year 1845 the Jalkar in dispute was found to be a part of the Sundaria Jalkar although lying on the lands of Majharia. No doubt, these Thak Maps are good evidence of possession at the time they were made, but they are no evidence of title acquired by prescription or adverse possession. The object of the Thakbust Survey, which preceded the Revenue Survey, was to ascertain the position of boundaries and area of estates and villages and it was no part of the duty of the Revenue Officers conducting the Thakbust operations to record prescriptive rights. (See notes on the old Revenue Surveys of Bengal, Bihar, Orissa and Assam by Captain F. C. Hirst, and the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Satcowri Ghosh Mondal v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). The value of the entry in the Thakbust Map is further very much diminished by the Revenue Survey Map which was prepared the next year 1846, wherein this Jalkar is shown as belonging to Mauza Majharia and not to Mauza Sundaria. In fact, the Survey Map of 1846 clearly shows that the eastern portion of the lake was included in Lalsaraya, and if the western portion which is now in dispute was also outside Majharia and included in Sundaria, the said western portion would also have been shown in the same way as the eastern portion. Therefore, the entry in the Thak Map is not of much help to the defendant in the present case. The defendant was produced bandobasti papers, Exhibits A to A4 and B to F8, from the year 1906 onwards to show that the Factory used to settle Jalkars with tenants, but in those papers there is nothing to identify the Jalkars settled, with the plots in dispute now. We only find a mention of Sundaria or Senwaria Jalkar and the Bandobasti papers by themselves are not sufficient to prove the defendant's possession of the Jalkar now in dispute. The same remarks apply to the cash books showing realization of rents in respect of the Senwari Jalkar. The defendant has also produced kabuliats Exhibit E series, the earliest of which is dated the 13th September, 1914. These kabuliats show settlements by the factory of a large number of Jalkar Mahals, one of which is in Majharia Shaikh, but as I have already remarked they do not go far enough to establish adverse possession for more than twelve years. The defendant has also examined several witnesses to prove the fact of his possession. His witness No. 3, Jang Bahadur Singh, says that he took settlement of the disputed Jalkar from the Factory in 1306, 1307, and 1308, and his witness No. 4 Lalkshman Mallah, claims to have taken settlement of the same Jalkar from the Factory from 1301 to 1309 Fasli. This period overlaps with the lease of the witness No. 3, Jang Bahadur Singh, and the evidence of these witnesses who speak of having taken settlements of the Jalkar from the Factory is, to my mind, not reliable. The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, placed reliance on the evidence of Mr. Reid and Mr. Finzel, who were Managers of the Factory before the present defendant Mr. Lees. As regards the evidence of Mr. Reid, he was Manager of the Factory from 1901 to 1910. He speaks of the possession of the Factory over the Jalkar and Narkat in the lake by the side of the Factory. It does not appear from his evidence that he was referring to the Jalkar now in dispute. He was examined on Commission and interrogatories put to him and the answers given by him do not, in my opinion, establish the possession of the defendant over the identical Jalkar now in dispute. There are admittedly other Jalkars in possession of the Factory and they are close to the Factory. Therefore, his evidence is not sufficient to establish adverse possession of the defendant. As regards Mr. Finzel, he was Manager from March to September 1911. He no doubt says, that he knows the Jalkar in suit and that he made settlement of this Jalkar with certain persons, but in cross-examination he says that he has no idea of the boundaries of the disputed Jalkar or lake and in a vast sheet of water extending over several miles this sort of evidence is not sufficient to prove adverse possession over the disputed land. As regards Mr. Lees, he says in his evidence that he knows the Jalkar in dispute and that it is in the possession of the Factory. He, however, became Manager in September 1911 and he cannot speak of previous possession from his own knowledge. He gives reason for his opinion that the Factory is in possession of this Jalkar from a long time because the Thakbust Map of 1845 includes the Jalkar in Mahal Sonbaria. Another reason that he assigns is that in February 1897, he went to the Jalkar in dispute in the company of Mr. McLeod on a pigsticking excursion. Mr. McLeod set the reeds on fire and on asking who was going to pay the damages, Mr. McLeod said, that the whole of it belonged to him. Now this statement of Mr. Lees is, to my mind, not legal evidence as regards the possession of the Factory over the disputed Jalkar in the year 1897. This is the whole of the evidence on the record and in my opinion it is not sufficient to prove adverse possession of the defendant over the Jalkar in dispute. The only documentary evidence in support of the defendant is the Thakbust Map of 1845 and Mr. Lees in his evidence admits that he has got no other document to show that the Sonbaria Jalkar includes the disputed Jalkar. I think that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving their possession within twelve years and they are entitled to a decree for possession of this disputed Jalkar 1446 and 1448 also.

I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below as regards these two Jalkars and decree the suit in respect thereof with costs. The plaintiffs will be entitled to mesne profits in respect of these Jalkars the amounts whereof will be ascertained by the Court below.

Pleadings—Specific performance of contract, suit for—Pleading and proof, variance between, effect of—Part performance.

The plaintiff in a suit for specific performance of an alleged contract embodied in a certain document cannot, after the case made by him in the plaint has completely broken down, be permitted to abandon the case made in the plaint and to invite the Court to examine whether a completed agreement may or may not be spelt out of correspondence antecedent to the document. The Court would not, in a case of this description, permit the plaintiffs to depart from the case made in the plaint, as the Court discourages, as a rule, variance between pleading and proof. The test applied in such cases is, whether, if the variance were permitted in favour of the plaintiff, the defendant would not be taken by surprise and be prejudiced thereby. This rule is applied with-

There was a completed contract made on the 26th September 1917. My difficulty is that there are concurrent findings of the lower Courts against me. But I invite your Lordships to look at the antecedent correspondence between the parties which leave no room to doubt that there was a completed contract the specific performance of which can be sought.

Babu Ramchandra Majumdar, (with him Babu Mohesh Chandra Banerjee for Babu Rama Prosad Mukherjee and Babu Mritunjoy Chatterjee,) for the Respondents.—I object to my friend's inviting your Lordships to go beyond the plaint and the pleadings and look into the antecedent correspondence. The Court should not permit the plaintiffs to depart from the case made in the plaint.

Babu D. N. Chackerbutty, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale of a house. The plaintiffs came into Court on the allegation that a completed contract for sale was made on the 26th September 1917 by a person named Sidhi Gopal Misser, who acted for the first defendant and had authority to enter into a valid agreement on his behalf for the sale of the house and the land. The first defendant repudiated the allegations of the plaintiffs while the second and third defendants claimed the protection accorded to bona fide purchasers for value without notice. In the Trial Court the plaintiffs produced a document which was marked Exhibit I and purported to embody the agreement which the plaintiffs sought to enforce specifically. The Court held an elaborate investigation and came to the conclusion that this document, which purported to be an agreement to sell and was alleged to have been written by Sidhi Gopal Misser on the 26th September 1917, was not in existence at the date of the institution of the suit, and, further, that it had been manufactured collusively during the progress of the trial. On this finding, the Subordinate Judge declined to make a decree for specific performance. He further stated that, in any event, as the plaintiffs had not sought equitable relief with clean hands, he must decline to exercise in their favour the discretion vested in him by section 22 of the Specific Relief Act. Upon appeal, the District Judge affirmed the findings of the Court of first instance as to the document mentioned and the authority of Sidhi Gopal Misser to complete the contract. The District Judge held that Sidhi Gopal was not authorised to complete the contract and that he did not do so in fact. On the invitation of the plaintiffs, however, the District Judge considered the antecedent correspondence between the parties and came to the conclusion that only negotiations had taken place, which had not matured into a completed contract. In this view the District Judge affirmed the decree made by the Trial Court.

On the present appeal, the finding of the Courts below as to Exhibit I has not been questioned; but we have been invited to examine the correspondence which preceded the execution of that document and to hold that they disclose a completed contract between the parties. The respondents have taken exception to the adoption of this course. We are of opinion that we should not accept the invitation of the appellants to examine the correspondence with a view to determine whether they do or do not disclose a concluded agreement between the parties antecedent to the exhibit already mentioned.

The plaintiffs came into Court on the allegation that the negotiation culminated in a contract on the 26th September 1917 and that such contract was made by Sidhi Gopal Misser on behalf of the first defendant. No doubt, the document was not annexed to the plaint. But it was produced at the trial and was made the foundation of the case for the plaintiffs. That case has completely broken down. The plaintiffs cannot, in such circumstances, be permitted to abandon the case they made in the plaint and to invite the Court to examine whether a completed agreement may or may not be spelt out of the antecedent correspondence. The Court would not in a case of this description, permit the plaintiffs to depart from the case made in the plaint, as the Court discourages, as a rule, variance between pleading and proof. The test applied in such cases is, whether if the variance were permitted in favour of the plaintiffs, defendants would be taken by surprise and be prejudiced thereby. Jalim Singh v. Chooner Lal (1), Nabadwipendra Mcookerjee v. Madhu Sudan Mandal (2), Sital Das v. Partap Chunder Sarma (3), Satish Kantha Roy v. Satis Chandra (4), Ishan Chandra Dhupi v. Nishi Chandra Dhupi (5), Hira Lal v. Gribala Debi (6), Haji Umar Abdul Rahiman v. Gustadji Muncherji Cooper (7), Motabhooy Mulla Essabhoy v. Mulji Haridas (8). This rule is applied with special strictness in cases of specific performance of contracts. Hawkins v. Maliby (9) one contract was alleged and another was proved, with the result that the bill was dismissed. No doubt where there has been a part performance the Court may struggle with apparently conflicting evidence rather than dismiss the suit. This appears to have been the view adopted by Lord Cottenham in Mundy v. Jolliffe (10). In the case before us, there is no question of part performance. On the other hand, the findings of the Courts below make it abundantly clear that the conduct of the plaintiffs has been throughout of such a character as to disentitle them to assistance from the Court.

The result is, that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 116—Transfer of non-transferable interest—Covenants of title and quiet enjoyment, breach of—Suit to recover consideration, maintainability of—Limitation.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a certain share in a jajmanka brit sold to him by the defendant by a registered deed, or, in the alternative, for the recovery of the amount paid by him as consideration for the sale. It was found that the jajmanka brit was not saleable:

Held, (1) that the contract, although ineffective to transfer the jajmanka brit to the plaintiff owing to the unsaleable nature of the property, was not an illegal contract in the sense of being contrary to law or morals, and that, therefore, the claim for the recovery of the amount paid as consideration for the sale was maintainable; [p. 654, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 15th September 1920, confirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Patna, dated 31st July 1919.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Appellants.
Messrs. S. Dayal and Brij Kishore Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, affirming the decision of the Munsif in a suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of possession of a 2-annas 3-pies share in a jajmanka brit sold to him by a registered deed on the 27th of February 1914 by the defendant Jhingu Ojha, or, in the alternative, for recovery of Rs. 400, the consideration for the sale.

The Courts below have held that the jajmanka brit was not saleable, and consequently the plaintiff could not be given possession but they have given him a decree for Rs. 400 with interest.

Two grounds are urged in second appeal; the first is that when an illegal act has been performed by the parties and one has advanced money to the other on an illegal consideration, he cannot recover it. The second ground is, that the suit is barred by limitation.

In support of the first ground, reference was made to Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume VII, p. 390 where it is said that "if the illegality of a transaction is brought to the notice of the Court and the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality, the Court will not assist him." The decisions in Scott v. Brown (1) and Gedge v. Royal Exchange Assurance Association (2) were referred to. Now these were both cases of illegal contracts, and the nature of the cases to which the rule applies has been described in the passage in Halsbury referred to above. The text-writer speaks of contracts which are expressly prohibited by Statute, contracts that are illegal at Common Law as involving the commission of a crime or tort, and contracts which are unlawful as being contrary to public policy; contracts which are not actually unlawful but merely void, either by Statute, such as gaming and wagering contracts or on grounds of public policy, such as contracts in general restraint of trade.

It is quite clear that in the present case the contract is not of this nature. It may not have been effective to transfer the jajmanka brit because of the unsaleable nature of the property, but it is not an illegal contract in the sense of being contrary to law or morals.

There is nothing in the decision in Hira Pandey v. Bachu Pandey (3) to support any such contention, while in Sukh Lal v. Bishambhar (4), it was held that there is nothing in law to prevent a Maha Brahmin mortgaging his rights to offerings receivable by him in his professional capacity. I am not concerned with the effect of the transfer but merely with the nature of the act. It seems to me impossible to hold that such a transfer is an illegal contract involving the consequence that no rights can be claimed under it of any kind.

With regard to limitation, the argument is that as the consideration has wholly failed, this is a suit for money had and received for the use of the plaintiff and, therefore, it is governed by Art. 62 of the Limitation Act, and consequently time would begin to run from the date of the contract and the suit was barred on the 11th September 1918 when it was brought.

Two decisions were referred to in support of this argument, Javerbhai Jorabhai v. Gordhan Narsi (5) and Bai Diwali v. Umedbhai Bhulabhai Patel (6). These were both cases of mortgages which were illegal under the provisions of the Bhagdari Act, and consequently it was held that the consideration for the mortgage failed ab initio and the suit must be governed by Art. 62. But as I have already held the present contract was not barred by any Statute, and it cannot be said that the consideration wholly failed. The plaintiff having entered into possession of the jajmanka brit and remained in possession until he was dispossessed on the 30th August 1918 by his vendor's son, time would begin to run either from that date or from the date on which it was held by the Court that the property had not passed by the sale [Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7)]. There is a distinct stipulation in the conveyance that if there was any defect in title, the vendee would be competent to realise the consideration-money with damages. This was a registered instrument and as there was a breach, both of the covenant for title and of the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment, the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit within six years of the breach. In my opinion the suit was within time and this appeal must fail.

In the last place, it was urged that the question of the liability of the sons of Jhingu Ojha who have been substituted for their father, now deceased, in the present appeal, as between them in their personal capacities and the decree-holder should be left open to be gone into in execution. That question, in my opinion, does not arise. The present appellants have been substituted for their father and they are bound by the result of the appeal.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

*Landlord and tenant—Rent suit, dismissal of—Relation of landlord and tenant not established—
Subsequent suit for ejectment—Res judicata.*

Where in a rent-suit by a landlord against an alleged tenant the latter sets up a title in himself, and the Court dismisses the suit, holding the relation of landlord and tenant to be not established, the decision is conclusive on one point and one point alone, namely, that the defendant was not the tenant of the plaintiff during the years for which rent was claimed. The decision cannot operate as res judicata on the question of title in a subsequent suit to eject the defendant as a trespasser.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Tipperah, dated the 9th of February 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court, at Comilla, dated the 27th of February 1919.

Babu Ramdayal De, for the Appellant:—My client brought this suit for the purpose of ejecting the defendants who he says are mere trespassers and as such cannot be allowed to stay on his lands. The Court of Appeal below has reversed the judgment of the first Court which was in my favour on the ground that my suit is barred by the operation of the principle of res judicata inasmuch as a previous suit which was brought by my client against these defendants failed. My contention is that the learned Appellate Court below is wrong in applying the principle of res judicata to this case. That was a judgment in a suit for rent, and this is a suit in ejectment. It is inconceivable how res judicata comes in. What is the precise effect of the decision in the rent-suit in respect of the dispute in the present case? My learned friend cannot say that this matter or the questions at issue in this case were directly and substantially in issue in the previous rent suit and that they were finally decided so as to preclude this suit from being instituted. The matters in issue in the former case were whether the defendants were tenants for a certain period under the plaintiff and, if so, whether they were in arrears or not. But in the present suit the plaintiff seeks to eject the defendants on the ground that they have absolutely no title to the land and are, therefore, trespassers. The matters in issue in these two suits are entirely different. I submit that the Appellate Court below has proceeded on wrong lines in thinking that the title of the plaintiff has been lost by adverse possession by the defendants whom I regard as trespassers. Cites Mirgendra Nath Saba v. Krishna Chandra Saba (1).

Babu Jotindra Mohan Ghosh, for the Respondent was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment. The case for the plaintiff is, that he sued the defendants for arrears of rent in 1915 on the allegation that they held the disputed land under him as his tenants. In that litigation, the defendants pleaded that they were not tenants under the plaintiffs and set up a title in themselves. The Court, thereupon, framed an issue in the following terms: "Is there any relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties." The Trial Court came to the conclusion upon the evidence that the plaintiff had failed to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and in this view dismissed the suit for rent on the 22nd March 1915. On the 21st May 1918 the plaintiff instituted the present suit to eject the defendants on the allegation that they were trespassers. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed the decision. It was argued in the Courts below that the decision in the rent-suit operated as res judicata. There can be no room for doubt that the decision does not operate as res judicata, but the parties are not agreed as to the precise effect of the decision in respect of the controversy in this litigation. The judgment of this Court in Mirgendra v. Krishna (1) shows that the decision in the rent-suit is conclusive upon one point and one point alone, namely, that the defendants were not the tenants of the plaintiff during the years for which rent was then claimed; that is, from 13th April 1910 to 12th April 1913. No other questions were essentially in dispute at that stage, and they cannot rightly be regarded as matters directly and substantially in issue in the suit and finally decided therein. The effect of the decree in that suit upon this litigation then is, that the defendants must be deemed not to have been the tenants of the plaintiff since the 13th April 1910. The present suit, as we have stated, was instituted on the 21st May 1918 and the plaintiff must consequently prove that he was in possession of the disputed land within 12 years antecedent to that date. Accordingly, in view of the decision in the rent suit, he is to prove his possession after the 21st May 1906 and before the 13th April 1910. He might have been in possession during this period in one of two ways, namely, either by direct occupation or by possession through tenants. He has not established that he was directly in possession during this period; nor has he proved that the defendants during this period held as tenants under him. The defendants, on the other hand, have established that they have been in occupation for more than 40 years before the commencement of the present litigation. In such circumstances, the possession of the defendants must be taken to have been adverse to the plaintiff. The District Judge has consequently held rightly that the title of the plaintiff, if any, has been extinguished by adverse possession and that the suit must be dismissed with costs.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

ADELAIDE CHRISTIANA LISH—

versus

DAVID LISH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Letters Patent (Patna), cl. 27—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 4, 7—“Matters matrimonial,” meaning of—Suit for declaration of validity of marriage, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of High Court.

The expression “matters matrimonial” used in clause 27 of the Letters Patent of the Patna High Court is identical with that used in section 4 of the Divorce Act, and the meaning to be attached to it in the Act and the Letters Patent must be consonant and identical. [p. 658, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction of the High Court in matters matrimonial, therefore, is only such jurisdiction as is comprised within the provisions of the Divorce Act. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Gasper v. Gonsalves, 13 B. L. R. 109, referred to.

The High Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a mere declaration that plaintiff's marriage with the defendant is lawful and valid. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Section 7 of the Divorce Act merely indicates the principles upon which the Court shall generally act and in no way enlarges the scope of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court as defined in those sections of the Act where jurisdiction is expressly categorized. [p. 658, col. 2.]

Matrimonial suit.

Mr. Yunus, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit purporting to be a matrimonial suit entered as No. 3 of 1922 brought by one Adelaide Christiana Lish asking that this Court might be pleased to declare that her marriage with one Charles Lish on the 10th July 1916 was “a perfectly valid and lawful marriage;” she does not ask for any other relief except the usual formal alternative prayer that the Court might be pleased to grant such other relief as it might think fit and proper. Now, it is not here necessary for me to dilate upon the circumstances in connection with which this litigation was commenced. It is, I think, sufficient to state that they appear to be unusual; the plaintiff having, apparently, first married one Thomas Lish in 1868, then one Horace John Wilson in 1894 and, finally, Charles Lish in 1916. This

Charles Lish was, it is said, a brother of her first husband. All these gentlemen are deceased, having died respectively in 1890, 1902, and 1917. The question which has, of course, at once arisen is as to whether a suit of this kind can be brought in this Court. Now, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff has argued with much ingenuity that, by virtue of clause 27 of the Letters Patent constituting this High Court of Judicature (i.e., that of Patna) which were dated 9th February 1916, it would appear that a suit of this nature can be instituted in this High Court. This clause of the Letters Patent runs as follows:—

“And We do further ordain that the High Court of Judicature at Patna shall have jurisdiction, within the Province of Bihar and Orissa, in matters matrimonial between Our subjects professing the Christian religion: Provided always that nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with the exercise of any jurisdiction in matters matrimonial by any Court not established by Letters Patent within the said Province, which is lawfully possessed of that jurisdiction.”

Now, it is obvious that the first point which has to be considered is as to what is meant by the phrase “matters matrimonial” and, I think, it is possible that if these words were to be construed in their widest conceivable meaning, it may be that they might cover jurisdiction over a suit asking for a declaration that a marriage was valid. The learned Counsel refers here to what may be termed the matrimonial matters within the jurisdiction of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice in England. That Court under its jurisdiction (which that Division inherited from the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes) was entitled to pronounce decrees in connection, amongst other matters, with the dissolution of marriage, the nullity of marriage and the establishment of the legitimacy and the validity of marriages. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff suggests that when the first Supreme Courts were established in India (namely in Calcutta) they possessed a similarly unrestricted jurisdiction in connection with matrimonial questions and under which there could have been rightly entertained a suit for a declaration that a particular marriage was legal and valid. He points out that by clause 35 of the Letters Patent of 1865, under which the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal was re-established (which, whilst revoking previous Letters Patent of the year 1862, continue that High Court), it was declared that the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal should have jurisdiction within the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William "in matters matrimonial between Our subjects professing the Christian religion." The learned Counsel urged that at that date it was probable that there existed in that High Court an unrestricted matrimonial jurisdiction and that at that date a suit, such as the present one brought in this Court, could have been there entertained. However that may be, the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) clearly altered the position as to jurisdiction so far as High Courts established prior to the date of the enactment are concerned. This Act, which came into operation on the 1st April of 1869, declared in its preamble that it was expedient to amend the law relating to the divorce of persons professing the Christian religion and to confer upon certain Courts jurisdiction in matters matrimonial and it proceeds later to define the nature of those matters which are to be regarded as matrimonial and in respect of which Courts are to have jurisdiction. In clause 4 it is laid down as follows:—

"The jurisdiction now exercised by the High Courts in respect of divorce a mensa et toro, and in all other causes, suits and matters matrimonial, shall be exercised by such Courts and by the District Courts subject to the provisions in this Act contained, and not otherwise except so far as relates to the granting of marriage licenses, which may be granted as if this Act had not been passed."

It is not contended here (indeed, it is a matter of common ground) that there is nothing in the Indian Divorce Act which definitely contemplates that a suit asking for a declaration of validity of a marriage comes within its purview. My attention has, however, been tentatively drawn to section 7 of the Act which reads thus :

"Subject to the provision contained in this Act the High Courts and District Courts shall, in all suits and proceedings hereunder, act and give relief on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said Courts, are, as, nearly as may be, conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for divorce and matrimonial causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief."

This section, however, to my mind merely indicates the principles upon which the Courts shall generally act and in no way enlarges the scope of the jurisdiction as defined in those sections of the Act where jurisdiction is expressly categorized. It is, I gather, admitted that had the Letters Patent establishing the Patna High Court been promulgated in the year 1868, there could have been no doubt whatever that its jurisdiction (whatever it may have been before) would have been delimited by this section 4 of the Indian Divorce Act: but it is suggested that as the Letters Patent establishing this Court only came into effect in 1916, the words "matters matrimonial" as used in clause 27, may be construed as contemplating a larger jurisdiction than that to which at any rate, High Courts existing prior to the Indian Divorce Act of 1869 were by that Act restricted. I have very little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that they cannot. In my view, although it is possible to read into the phrase "matters matrimonial" a very broad meaning, yet, when we find that that expression is identical with that used in the Indian Divorce Act, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the meaning in both the Act and the Letters Patent should be properly construed as consonant and identical. For this reason, therefore, I think, that the jurisdiction of this High Court in matters matrimonial is only such jurisdiction as is comprised within the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act. The consequence of this view is that, in my opinion, this suit cannot be instituted in this Court.

The only case bearing upon the matter to which my attention has been drawn is that of Gaspar v. Gonsalves (1) decided by Pontifex, J., in 1874 and I see that it is referred to in certain text-books relating to the Law of Divorce in India as an authority. The suit in that case was for a declaratory decree that the plaintiff was a feme sole and not the wife of the defendant, and for an injunction that he might be restrained from asserting that she was his wife and from attempting to enforce as against her any right as her husband. The circumstances were certainly curious and it appears that the suit was undefended, nobody representing the reputed husband. The learned Judge seems, with some diffidence, to have come to the conclusion that it was not competent under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act of 1869 for an individual to ask the High Court for a decree that her or his marriage was invalid on such grounds as were in that case sought to be put forward but only on the grounds directly prescribed in the Indian Divorce Act itself. I should add that the grounds in the case in question were, substantially, that the wedding ceremony had not been properly carried out, that no Civil Officer had been present at the marriage and that no notices thereof had been given in accordance with the requirements of the French Law as it existed at the Settlement of Chandernagore in which the marriage was solemnised.

A second question was raised as to which, however, I do not think that it is perhaps strictly necessary that I should express any definite opinion but which I do not like to leave entirely unmentioned in view of the fact that it was actually argued. It was at first suggested that it was not possible for a suit to be brought at all for a bare declaration of the validity of a marriage without an application for some consequential relief. The point, however, has really disappeared as a result of the argument and it is not now contended that, in view of the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, such suit is not maintainable before an appropriate tribunal even though the only matter in respect of which relief is asked is simply that a certain marriage may be declared as having been legally and validly contracted.

The result, therefore, in this case will be that the plaint will be returned for the purpose of presentation before the appropriate Court.

The defendant who has appeared, namely, David Lish, the first defendant, is entitled to his costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage of joint property by manager—Necessity—Burden of proof.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family mortgages joint estate, it is incumbent on the parties supporting the mortgage to prove that the money raised on the mortgage was required for family purposes; and where the mortgage is for carrying on a family business, it is not sufficient for the mortgagee to prove by evidence that the mortgagor was carrying on such business. He must show that the money was required for such business. [p. 661, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 195 of 1918.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, Counsel (with him Mr. D. R. Manerikar), for the Appellant.

Mr. Nilknath Atmaram, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover on a simple registered mortgage-bond Rs. 9,400 principal and Rs. 9,400 as interest, with costs and future interests at 12 per cent. The original mortgagor was one Krishnappa Annappa. The pedigree of the family is as follows:—

When the mortgage was executed Kashi Nath, the son of Yeshwant, the brother of Krishnaji, was separated from the family. The members who remained joint were Krishnaji, his son Waman and Vithal, the brother of Kashinath. A decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 18,800, with costs and future interest at 12 per cent. per annum on Rs. 9,400 from the suit date till the expiry of six months from the date of the decree and at 6 per cent. thereafter until satisfaction. On failure to so pay, the mortgaged property, excepting the interests of defendant No. 3, if any, in it, or a sufficient portion of it, was to be sold towards satisfaction of the mortgage. The personal remedy was held to be time-barred. The principal issue in the case was whether the mortgage was executed for a joint family necessity. The Judge found that issue in the affirmative. The 2nd defendant Vithal has appealed. In 1909, Krishnaji was the sole adult member of the family. He carried on an iron shop and a grocery shop, which undoubtedly were businesses belonging to the family. From 1906 to 1909 Krishnaji had also carried on an oil shop. But that was a new business, and so the other members of the family would not be liable for any debts which were due by that shop. In 1909 Krishnaji entered into a partnership with some other persons to deal in mirabolams, and there can be no doubt that that could not be treated as a family business, and that Krishnaji would be liable for any debts which were incurred for that business.

The law regarding mortgages of joint family property made by the manager of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara, who is not the father of the other members, is laid down in Anant Ram v. Collector of Etah (1), a decision of the Privy Council. Such a mortgage, it was held, could only be justified so far as it was wanted for the joint family purposes. If the necessity could not be established by direct evidence, it might be assumed, if it could be shown that reasonable care was taken to ascertain if such circumstances existed and the transferee acted in good faith. In either case the burden of proof was on the person who claimed the benefit of the mortgage. It was further held that if the mortgage-debt was not incurred for necessity, not even the mortgagor's own interest could be sold in enforcement of such a mortgage.

In the suit mortgage-deed with regard to the amount taken from the mortgagee it was stated as follows:—"The amount of rupees taken from you by us for our needs arising out of some pecuniary difficulties, i.e., for the necessity of the business of the shop belonging to the family of Krishnaji Annappa Gavde and the said minors is as follows: "Rs. 2,000 Krishnaji Annappa Gavde, one of us had taken from you on 11th January of 1909 by passing in writing a promissory-note Rs. 2,000 in cash and Rs. 7,400 have been received from you now."

That statement in the mortgage-bond would not be binding on the second defendant, nor would it avoid the necessity of the mortgagee proving that the mortgage-money was required for joint family purposes. There is no evidence whatever that at the time when the mortgage was executed either the iron shop or the grocery shop was in need of funds. There is no evidence that the mortgagee took any steps to ascertain whether or not the money was required for the family business, and, therefore, it is difficult to see how the mortgagee has satisfied the burden of proof which lay upon him. But reliance was placed on the decision in Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (2). The plaintiff in that case filed a suit on certain promissory-notes signed by the only adult male member of a joint Hindu firm carrying on an ancestral trade, and it was held that the minor defendant's share in the firm was liable. Mr. Justice Chandavarkar at page 81* said: "Assuming that the minor is governed by the principles of Hindu law, what is the Hindu Law on the subject? Where a minor is a co-partner in a joint family, his share in the family property is liable for debts contracted by his managing co-parcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it. If the family is a trading firm, the same rule must apply with this difference that the term family purpose or purposes incidental to it, must here give way to the expression trading purpose or purposes incidental to it, having regard to the nature and objects of the family business. The calculating of a negotiable instrument is in the case of a joint family trading as a firm, necessary for its existence and its purposes. It is a necessary incident of the carrying on of the trade. Without it the firm could not gain credit in the market and prosper."

With the greatest respect, I should say that assertion was far too wide. Although in the case of some joint family firms the circulating of a negotiable instrument may be a necessary incident of the business, it still must be shown that it is a necessary incident of the business carried on by the Hindu joint family whose members the plaintiff seeks to make liable. I think it is most probable that from the evidence which was before the learned Judge, it did appear that in that family it was incidental to its business to circulate negotiable instruments. But I do not think that the argument holds good that an exception can be grafted to the rule laid down by the Privy Council. When the manager of a joint Hindu family mortgages joint estate, it must still be incumbent on the parties supporting the mortgage to prove that the money raised on the mortgage was required for family purposes. No doubt, if the family is carrying on a trading business, it would be very much easier to prove that the money was required for the purposes of that trade, and so for family purposes, than if the family were mere agriculturists. But it is not a necessary inference that, because Krishnaji was carrying on two shops dealing in iron and groceries, and because he raised moneys by mortgaging family property, that the money was necessarily required for the purposes of the joint family business. There is no direct evidence as to what was the capital involved in the iron and grocery shops in 1909, but there is also no evidence whatever that they were in need of so much money as was raised by Krishnaji on the said mortgage. On the other hand, it has been proved that Krishnaji in 1909 was entering upon an entirely new venture with several outside partners which required, as the accounts show, considerable capital. It was suggested that before 1909 Krishnaji had been dealing in mirabolams. That suggestion is based on a statement made in the plaint in the suit filed by Kashinath, the 3rd defendant, for partition, in which he claimed a share in the mirabolam business. That by itself would not be evidence that, as a matter of fact, Krishnaji was carrying on mirabolam business as a part of the family trade. Even if he was doing so, it would not be an ancestral business any more than the oil shop was. It seems to me, therefore, that the onus which lay on the mortgagee to prove that Krishnaji was entitled to mortgage in his favour joint family estate for family purposes has not been satisfied. The Judge says at page 7: "I fully believe that the suit-debt was borrowed by Krishnaji for joint family necessity, i.e., trade necessity as stated in suit-bond. It is not shown that Krishnaji had no necessity to borrow at the time of the suit-bond. Krishnaji was a man of business and I do not hence disbelieve the statement in suit-bond about the amount being taken for family trade necessity." I have endeavoured to show that the learned Judge has not appreciated, even if he considered, the decision of the Privy Council, which shows that it is not sufficient for a mortgagee to prove by evidence that the mortgagor was carrying on a family business. He must show that the money was required for that business. It follows that the appeal must be allowed, and that the interest of the second defendant in the suit property must be excepted from the sale.

The third defendant Kashinath was made a party to the suit and, although the suit was dismissed against him, he was ordered to pay his own costs. In his Appeal No. 93 of 1921, it has been argued for the respondents that no appeal lies on the question of costs. In this particular case we think a principle is involved. But, apart from the question whether any principle is involved, since the second defendant has appealed, the whole decree of the lower Court is before us, and we can make any alteration we think fit in it. The principle involved is due to the rule that costs follow the event, and that the successful party is entitled to get his costs, unless it has been shown that there is some very good reason why he should bear his own costs. This has not been done. The plaintiffs, therefore, will have to pay the costs of the second and third defendants in the Court below and of their respective appeals.

Landlord and tenant—Suit to eject transferee of tenant—Transferability—Burden of proof—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108 (j).

In a suit by the landlord to eject a transferee from a tenant from homestead land, the burden is, in the first instance, on the plaintiff to prove that the tenancy was created before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, before the onus can be thrown upon the defendant to prove the custom of transferability. In the absence of such proof the case must be governed by section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 663, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Saran, dated the 28th January 1921, reversing a decision of the Munsif, First Court, Chapra, dated the 23rd May 1917.

Mr. S. C. Mitra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Siveswar Dyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in an action in ejectment. The plaintiff is the landlord of village Kanar. One Ram Prosad Lal had a homestead land in the village which he conveyed to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the year 1909. The plaintiff's case is that the holding was not transferable and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by their purchase acquired no valid title and he brought the present action for khas possession of the land. The plaintiff further alleged that Ram Prosad Lal had abandoned this homestead land sometime in the year 1905 or 1906 and had left the village and had gone away to some place in Bengal and that, therefore, in the year 1909, when the conveyance to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was executed, he had no right to sell the land and, therefore, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 acquired no interest by their purchase. The First Court found that Ram Prosad had abandoned the holding before the conveyance of 1909 and, therefore, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 acquired no interest by their purchase and he decreed the suit for khas possession. There was an appeal to the District Judge by the defendants which was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Saran and the appeal was allowed and the suit was dismissed.

There was a second appeal to this Court which came up before Mr. Justice Sultan Ahmad and his Lordship set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal below and remanded the case to be heard by the District Judge or by some other officer to whom he may transfer it for fresh hearing. After remand the appeal has been heard by the Officiating Subordinate Judge and he has set aside the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff now appeals.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found upon the evidence that the alleged abandonment by Ram Prosad in the year 1905 or 1906 or at any time prior to the conveyance of 1909 has not been proved. This is a finding based on evidence and is conclusive in second appeal. But the learned Counsel for the appellant argues that, assuming that the conveyance to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was genuine and that Ram Prosad had the right to sell in the year 1909, still it was for the defendants to prove that the holding was transferable and as they failed to prove it, they acquired no title by their purchase. This argument is based on the assumption that the holding was created before the Transfer of Property Act was passed. The learned Subordinate Judge on this point has found that there is no evidence on the record that the tenancy of Ram Prosad was created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. The only evidence on the record was that the disputed land was part of Basgit, which existed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and he held that the plaintiff must prove that the particular tenant was created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act before the onus could be shifted on the defendant to prove the custom of transferability. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in throwing the onus upon the plaintiff. His case is that the plaintiff, being the admitted landlord and the action having been brought in ejectment, it was for the defendants to prove the custom of transferability. He relies on the case of Ambica Prasad Singh v. Baldev Lal (1). What was held in that case was that, when a landlord sues a person on the allegation that he is a trespasser and that person sets up a transfer from a tenant, it is for the defendant to prove both the tenancy and the validity of the transfer and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, homestead land comprised in a tenancy created before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was passed, must be presumed to be non-transferable. It appears that in that case it was admitted that the holding was created before the Transfer of Property Act. There was no dispute as regards the time when the holding came into existence and it being admitted that the holding was created before the Transfer of Property Act, the onus certainly lay on the defendants to prove the custom of transferability before he could succeed. In the present case the defendants deny the fact that the present holding came into existence before the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, it was for the plaintiff to prove that the tenancy came into existence before the Transfer of Property Act.

Mr. Siveswar Dyal for the respondents relies on the case of Mohendra Lal Sinha v. Krishna Kumari Debi (2) as an authority for the proposition that it is for the plaintiff to prove that the tenancy was created before the Transfer of Property Act, was passed before the onus could be thrown upon the defendant to prove the custom of transferability. Although the question of onus was not discussed in this case, their Lordships proceeded on the assumption that it was for the plaintiff to prove, in the first instance, that the tenancy was created before the Transfer of Property Act.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that it was for the plaintiff in the first instance to prove that the tenancy was created before the Transfer of Property Act. This not being proved, the case must be governed by the provisions of section 108 (j) of the Transfer of Property Act and the holding was certainly transferable.

In this view of the case, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

In section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the term 'rent' cannot be restricted to 'money rent'. It bears the meaning attributed to it in section 3, clause (5) of the Act. [p. 668, col. 1.]

The substantive rule formulated in section 50 (1) and the presumption embodied in section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act do not become inapplicable because a tenure-holder or raiyat holds at a rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind, or entirely in kind. [p. 664, col. 2.]

Although light may be thrown on the scope of a Statute by looking at what Parliament was doing contemporaneously and at the history of the Statute yet even when words in a Statute are so ambiguous that they may be construed in more than one sense, regard may not be had to the Bill by which it was introduced. JUDGMENT.—These six appeals have arisen out of as many suits, instituted by tenants, under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, against their landlords, for the decision of disputes regarding entries which had been made in a finally published Record of Rights. The plaintiffs had been recorded as settled raiyyats under the defendants; they claimed that they were raiyyats at fixed rents. In support of their contention, they produced rent receipts which showed that each of them had held at a uniform rent for over 20 years. In each case, however, the rent consisted partly of cash and partly of the money value of a fixed quantity of paddy. To take one illustration: in the case of one tenancy, the amount of rent as shown in the rent receipts was Rs. 20-1a-12gds-2k; this amount is made up of Rs. 18-13a-18gds-2k as cash rent and Rs. 1-3as-14gds as the money value of two kuris 3 mans 1 khupi of paddy. These two items are shown separately in the receipts up to the year 1902, and, thereafter, the consolidated sum alone is shown as cash rent. Similar observations apply to each of the other cases. In these circumstances, the Revenue Officer who tried the suits in the Court of first instance held that section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable. In his opinion the term 'rent' in that section did not include rent in kind. The result was that the suits were dismissed. On appeal, the Special Judge adopted the same construction of section 50 and confirmed the decision of the Revenue Officer. In this Court, the tenants have urged that section 50 has not been correctly interpreted by the Courts below.

Section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides as follows:—

"50 (1). Where a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement, the rent or rate of rent shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure or holding.

"(2). If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that either a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement."

This section must be read along with section 3 (5) which provides that, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, rent means whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. This definition is in no way repugnant to the subject or context of section 50, and the term 'rent' in that section may well be replaced by its equivalent as given in section 3 (5). This leads inevitably to the conclusion that the substantive rule formulated in section 50 (1) and the presumption embodied in section 50 (2) do not become inapplicable because a tenure-holder or raiyat holds at a rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind or entirely in kind.

A determined effort was successfully made in the Courts below on behalf of the landlords—and the attempt has been resolutely repeated here—to place a restricted construction on section 50, by reference to the report of the Select Committee of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General which considered the draft of the Bengal Tenancy Bill at the final stage. It is well-known that there was, at one time, some divergence of judicial opinion on the question, whether a produce rent, which, though varying annually with the varying amount of the yearly produce was yet fixed as to the proportion it was to bear to such produce, was a fixed rent for the purposes of sections 4 and 16 of Act X of 1859 and sections 4 and 17 of Act VIII of 1869 B. C. The question was answered in the affirmative in a long series of decisions; Thakooranee Dossee v. Bisheshur Mookerjee (1); Miterjeet Singh v. Toondun Singh (2); Ram Dyal Singh v. Luchmee Narain (3); Jutto Moar v. Basmuttee Koer (4); Hanuman Parshad v. Kaulesar Pandey (5). The contrary opinion, however, was maintained in Mahomed Yacoob Hossein v. Wahed Ali (6) and Thakoor Pershad v. Nowab Syud Mahomed Baker (7). But the decision in Yacoob Hossain v. Wahed Ali (6) was disapproved in Miterjeet Singh v. Toondun Singh (2) and in Ram Dyal Singh v. Luchmee Narain (3); Jackson J., when pressed with the decisions in Yacoob Hossain v. Wahed Ali (6) and

DINA NATH PAL V. SATI PRASAD.

Thakoor Pershad v. Nowab Syud Mahomed Baker (7) described in graphic terms the injustice of the rule favoured therein: "I confess I would have considerable difficulty in assenting to the rulings in these cases; because, if the rulings are correct, the Legislature must have intended that raiyyats who have held land upon one principle, that is to say, upon one fixed ratio of division of the produce of their land with the landlord, from the time of the Permanent Settlement, would be entitled to no protection whatever, but would after these 80 or 90 years be subject to a suit for enhancement or for commutation of their rent at such money rates as the landlord might be enabled to prove. I cannot believe that the Legislature could have intended any such injustice to raiyyats in those parts of the country where the bhaolee system is prevalent, as it is in many parts of Behar. In those parts of the country, there being no such thing as a rate of rent in money, raiyyats holding from the time of the Permanent Settlement would have no protection whatever, unless the Legislature meant to include under the words rate of rent the mode or principle of bhaolee payment. But it is not necessary for us to determine the case upon this point; if it had been so, I should have been inclined to propose a reference to a Full Bench."

There can thus be no doubt that there was a marked preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that raiyyats who paid their rent in kind, partially, or entirely, were not disentitled to the benefit of the statutory presumption corresponding to the rule now embodied in section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

But the respondents have invited our attention to the fact that while legislation, which ultimately culminated in the present Bengal Tenancy Act, was in hand, an attempt made to insert the following clause, so as to give effect to the view adopted in the majority of judicial opinions, was abandoned:

"When a raiyyat has paid as rent a fixed share or the value of the fixed share of the produce of the land, the rent or rate of rent shall not be deemed to have been changed within the meaning of this section, merely by reason of the amount paid having varied from year to year, or by reason of the rent having been commuted, with the consent of both the raiyyat and his landlord, to a fixed money rent." (Digest of the Law of Landlord and Tenant prepared by C. D. Field, section 38; Bill prepared by the Rent Commission, 1880, section 16, Exp. 1; Bill submitted by the Bengal Government, 1881, section 15, Exp. 1; Bill as introduced in the Legislative Council, 1883, section 16; Bill as amended by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council, 1884, section 64 (3).)

This provision was omitted at the final stage, as appears from the following passage from the Report of the Select Committee:

"We have omitted from the section, which enacts the well-known presumption arising from holding at a rent unchanged for twenty years, the sub-section which made the presumption applicable to produce rents, as opinions generally were opposed to it." Gazette of India, dated 21st February 1885, Part V, page 64).

We shall presently consider whether reference is premissible to the Report of a Select Committee in aid of the interpretation of a statutory provision. But, even if we assume for a moment that such reference is legitimate, it is plainly of no assistance in the present case. The omission of the clause left the Bill as it was, and that Bill, it cannot be overlooked, contain a comprehensive definition of the term 'rent'. Act X of 1859 did not contain a definition of the term 'rent', and this opened up, as is well known, various opportunities for controversies of a recondite character. The Legislature remedied this defect by the insertion of a definition of the term 'rent', in section 3 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act—a definition which, as Sir Arthur Wilson observed in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Jyao Kumari (8), "seem to express very clearly the meaning of the word 'rent' as it would be understood without any statutory definition." We need not speculate whether the members of the Select Committee fully realised the effect of this definition on the other provisions of the Bill they had then under consideration. But this much is clear that if they intended to alter the current of judicial opinion under the old Law, they unquestionably failed to achieve their purpose by the mere omission of the clause we have mentioned. The result might have been different, if the term 'rent' in section 50 had been replaced by the phrase 'money rent' which makes its appearance in sections 28, 29, 30, 53 and 61. We may add that the decision of Jenkins, C.J., in Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra Chakrabarti (9), which was mentioned in the course of argument, does not assist us in the solution of the question raised before us. That case turned upon the construction of a document then before the Court though, no doubt, it implies the opinion that rent payable partly in money and partly in kind cannot be regarded as fixed in amount. It may further be pointed out that the actual decision in that case has not been accepted in later decisions, which will be found reviewed in Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal (10), Asutosh Mukhopadhyaya v. Haran Chandra Mukherji (11); Gurudas Sen v. Gobinda Chandra Sinha (12); Basiruddi Chowdhuri v. Afsarannessa Bibi (13).

We are, however, of opinion that reference is not permissible to the Report of the Select Committee. The Judicial Committee ruled in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (14), which reversed the decision of this Court in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (15), that reference is not permissible to the proceedings of the Legislature which result in the provisions of an Act as legitimate aids to its construction, and Lord Watson observed that the same reasons which exclude their consideration when the clauses of an Act of the British Legislature are under construction, are equally cogent in the case of an Indian Statute. In that case, reference had been made by Petheram, C. J., and Prinsep, J., to the Report of a Select Committee when the Bill, which subsequently became the Administrator-General's Act, was before the Legislative Council; Trevelyan, J., had, on the other hand, hesitated to adopt such a course, even though there was precedent in its favour in the Full Bench decision in Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (16). The Judicial Committee cannot be deemed to have departed from the rule enunciated by them in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (14), merely because they did not again express their disapproval of a similar method of interpretation adopted by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of In the matter of Parbati Charan Chatterji (17). Lord Watson and Sir Richard Couch were members of the Board on each occasion, and there is no indication that the Judicial Committee had, in the course of a few months, altered their opinion on the subject.

As regards the principles which, as indicated by Lord Watson in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Premlal Mullick (14), (at page 118*), exclude the consideration of proceedings of the Legislature when the clauses of an Act of the British Legislature are under construction, it may be taken as well-settled that, although light may be thrown on the scope of a Statute by looking at what Parliament was doing contemporaneously and at the history of the Statute: Hawkins v. Gathercole (18); yet even when words in a Statute are so ambiguous that they may be construed in more than one sense, regard may not be had to the Bill by which it was introduced. Herron v. Rathmines Commissioners (19), nor to what has been said in Parliament: Miller v. Taylor (20), South Eastern Railway Co. v. Ry. Commissioners (21), Rex v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council (22); or elsewhere: Martin v. Hemming (23); Ewart v. Williams (24). The view has been consistently maintained that the Court cannot look at the history of a clause or of the introduction of a proviso: Barbat v. Allen (25); R. v. Capel (26); nor at debates in Parliament, R. v. Whittaker (27); Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter (28) nor at amendments and alterations made in Committees: Donegall v. Layard (29); Attorney-General v. Sillem (30); In Marquis of Donegall v. Layard (29) at page 472*, Lord Campbell observed:

"I must lament that his (Smith, M. R., Ireland) zeal to do justice has led him into enquiries respecting this Act of Parliament which could not legitimately assist him in construing it, and which I think unfortunately induced him to change the sound construction which he had twice before put upon it. Surely, the fifth section ought to receive the same construction, whether it was first introduced in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords, and whether it was introduced in the Committee or on the third reading, and whether it was or was not altered after it was introduced. Nor could the rejection of the clauses moved by Lord Beaumont on behalf of the Marquis of Donegall in any way affect the construction of the clauses which were allowed to form part of the Act when it became law."

In Attorney-General v. Sillem (30), Pollock, C.B., said: "No Court can construe any Statute, and least of all a criminal Statute, by what Counsel are pleased to suggest were alterations made in Committee by a member of Parliament, who was 'no friend to the Bill', even though the Journals of the House should give some sanction to the proposition. This is not one of the modes of discovering the meaning of an Act of Parliament recommended by Plowden or sanctioned by Lord Coke or Blackstone."

Reference may also be made to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in In re Trans-Missouri Freight Association (31), of the Supreme Court of Canada in Gosselin v. R. (32) and of the High Court of Australia in Sydney Municipal Council v. Commonwealth (33). We may also usefully recall the observations of Lord Halsbury in Hilder v. Dexter (34).

"I have more than once had occasion to say that, in construing a Statute, I believe the worst person to construe it is the person who is responsible for its drafting. He is very much disposed to confuse what he intended to do with the effect of the language which, in fact, has been employed. At the time he drafted the Statute, at all events, he may have been under the impression that he had given full effect to what was intended, but he may be mistaken in construing it afterwards, just because what was in his mind was what was intended, though, perhaps, it was not done."

We must further remember that, as pointed out by Farwell, L. J., in Rex v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council (22), we have only to deal with the construction of the Act as printed and published, that is the final word of the Legislature as a whole, and the antecedent debates and subsequent statements of opinion or belief are not admissible. But they would be quite untrustworthy in any case. In the case of an Act dealing with a controversial subject, ambiguous phrases are often used designedly, each side hoping to have thereby expressed its own view, and the belief of each that it has succeeded is more often due to the wish than to any effort of reason. The generality of public understanding is quite incapable of proof and is beside the mark, unless as an appeal to timidity. The principles of construction applicable to Acts of Parliament are well settled; they will be found stated in Stradling v. Morgan (35), which received the approval of Turner, L. J., in *Hawkins v. We hold accordingly that reference could not be made to the Report of the Select Committee, and that even if reference were permissible, the contention of the landlords would not be advanced thereby.

Our conclusion is that in section 50, the term 'rent' cannot be restricted to 'money-rent' and that it bears the meaning attributed to it in section 3, clause (5). The result is that these appeals are allowed and the suits decreed with costs in all the Courts. The hearing fee in this Court will be assessed at one gold mohur in each appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. IX, r. 9—Dismissal for default—Inherent power to restore.

A Court has inherent power to restore a suit dismissed for default.

Bolasisrai Laxminarayan v. Cursondas Damodardas, 53 Ind. Cas. 252; 44 B. 82; 21 Bom. L. R. 952; Somayya v. Subbamma, 26 M. 599 and Lalla Prasad v. Ram Karan, 14 Ind. Cas. 187; 34 A. 426; 9 A. L. J. 666; relied on.

Where a suit has been dismissed in the absence of both parties there is no prejudice to the opposite party if it is restored, and the Court ought to exercise its inherent power in such a case especially if the claim is a substantial claim and would become barred by time if the suit is not restored.

Appeal from an order of the First Munsif, Patna, dated the 8th July 1922.

Mr. K. P. Jaiswal for Mr. Sundar Lal, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. B. K. Sinha and H. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the First Munsif of Patna refusing to restore the petitioners' suit which was dismissed in the absence of both the parties. The ground on which the restoration was sought was that the plaintiff's karpardaz had gone to another Court to get back some account-books to be filed in the present suit; and, as he failed to get them, he went to get a petition for extension of time written and by the time this was done he found that the case was dismissed. The Munsif thought this story improbable, but is not decisive on the point. He thinks, however, that the karpardaz ought to have looked after the case in the first hour and then ought to have gone to take back the account-books and that there was no jurisdiction for his conduct in not looking after the case till 8 A. M. Now the Munsif, although he did not find that there was sufficient cause for the plaintiff's non-appearance which would have required him to restore the suit, does not appear to have considered, whether this was not a case in which to exercise his inherent powers. That there is such a power in the Court has been repeatedly held. See Bilasisrai Laxminarayan v. Cursondas Damodardas (1), Somayya v. Subbamma (2) and Lalla Prasad v. Ram Karan (3). The power, in my opinion, ought certainly to have been exercised in this case for the simple reason that the claim was a substantial claim and would be barred by limitation, if the suit was not restored. The duty of the Court was to do justice between the parties and as the suit had been dismissed

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX,
r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Absence owing to Vakils' mistake—Sufficient cause—Procedure.*

Where on an application to set aside an ex parte decree it appeared that defendants did not appear on the day of hearing partly owing to a mistake of their Vakils and partly owing to their not having received a telegram which had been sent by their Vakils in such time that if it had been received in the normal course, they could have been present at the hearing:

Held, that the defendants had shown sufficient cause for their absence and that the ex parte decree must, therefore, be set aside.

It is contrary to principles of natural justice that cases should be decided on the hearing of one side only if the other side is ready and willing to be heard. In such cases, as a rule, adequate punishment is to be found in the remedy of costs, which not only penalises the party in default but, theoretically, at any rate, indemnifies the other party from the expense which he has been put to by reason of that default.

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated 2nd February 1922, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 664 of 1921.

Messrs. P. Narayana Murti, P. Satyanarayana and K. Rama Murti, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. Rangaramanuja Chariar, R. Srivama Chariar and B. Satyanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is another illustration of what happens when parties do not appear at the time they ought to appear through their own fault or the fault of their legal advisers. A strong case for the plaintiff was put before the learned Judge. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear owing to a mistake of their Vakils, and owing partly to their not having received a telegram which had been sent by their Vakils in such time that, if it had been received in the normal course, he would have got them here on the second day of the hearing. Under those circumstances, in my judgment, it is not right that they should be penalised to the extent of the case being decided against them without their being heard. It is contrary to principles of natural justice that cases should be decided on the hearing of one side only if the other side is ready and willing to be heard. In such cases, as a rule, adequate punishment is to be found in the remedy of costs, which not only penalises the party in default but, theoretically, at any rate, indemnifies the other party from the expense which he has been put to by reason of that default. In these circumstances, in this case, there must be an order setting aside the decree and sending the case back for re-hearing. The costs of the first hearing awarded against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 must be paid by them in any event, and the costs of this appeal must abide the event of re-hearing. The amount paid into Court and security given will remain pending the re-hearing of the suit. Application can be made by the plaintiff to the Original Side, if it is desired, to use the evidence already on record and to adduce further evidence. The evidence to be called on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 will be limited to their own evidence and that of the two attestors to the partition deed. The appellant will get a refund of the Court-fees paid by him for this appeal.

Wallace, J.—I agree.

Mr. A. B. Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. P. Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The second appeal does not lie. The application was an application under O. XXI, r. 90, and two Courts have successively dealt with that application. It is now contended before us by Mr. Lachhmi Narayan Sinha that the Dhanbad Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property, the decree having been passed by the Court of Purulia. We are informed that there was no order transferring the case from the Purulia Court to the Dhanbad Court. Mr. Lachhmi Narayan Sinha may be right or he may be wrong in his contention; but I am clearly of opinion that the objection, if any, should have been taken before the Court proceeded to sell the property. The property having been sold the execution case was at an end; and it cannot now be urged that the question which is raised by Mr. Lachhmi Narayan Sinha is a question that arises in execution.

Mr. Lachhmi Narayan Sinha invited us to treat this appeal as an application, and to hold that the order of the Court below is erroneous. Where the only point is that there was no formal order of transfer by the Purulia Court to the Dhanbad Court it does not seem to us that we ought to invoke our revisional jurisdiction in the matter. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Tort—Joint tortfeasors, liability of—Suit against several tortfeasors—Death of one of them—Procedure.
The liability of wrong-doers in tort is joint and several.

Where a suit is brought to recover damages in respect of a tort and it is discovered that one of the defendants had died before the institution of the suit, the proper procedure is to strike out the name of the defendant who is dead and to allow the suit to proceed against the others.

Petition, under section 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur and Kangra Districts, dated the 18th June 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Kangra, dated the 17th October 1920.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kuweshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought a suit in the Court of the Munsif, Kangra, for damages against several defendants on the allegation that they had stopped the working of a water-mill belonging to the plaintiffs for a considerable period. One of the defendants entered in the plaint was dead before the plaint was filed. On this account the Munsif dismissed the suit in toto, and the order was upheld by the learned District Judge for reasons which it is difficult to follow.

The authorities quoted by the learned District Judge are in no way applicable and it is a trite proposition that the liability of a wrong-doer in tort is joint and several. Counsel for the respondents can show me no other authority for the action of the lower Courts. If one of the several defendants was not alive when the suit was brought, it was perfectly simple to strike his name out and allow the suit to proceed against the others. It would have been quite a different matter if the suit had been filed against a single dead man or against a number of persons bound jointly by an obligation to perform some contract as was the case in Rao Ghulam Muhammad Khan v. Nahar Ali (1), a ruling referred to by the learned District Judge.

The Courts below have clearly failed to exercise the jurisdiction which they possessed to try the suit against the other defendants. I accept the petition, set aside the order dismissing the suit and direct that it shall proceed against those defendants (or their representatives) who were alive when it was filed.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 157 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Cannanore, in Original Suit No. 362 of 1915.

These second appeals came on for hearing on the 3rd December 1920 and the Court (Ayling and Spencer, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Spencer, J.—In these connected second appeals a question of law has been taken wheher a course of devolution of property among females to the exclusion of males is unknown in North Malabar and is repugnant to Marumakkattayam Law as followed by Mappillas in that District. The Subordinate Judge and District Judge who heard the first appeals have come to different conclusions on the point, and the authorities to which the District Judge refers in his judgment are neither clear nor uniform.

In Pudiyapuyayil Bivi Umma v. Keloth Cheriath Kutti (1) an instrument of gift which limited the descent of the property to the female line was held by Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., to be valid. The learned Judges observe that the gift was of the class known as strisothu or hennumula and created an estate known to Marumakkattayam usage. They quote Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (2), a Full Bench case, which is not, however, an authority upon the significance and legality of strisothu gifts. On the other hand in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) Miller and Munro, JJ., refer to a similar gift to females excluding males as being an attempt "to create a perpetual succession confined to females, a course of devolution equally unknown to the Marumakkattayam and to the Muhammadan Law."

(2) 16 M. 201; 2-M. L. J. 226; 5 Ind. Dec. (M. S.) 847.

(3) 1 Ind. Cas. 195; 32 M. 315.

MOHAMMAD KUNHI v. PACKRICHI UMMA:

We might feel bound to follow this ruling, were there not certain observations in the judgment which indicate that the decision turned rather on a question whether the last survivor of a tenancy-in-common created by the gift deed had the power of disposing of the property to the exclusion of the descendants, if any, of the donees, than on the validity of the condition in the gift deed as to the exclusion of the males, which the learned Judges describe as a condition of no real importance.

To a certain extent the statement that the condition in the gift deed excluding males was invalid was thus an obiter dictum.

The District Judge (Mr. Reilly) states in his judgment that he has come across instances in North Malabar of devolution of property being limited to females, and a case of a shrisothu tarwad came before Bakewell, J., and myself in the case reported in Ottaparakal Thazath Soopi v. Charichai Pallikal (4). Such a usage was judicially recognized by Mr. Thompson, the District Judge of the North Malabar, in Appeal Suits Nos. 641 and 647 of 1891 on the file of that Court which came on appeal to the High Court in Second Appeals Nos. 1127 and 1128 of 1892.

In view of the divergence of opinion both in the Courts below and in this Court as to the validity of such a provision occurring in a gift, I think that the question of law as stated above should be referred to a Full Bench of this Court.

Ayling, J.—I agree to the reference proposed by my learned brother, though I should personally be content to simply follow Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3).

These second appeals came on for hearing on the 15th and 16th of March 1921, in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench and stood for consideration till the 24th of March 1921, when the Court (Sir John Wallis, C. J., Spencer, J., and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Opinions appear to be conflicting as to the validity among the Mappillas of North Malabar of a gift of property as strisothu or women's property which, it is said, means a gift to a female and her female descendants only to the exclusion of her male descendants. In Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1892 Mr. Arthur Thompson, the District Judge of Tellichery, expressed an opinion favourable to the legality of such a strisothu disposition but the High Court, Muthuswami Ayyar and Best, JJ., disposed of the case on the ground that the suit of the male karanavan questioning it was barred by limitation.

Collins, C.J., and Parker, J., also regarded such dispositions as valid in Second Appeal No. 932 of 1904 reported as Pudiyapurayil Bivi Umma v. Keloth Cheriya Kutti (1) and in Second Appeal No. 1502 of 1894 with reference to the document now in suit. A deed of this kind came before Miller and Munro, JJ., in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) where the question was whether a gift could be regarded as a gift to the females mentioned therein as tenants-in-common or a gift to the donee and her female descendants as a sort of tavazhi. The Court took the latter view which was sufficient for the disposal of the case. The learned Judges, however, observed incidentally that it had not been contended that the condition of enjoyment could stand so far as it excluded males altogether. For the purposes of the case, it made no difference whether males were excluded or included as the intention to create a tavazhi was clear and that was enough to invalidate a disposition by one of the female donees only. In Ottaparakal Theazath Soopi v. Cherichai Pallikal (4) it was not disputed that a woman, described as the karnavathi, was the manager of the Marumakkattayam tarwad in question which is referred to by the learned Judges as a strisothu tarwad, but the question whether the male members of the family were excluded from ownership as well as from management did not arise. Mr. Menon contended before us that this is the real meaning of a strisothu gift and that that a strisothu tarwad in North Malabar is merely a tarwad in which the right of management is in the senior female instead of in the senior male, according to the system which prevails, in the adjoining District of South Kanara with deference to allyasantana tarwads, and that otherwise the male members of the family have an equal interest with the females in the tarwad property. He also contended that the question had never arisen directly between the female members of a tavazhi claiming under such a gift and the male members. Coming now to the two suits which have given rise to this reference, the District Munsif dealing with both suits purported to follow Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3), and held that Mar akkattayam usage only knew of tarwads and tavazhis and that its conception of a tarwad or a tavazhi is, that it consists of a female common ancestor and her descendants, male and female in the female line, and that a tarwad or tavazhi consisting of females only to the exclusion of male descendants of females was a thing so far unrecognized by Marumakkattayam usage. The appeal in one suit came before the District Judge, Mr. Reilly, and the appeal in the other before the Subordinate Judge, the late Mr. K. V. Karunakara Menon. The latter observed in his judgment that it had rightly been conceded before him that the gift-deed did not exclude males from participating in the income of the properties and that all that was contended for was that the right of management was in the females. This contention he rejected observing that in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) a gift like this had been held to create a tavazhi consisting of males and females and that the present gift must be taken to have been made to a tavazhi consisting of males and females. In the other appeal, the District Judge, Mr. Reilly, took a completely different view and held that Exhibit B created what was sometimes known as a strisothu tarwad or tavazhi consisting of a woman and her female descendants who alone have the right of management and that it was unnecessary to consider whether the male descendants would have any right of maintenance. He regarded the observations of Miller and Munro, JJ., in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) as the obiter dicta of Judges whose experience had laid in the South and not in North Malabar, the usages of which vary in several respects. He further observed that instances in which the devolution of properties was confined to the females of a family had come to his own knowledge among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar and that he understood that course of devolution was recognised in South Kanara. Accordingly, he held that the male members of the family were not entitled to question the sale by the female members under Exhibit 1.

As we regard the decisions and other materials before us as inconclusive, we have decided, before disposing of the reference, to call for a finding from the District Judge of North Malabar in Second Appeal No. 1493 of 1919, in which the question necessarily arises, as to whether, according to the custom or usage prevailing among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar, property may be settled as strisothu on the female members of a tarwad or tavazhi to the exclusion of the males, or so as at least to authorize the female members to sell the family property otherwise than for the necessary tarwad purposes without the consent of the males. Fresh evidence may be taken. Finding will be submitted in two months after the local vacation. Seven days will be allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of North Malabar submitted the following

FINDING:—I have been directed to submit a finding on the following issue, viz., whether, according to the custom or usage prevailing among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar, property may be settled as strisothu on the female members of a tarwad or tavazhi to the exclusion of the males, or so as at least to authorize the female members to sell the family property otherwise than for necessary tarwad purposes without the consent of the males. The order of the High Court allowed further evidence to be taken but neither side has chosen to avail itself of this opportunity. This appeal was posted to the 25th July 1921 and as the order of the High Court was passed on the 24th March 1921 the parties had four months' time to get ready with their evidence and to take steps for the production of evidence if they thought it necessary. The appellant had cited two witnesses and the latter were present in Court; nevertheless, the appellant's Vakils declined to examine them. The respondents have not taken any steps to summon witnesses and for production of documents and no explanation was offered for the omission to do so in the long interval of four months. The Vakils for both parties represented that they were not ready and orally applied for an adjournment on this ground. I refused to grant an adjournment as the appellant's witnesses were ready and as the respondents had taken no steps and failed to explain the omission to do so. The parties had more than sufficient time to get their evidence ready if they really desired to let in evidence. Not a single document has been produced on either side. I cannot believe that four months are not enough for producing documents or for taking other steps. No affidavit was put in by either side in support of the oral application for adjournment; in fact, beyond a mere statement by the Vakils that they are not ready, no reason was put forward for the grant of an adjournment. The Vakils did not even address any arguments in support of their case. The matter is thus left in the same state as it was before remand and there has been no addition to the material on which a finding is to be based. In this state of the case it is not necessary to deal with the issue remitted to me for a finding at any considerable length.

2. All the cases in which the present question arose have been cited in the order of remand. There is no case earlier than Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1892 in which the District Judge, Mr. A. Thompson, pronounced in favour of the legality of a strisothu disposition; the High Court, however, did not decide whether the District Judge's view was right or not. One would expect that if such disposition of the properties confined exclusively to females and their female descendants were sanctioned by usage there would have been earlier instances available for reference. A usage of which no trace is visible till 1892, i.e., about 30 years ago, cannot be regarded as an ancient usage. Then come Second Appeal No. 1502 of 1894 and Second Appeal No. 932 of 1904; the former is not a reported case and the latter was reported only in (1910) Madras Weekly Notes. [Pudiyapurayil Bivi Umma v. Keloth Cheriya Kutti (1)]. But before this report, it was held in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3), a case reported in authorised Law Reports in 1909 (I. L. R. 32 Madras 315) that such devolution was equally unknown to the Marumakkattayam and to the Muhammadan Law. It would thus appear that till 1910, so far as reported decisions went, such dispositions of property were not regarded as valid or supported by usage. The only case subsequent to Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) in which reference to a strisothu tarwad is found is Ottaparakal Thazath. Soopi v. Charichai Pallikal (4). That case merely shows that the right of a woman described as karnavathi of a strisothu tarwad to manage the family properties was not disputed by the junior members. The case is, moreover, a very recent one and cannot be regarded as evidence of ancient usage. It may be one of the attempts to create strisothu tarwads referred to by Miller and Munro, J.J., in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3).

I am of opinion, after careful consideration, that the instances that can be relied upon in support of the existence of the usage among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar which allows the constitution of strisothu tarwads are too few and too recent to constitute evidence of such a usage as would justify its recognition by Courts of Law. They merely show that attempts were being made in comparatively recent times to bring strisothu tarwads into existence and nothing more. They do not show that such tarwads are sanctioned or recognized by ancient usage. Even the very meaning of the term "strisothu tarwad" seems to be uncertain. According to one view, it is merely a tarwad in which the senior female is the manager and there is no exclusion of the male members, vide the contention of Mr. Menon before the Full Bench. The other view is to the effect, that it is a tarwad exclusively composed of females and their female descendants and the male members of the family are not members of such a tarwad and have no interest in its property. If strisothu tarwads are so well known as they are said to be, and if they are sanctioned by ancient usage it is not likely that a difference of opinion would exist on this most vital point. I have not been able to get access to the decisions in the cases above referred to which are not reported in the authorized Law Reports and I cannot, therefore, say which of these two views was adopted by the High Court in those cases. It is clear, however, that the latter view was adopted in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) and it would seem that the opposite view was taken in Oottaparakal Thazath Soopi v. Charichai Pallikal (4) as the interest of the male members in the property of the strisothu tarwad in that case seems to have been assumed to exist. If the view adopted in Kunhamina v. Kunhambi (3) is the true view, then, I do not see with what reason it can be urged that a tarwad composed exclusively of females and their female descendants is one known to Marumakkattayam usage. There is nothing to show that such tarwads exist among the Nayars in North Malabar; and, after all, it is among the Nayars that we might expect to find Marumakkattayam notions holding supreme sway. In the case of the Mappillas the rules of the Muhammadan Law must have, to some extent, worked in opposition to Marumakkattayam notions, and it cannot be said that the former would lend more countenance to a purely female tarwad or a family group composed exclusively of females than the latter. It is no doubt a matter of pure conjecture but it may, nevertheless, be mentioned, that it is prima facie unlikely that the notion of a strisothu tarwad composed exclusively of females would have found favour with the Mappilla community when such a notion did not find favour with the Nayar and other Hindu Communities in North Malabar governed by Marumakkattayam Law. If the other view is the true one, viz., that a strisothu tarwad differs from an ordinary tarwad only in one point, viz., that the right of management is vested in the senior female in the former while it is vested in the senior male in the latter, then what is really asserted is not the existence of a general usage recognising strisothu tarwads or tavazhis but the existence of a particular custom prevailing in particular tarwads or tavazhis according to which the right of management is vested in the senior female member instead of the senior male. Such a particular custom has been recognised in the case of some families, e. g., some of the Kovilagoms in South Malabar; but a custom of this sort which applies to particular families must be proved by instances in which the custom has been followed in such families and not by quoting instances of other families to which such a custom applies. There is no such evidence in this case and no attempt has been made to prove the custom according to law.

4. I may add, in conclusion, that in a case which came before me last year, Appeal Suit No. 43 of 1920, I followed the ruling in Kunhamini v. Kunhambi (3) and I have not since then discovered any reason for changing my views on this point. That ruling is the only decision on the point, so far as my knowledge goes, which has been reported in the authorised Law Reports, and, if I may be permitted to say so, apart from the weight that should be given even to the obiter dicta of Miller and Munro, JJ., who decided that case, my own experience has shown that these dicta accurately described the real state of affairs. Strisothu tarwads in the sense of tarwads composed exclusively of females are really unknown to Malabar usage but attempts have been made in recent times here and there to bring such tarwads into existence by individuals with the object of minimising the chances of alienation or dissipation of family property—the idea being that females are less likely to alienate or dissipate family property, than males. They seem to have thought that it was permissible by act of parties to create a perpetual succession not recognised by usage or law in spite of the ruling of the Privy Council reported in Purna Sashi Bhattacharji v. Kalidhan Rai Chowdhury (5), and it may be that they expected to succeed in their attempt in view of the enforcement by Courts of provisions in family karars relating to management of family properties in spite of their being inconsistent with, or contrary to, the general principles of Marumakkattayam usage.

and law. It is needless, however, to speculate on the motives which led to such attempts or to determine the extent to which the attempts succeeded. The fact that such attempts have been made in recent times with some degree of success is not only no proof of established usage but it even goes to show that they were at variance with long established usage. The characteristic of a binding custom or usage is that it is a long and generally observed course of conduct. It has been happily remarked that the mode in which such habitual courses of action are formed and established is like the mode in which a path is formed—across a common. One man crosses the common in the direction suggested by convenience or accident and if many others follow in the same track a path is made. In this particular case I should say that a few only have followed in the track and the path has not yet been made. The Courts cannot affix their imprimatur to a custom which is as yet in the making and has not gathered strength or sanctity by long continued observance. The custom alleged is neither ancient nor certain. The moment has certainly not yet arrived for putting the stamp of judicial authentication on it.

5. For the reasons given above, I am of opinion that there is no usage or custom among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar which allows the settlement of property on groups composed exclusively of females and their female descendants to the exclusion of the males or authorises the female members to sell the family property otherwise than for necessary family purposes without the consent of the males. My finding, therefore, on the issue remitted by the High Court is in the negative.

Second Appeal No. 1493 of 1919 and Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 3244 of 1921 praying for an order that, for the reasons stated in the accompanying affidavit, the said second appeal may be sent down again to the lower Appellate Court for adducing evidence on the issue referred by this Court in its order, dated 24th March 1921, and that a further time of 3 months may be granted for the submission of a fresh finding, coming on for hearing on the 5th December 1921, after the return of the above finding of the lower Appellate Court, upon perusing the grounds of appeals, the judgments and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of the first instance, the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the said issue, and Memorandum of Objections to the said finding, and upon perusing the petition and the affidavit filed in support thereof, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. B. Pocher, for the Petitioners in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 3244 of 1921 (Respondents Nos. 5, 7, 9 and 12 in S. A. No. 1493 of 1919) and of Mr. K. P. Menon, for the Respondent in the said C. M. P. No. 3244 of 1921 (Appellant in the said S. A. No. 1493 of 1919), this Court made the following ORDER.—Seeing that both sides were not ready on July 25th and applied for an adjournment and that the time allowed for returning a finding did not expire till August 18th, we think that the District Judge might properly have granted an adjournment.

Considering the importance of the question at issue, we are not inclined to decide it on the materials on record and we direct the District Judge to give the parties another opportunity for adducing evidence.

Time for returning a fresh finding is extended to two months from this date. Fifth, 7th, 9th and 12th Respondents in Second Appeal No. 1493 of 1919 will pay the costs of this hearing in this Court.

Ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the above order of this Court, the District Judge of North Malabar submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed to give the parties in this case another opportunity for adducing evidence and to submit a fresh finding on the question,—

Whether, according to the custom or usage prevailing among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas of the North Malabar, property may be settled as strisothu on the female members of tarwad or tavazhi to the exclusion of the males or so as at least to authorise the female members to sell the family property otherwise than for necessary tarwad purposes without the consent of the males.

2. Two witnesses each have been examined on either side and Exhibits II to XI filed on the side of the contesting defendants and Exhibits C to L, on the other side. The burden lies on the contesting defendants to establish the alleged custom or usage. Exhibits II to XI are the copies of gift-deeds, Wills and partition-deeds the parties to which are Mappillas; but it is not established by oral evidence that they are all governed by Marumakkattayam Law. The oral evidence actually adduced relates only to Exhibits II and III. As regards Exhibit II it is the very document which was considered by Miller and Munro, J.J., in Kunhamini v. Kunhambi (3) and it was decided in that case that the condition in that document excluding males from enjoyment cannot be given effect to; in other words, Exhibit II is a document which is not acted upon so far as the condition in question is concerned and it cannot, therefore, be relied upon as evidence of the alleged usage; on the other hand, it is one of the attempts that failed. Exhibit C may also be referred to in this connection; the oral evidence shows that it relates to one of the properties covered by Exhibit II and two of the females to whom the document was executed were the grand-children of one of the donees under Exhibit II and one Kunhammad mentioned in Exhibit C is the son of the same donee. Exhibit C provides that a portion of the rent due thereunder should be paid to Kunhammad for the purpose of putting an end to the dispute between Kunhammad and his nieces. In short, Exhibit C shows that Kunhammad was allowed to enjoy a portion of the income derived from one of the properties gifted under Exhibit II. It is clear, therefore, that Exhibit II affords no support to the contention of the contesting defendants. As regards Exhibit III, the witness who speaks to it is the grandson of the donor; he says no doubt that he has no right to the properties gifted under Exhibit III, but he admits that this is what he learnt after making inquiries of learned men, viz., Vakils. Finally, he admits that his

"tarwad" follows Makkattayam. Exhibit III cannot, therefore, be relied upon as evidence of any custom or usage prevailing among Marumakkattayam Mappillas. As regards the other documents, Exhibits IV to XI, there is no oral evidence at all and it is impossible to be certain that the parties to those documents were Marumakkattayam Mappillas. On the other hand, the evidence of P. W. No. 2 shows that the executant of Exhibit IX was a follower of Makattayam. It is doubtful, therefore, whether these documents are relevant for the purpose of the present inquiry. The majority of these documents are comparatively recent, e.g., Exhibit IV of 1912, Exhibits IX of 1918, Exhibit VIII of 1920 and Exhibits X and XI of 1921. Exhibits VIII to XI are subsequent to the filing of this appeal and Exhibit X is subsequent to my original finding. It is thus seen that not one of the documents filed on the side of the contesting defendants has been proved to relate to any valid transaction between Marumakkattayam Mappillas which has been acted upon. There is thus no evidence whatever of the alleged custom or usage; it is surely remarkable that such worthless evidence alone should be forthcoming in spite of the repeated opportunities afforded to the contesting defendants to adduce evidence. It seems to me as if this evidence, if evidence it may be called, has been put forward not with any real belief that it will be accepted by any Court as sufficient evidence of an alleged custom or usage but merely for the purpose of justifying the indulgence shown to the contesting defendants in the matter of adducing evidence. I am even inclined to doubt whether they really believe in the existence of the alleged custom or usage, as the evidence adduced by them in support of it in spite of the opportunities granted to them is so "shabby." There is really no other epithet that will meet the case than "shabby." If, as Mr. Thomson observed in 1892 (vide the papers in Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1892), "it is not uncommon in Malabar for property to be assigned to females and to descendants of the female children of the assignees to the exclusion of the males of the family" and if, as observed by Mr. Reilly in his judgment in this appeal, "instances in which the devolution of certain property is confined to the females of a family have come to my own notice among Marumakkattayam Mappillas of North Malabar," one would reasonably expect much better evidence than this to be adduced in support of the alleged custom or usage. The evidence is so scanty and so worthless that it seems to me to be a clear case of parturitum montes nascetur ridiculus mus.

3. It seems hardly worth while, in view of the hopelessly unsatisfactory evidence adduced in support of the alleged custom or usage, to deal with the evidence on the other side at any length. Much documentary evidence cannot be expected to prove a negative. Exhibit D is a gift-deed executed by Tiyyas and the evidence of P. W. No. 1 has reference to it. The relevancy of this evidence to the present inquiry is, to say the least, extremely doubtful. The relevancy of the present remaining documents Exhibits E, F and H to L is also very doubtful. In Exhibit G, a judgment of Mr. N. S. Brodie, dated 16th July 1901, there is a reference to "strisothu" of "female properties" of which the 5th defendant, a male, is manager under the karar which constituted the strisothu. This is an instance of so-called strisothu properties managed by a male member of the family. The plaintiff's Vakil has also referred me to the observation in Maliya Kalakath Bava v. Pathumma (6) by Sundara Ayyar and Sadasiva Ayyar, JJ., who both had special opportunities of acquiring a first hand knowledge of Marumakkattayam customs and usages, to the effect that the tenure of the property by which the female children and their female issue would alone be entitled to the properties is one unknown either to the Muhammadan Law and to the Marumakkattayam Law by which some Muhammadans of Malabar are governed.

4. This completes the discussion of the evidence adduced in the case after remand. I have no doubt whatever that the existence of the alleged custom or usage has not been established by the evidence. The custom or usage set up in this case is not a custom prevailing in a particular family but a usage prevailing among the Marumakkattayam Mappillas generally in North Malabar; in other words, a usage which is a part and parcel of general Marumakkattayam usage which has the force of law, a usage which constitutes the general law applicable to a community at large. The question thus seems to be really a question of law. In this connection I may refer to the observations in Illikka Pakramar v. Kutti Kunhamed (7) and the two earlier cases Eranjoli Illath Vishnu Nambudri v. Eranjoli Illath Krishnan Nambudri (8) and Vayalidada v. Appu (9) cited therein, where the test and the standard to which the evidence adduced to support an alleged usage should conform are given. The evidence in this case does not, in my opinion, come up at all to the standard expected in cases of this kind. I may also observe that, so far as I know, no reference to this alleged usage is to be found in any standard treatise dealing with Malabar custom or Marumakkattayam usages such as Logan's Manual, Sir Thomas Strange's report on Moore's Malabar Law and Custom, and, on the other hand, the existence of this alleged usage seems to be excluded by implication. I find it difficult to believe that no mention of it would have been made in any of the books dealing with Malabar, if, as a matter of fact, strisothu tavazhis of this kind have always existed. As to the degree of proof required to warrant the Court in recognizing as Customary Law a usage at variance with the law, reference may be made to the ruling in Sivananjan Perumal v. Mutthu Ramalinga (10).

I have already discussed this question in its general aspect in my finding dated 27th July 1921, and I do not think it necessary to repeat here what I have said therein. It is enough to say that I adhere to what I have said therein and that the evidence adduced subsequent thereto does not lead me to reconsider what I have said already. It is curious that every one of the cases in which this question was raised is one in which the source of the so-called "strisothu" tavazhi can be traced directly to a document, i. e., to the act of the parties, and there is no case in which the source ould not so be traced and had to be found in general usage. I hope I have made myself sufficiently clear. What I mean is that there is no "strisothu," tavazhi whose source is buried in antiquity and cannot be ascertained. In every case it is traced to a document which constitutes the tavazhi and it is grounded on that document. In every case we see an attempt to create such a tavazhi and in no case do we see such a tavazhi existing from time out of memory. Such attempts do not, in my opinion, constitute a usage having the force of law. The manner in which custom is transformed into a law and enforced as such is really the subject-matter of general jurisprudence and Jurists are not agreed on the point. One school holds that the State through its delegates, the Judges, grants recognition as law to such customs as come up to a certain standard of general reception and usefulness.....not merely prospectively from the date of such recognition but also retrospectively; so far implying that the custom was law before it received the stamp of judicial authentication." There is on the other side the opposing school headed by Savigny and Püchta who hold that the growth of law has no dependence upon an arbitrary will or accident but "is begotten in the people (Volk) by the popular intelligence (Volksgeist)." It is an interesting topic no doubt but I do not suppose I am expected to discuss it and decide whether the earlier decisions—Second Appeal No. 1127 of 1892, Second Appeal No. 1502 of 1894 and Second Appeal No. 932 of 1904—granted recognition to this custom and transformed it into law; "non nostrum tantas componere lites" is all that I can say on the point. I would, however, reiterate my conviction that strisothu tarwads or tavazhis of this kind are really unknown to Marumakkattayam usage and are even inconsistent with its basic principles and that what has happened in the past is nothing more than attempts made to create such tavazhis—some of which ended in success and others in failure—with the object of minimising the chances of alienation or dissipation of property as far as human ingenuity could do. Women are, so to speak, acquisitive and centripetal forces in a family tending to the preservation of property in the family, while men are dissipative and centrifugal forces tending to the contrary, and hence the expedient of tying up property by executing documents constituting strisothu tavazhi, and hinc illae lachrymae and protestations that such tavazhis are allowed by Marumakkattayam usage. This, in my opinion, is really what has taken place and nothing more; what is really sought to carry the theory of freedom of contract to its extreme length, but an attempt is made to camouflage this object by pleading an alleged custom or usage which recognises strisothu tavazhis.

6. For the reasons given above and in my previous finding, I am of opinion that the question remitted to me must be answered in the negative and I find it in the negative accordingly.

Mr. K. P. Menon, for the Appellant in S. A. No. 1493 of 1919 and Respondents in S. A. No. 506 of 1919.

Mr. B. Pocker, for the Respondents in S. A. No. 1493 of 1919 and for the Appellant, in S. A. No. 506 of 1919.

These second appeals came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

OPINION.—In calling upon the District Judge to record evidence of a custom or usage prevailing in Malabar of males being excluded from tarwads or tavazhis managed exclusively by females of certain Marumakkattayam Mappillas, we discussed in some detail all the decisions in which such a custom might be said to have been judicially recognised or its recognition refused, and we stated that we regarded them as inconclusive. The District Judge was, therefore, asked to return a finding on such evidence as might be produced before him to prove the existence of the particular custom in question. This he has done, and we agree with him in holding that it is wholly inadequate to prove the prevalence of any custom by which males are treated as having no right to be consulted in the management of the affairs of the tarwad or tavazhi and no right to participate in the income of the tarwad or tavazhi properties. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to the existence of tarwads in which the manager or kar-navathi is a female.

We, therefore, answer the Reference made to us in the affirmative.

Hindu Law—Joint property—Partition—Separate acquisition—Exclusion from partition—Burden of proof—Sole occupation by one co-sharer, if constitutes ouster—Adoption, proof of—Judgments—Substance of pleadings narrated in judgment, whether evidence.

The acquisition of a property in the name of one of the brothers forming a Hindu joint family is not even prima facie evidence that the property was obtained by that brother for himself. Where there has been a partition among the members of a Hindu joint family, the presumption is that no property was excluded from the partition; and the burden lies upon him who alleges exclusion to establish his assertion. [p. 681, cols. 1 & 2.]

Separate possession of a property by one member of a Hindu joint family is not conclusive evidence of partition and must be interpreted in the light of all the circumstances of the case. [p. 682, col. 2.]

The sole occupation by one co-sharer, of a portion of joint property, does not constitute an ouster of the other co-sharers; and a co-sharer in possession of a portion of the common land, with the tacit or express consent of his co-sharers, cannot change the nature of that possession. [p. 683, col. 1.]

The onus of proving an adoption is on the party setting it up. But very slight evidence may be sufficient for this purpose, where the alleged adopted son has been treated as such for a long series of years. [p. 683, col. 1.]

Judgments narrating the substance of the pleadings of the parties to a litigation furnish evidence of the allegations made by them on that occasion. [p. 681, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 21st September, 1917.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, Babus Braja Lal Chuckerbutty, Jatindra Mohan Chaudhuri, Prakash Chandra Pakrasi, Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, Hamendra Nath Basu, Indu Bhusan Biswas and Dines Chandra Ray, for the Appellants.

Babus Joges Chandra Ray, Mahendra Nath Ray, Gobinda Chandra De Roy, Annada Charan Karkun, Birendra Kumar De and Prafulla Chandra Nag, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals are directed against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition of joint property. The subject-matter of the litigation is described in the plaint as Chak Nagergati; the plaintiffs assert that this is also known as Rajballavpore, but is a revenue-free lekhrāj and does not appertain to sikmi taluk Rajballavpore within Zemindaris bearing Touzi Nos. 4082, 138, 139 and 141 of the Collectorate of Mymensingh. The disputed block of land which covers about 75 bighas is said to have been formerly the Khanabari of four brothers, Krishnaprasad Nag, Debiprasad Nag, Kalikaprasad Nag and Sambhunath Nag, sons of one Aditya Ram Nag. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 represent the branch of Krishnaprasad Nag and defendants Nos. 5 to 7 represent the branch of Shambhunath Nag. The plaintiffs claim 8-annas share in the khanabari, 4-annas as representing the branch of Debiprasad Nag and 4-annas as acquired by adverse possession against the representatives of Kalikaprasad Nag. According to the plaintiffs, the khanabari included three kinds of lands, namely, first, the entire Nagergathi lekhrāj; secondly, brahmattar lands obtained in exchange for a parcel known as Haruar Bhita; and, thirdly, other lands not specifically defined. Whether or not the third class was left undefined on purpose, it is plain that this has created considerable embarrassment in the investigation of the claim. The four brothers previously mentioned separated in or about the year 1781; but it is alleged that the homestead was never formally divided; though the co-owners have occupied different portions separately for convenience for over a century and have built houses thereon. The plaintiffs, consequently, seek partition of the lands which were so left joint. Their claim, it is conceded, is not supported by the Record-of-Rights which does not show the lands as joint property or as lekhrāj. This, however, admittedly does not debar an enquiry into the true character of the lands. The defendants deny in substance that the lands are joint lekhrāj, and they urge that the claim is barred by limitation. They also raise questions as to acquisition of title by adverse possession and challenge the validity of the title of the father of the plaintiff as the adopted son of Gāngadhar Nag, the son of Debiparsad Nag. Questions were further raised as to the validity of conveyances relied upon by some of the defendants. A Commissioner was appointed to hold a local enquiry and to prepare a map with special reference to a chitta made by Rai Bahadur Tarachand Ghose, a Deputy Collector, in connection with resumption proceedings which took place in 1842. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the case put forward by each side was only partially true, and that plots Nos. 2, 3, 6 and 7 of the chitta of Tarachand Ghose as shown in the map of the Pleader Commissioner, were still joint properties of the parties, liable to be partitioned at their instance. He has further found that the share of the plaintiffs was 6-annas, that of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, 4-annas, that of the defendants Nos. 5 to 7, 4-annas, and that of the defendant No. 8 ka, 2-annas. The Subordinate Judge has accordingly made a preliminary decree for partition of the four plots and has dismissed the suit with regard to the rest of the lands which are not joint properties. Three appeals have been preferred against this decree, namely, Appeal No. 2 by defendant No. 3, Appeal No. 17 by defendants Nos. 5, 6 and 7, and Appeal No. 30 by defendant No. 8 ka. There were cross-objections in some of these cases, but they have not been pressed. We are consequently not called upon to consider, whether the plaintiffs should have been granted further relief; we have only to examine, whether the decree made in their favour can be maintained.

KAILAS CHANDRA NAG v. BIJAY CHANDRA NAG:

The primary question for consideration is, whether the plaintiffs have established their title to the disputed lands or to any portion thereof as joint property. The earliest document directly relevant to the point is a list of sanads of lekhrāj lands, filed on the 11th March 1796, presumably under Regulation XLVIII of 1793, which shows the existence of 7 kurs or 21 bighas of lekhrāj in Chak Nagerganthi under a sanad dated the 28th June, 1766. This stood in the name of Krishnaprasad Nag, one of the four brothers already mentioned. This is not even prima facie evidence that the lekhrāj was obtained by Krishnaprasad Nag, for himself, from Suryanarayan Chaudhuri and Kritinarayan Chaudhuri, because at the time of acquisition the family was still joint: Luximon v. Mullar (1), Prit Koer v. Mahadeo Pershad Singh (2), Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (3), Rampershad Tewarry v. Sheochurn Doss (4), Umrithnath Chowdhry v. Goureenath Chowdhry (5). But as, after acquisition, there was a partition among the members of the family in 1781, there is no presumption with regard to this or any other property, that it was excluded from the partition; and the burden lies upon him who alleges exclusion, to establish his assertion: Narayan v. Nana (6). The plaintiff has sought to discharge this onus by evidence of a later date which has an important bearing on the matter. We have papers of a litigation which took place in 1825 between the predecessors of the parties to this suit. The judgments of the Trial Court and the Appellate Court, but not the pleadings, are available. The substance of the pleadings is, however, narrated in the judgments, and they furnish evidence of the allegations made by the parties on that occasion; see Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (7), Bhaya Dirguj v. Pande Fateh Bahadoor Ram (8) Byathamma v. Avulla (9), Thama v. Kondar (10), Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rajagopala Ayyangar (11), *Malcomson v. KAILAS CHANDRA NAG v. BIJAY CHANDRA NAG.

The summary of the pleadings, as given in the judgments, shows that the dispute related to the piece of land which the parties got in exchange for Haruar Bhita and that they admitted that the main part of the khanabari, that is, where their residences were built, appertained to lekhray Nagerganthi. The importance of the judgments lies in the fact that it enables us to locate the lekhray Nagerganthi, with some approach to certainty, from the admission made by the parties to that suit. The judgment of the Appellate Court shows that the khanabari was alleged to be covered by the sanad in the name of Krishnaprasad Nag, dated 28th June 1766, which was distinct from the Adityaram taluk under sanad dated 19th June 1748. It is not possible, however, from the summary of the pleadings in these judgments alone, to locate the lands, because no mention is made of the boundaries of the disputed lekhray. For this purpose, the Subordinate Judge has relied upon the resumption proceedings of 1842, where reference is made to the map mentioned in the list of sanads dated 11th March 1796. A chitta was made in that proceeding by the Amin Biswanath Datta, on the 30th May 1840, which showed Mouza Nagerganthi as distinct from Mouza Rajballavpore. The matter was referred to the Deputy Collector Tarachand Ghose, and his robokari dated 23rd April 1842, is on the record. The Deputy Collector negatived the claim for resumption on the ground that the area was less than 50 bighas, and this view was, no doubt, not accepted by the superior Revenue Authorities. But this does not take away from the value of his investigation. He measured the disputed lands in the presence of all the parties concerned, and he came to the conclusion that, out of ten plots, only six plots, namely, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6 and 7 which measured about 13 kurs and odd, that is, nearly 40 bighas, constituted lekhray Nagerganthi. The original area of the lekhray was, as we have seen, seven kurs or 21 bighas, and the lekhraydars had evidently annexed other lands not comprised in the grant. They naturally denied the lekhray and alleged that the lands belonged to their other taluks, so as to escape resumption and assessment of revenue. The representatives of the parties admitted their joint possession in respect of plots Nos. 2, 3, 6, 7, though not in respect of Nos. 1, 4, 5, 8. The Subordinate Judge has from this concluded that these were not lekhray or joint property. We pass on next to the proceedings of the Thak Survey of 1856. The evidence does not establish conclusively the presence of the Nags at the time of the Survey, though the very fact of previous disputes and the resumption proceedings would render their absence highly improbable. Thak Chak No. 27 covers the lands, which are treated as comprised in the shikmi taluks of the Nags. This could not be correct, and it is significant that the very existence of the resumption proceedings of 1842 was suppressed; in the face of the Taidad of 11th March, 1796, and of the admissions made in the suit of 1825, it is difficult to see how the entry could have been made in the form it took, if the resumption proceedings had not been kept in the back ground. In the suit of 1825, the main homestead portion, but not the fringe area, was admitted to be joint, though the parties were in occupation of different portions. As explained by this Court in Kulada Prosad Tewary v. Sadhu Charan (15) and Anand Kisore Chowdhury v. Daiji Thakurain (16), separate possession is not conclusive evidence of partition and must be interpreted in the light of all the circumstances of the case. In our opinion, the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the disputed land is not joint property in its entirety and that plots Nos. 2, 3, 6, 7 alone, of the chitta of Tarachand Ghose, constitute joint property still capable of partition. The plaintiffs cannot successfully claim partition of the remaining plots, and the appeal by the third defendant must also fail.

The fifth and seventh defendants, who have preferred a separate appeal, claim, in addition to their 4-annas share, specific lands based on title by compromise with a previous owner; they further challenge the validity of the adoption of Gurucharan Nag, the father of the plaintiffs. These allegations are entirely unfounded. The adoption took place nearly a century ago, in or about the year 1823. The person, whose adoption is challenged, enjoyed the status of an adopted son all his life, but at this distance of time direct evidence cannot be expected. No doubt, as stated by Lord Atkinson in Kishori Lal v. Chunni Lal (17), the onus of proving an adoption is on the party setting it up. But very slight evidence may be sufficient for this purpose, where the alleged adopted son has been treated as such for a long series of years. In Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (18), where a question arose as to the factum of an adoption alleged to have been made nearly half a century before suit, the Judicial Committee held that the Trial Court was right in holding the adoption proved, when, in the absence of direct evidence of much value, it appeared that the alleged adopted son had, without controversy, succeeded to his father's estate and enjoyed it till his death, and, further, that transactions during and after his death took place on the footing of the adoption. The allegation of title by adverse possession is not more promising. The sole occupation by one co-sharer, of a portion of joint property, does not constitute an ouster of the other co-sharers; and a co-sharer in possession of a portion of the common land, with the tacit or express consent of his co-sharers, cannot change the nature of that possession; see the judgment of Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (19) and of Lord Buckmaster in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (20); see also Lokenath Singh v. Dhwakeshwar Prosad Narayan Singh (21) and Israil v. Samset Rahman (22). In our opinion, there is no substance in the appeal preferred by defendants Nos. 5 and 7.

The defendant No. 8 ka, who also has preferred a separate appeal, has pressed the question raised in the tenth issue, namely, whether the conveyance set up by him covers the land in suit, and whether it is valid or void for want of consideration and for undue influence. The conveyance was executed on the 14th November, 1910 by one Harinath Bose for about one-tenth of the real value of the property. The Subordinate Judge has found that there was in fact no consideration at all for the conveyance, and that it was secured by the exercise of undue influence. The evidence has been placed before us, and we feel no doubt that the Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the document was really obtained on false pretences and was not operative to transfer title.

Upon a scrutiny of all the materials, our conclusion is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is amply supported by the evidence on the record and cannot be successfully impeached. The appeals and cross-objections are all dismissed, and the parties will pay their own costs in this Court.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 379 TO 383 OF 1921.

February 12, 1923.

versus

SRINIVASA MUDALIAR—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) ss. 13 (3), 32 (3)—Waram rent—Muchilka for money rent for stated period—Ryot undertaking to cultivate under Amani rules—Tender of fresh pattah containing waram rent, whether necessary—Waram rent, whether enhancement of rent.

VARADA REDDY v. SRINIVASA MUDALIAR.

Under the Madras Estates Land Act, a landholder is always entitled to revert to the waram system unless the ryots establish that it has been superseded permanently by the cash system by contract, express or implied, between them and the landholder. [p. 684, col. 2.]

Ayyaperumal Odayan v. Ramasami Chettiar, 30 Ind. Cas. 983; 29 M. L. J. 362; 2 L. W. 650; (1915) M. W. N. 614, Muthiah Chettiar v. Periyar Cone, 55 Ind. Cas. 78; 11 L. W. 311; (1920) M. W. N. 15; 27 M. L. T. 226, followed.

The fact that for several years the ryots paid money rents under specific contracts in term pattas for stated periods on varying rates would only show the existence of special contracts remaining in force in particular years and not that the waram system was permanently given up. [p. 684, col. 2, p. 685, col. 1.]

Where in a muchilika providing for money rent for a period, the ryots undertook that, after the expiry of the period fixed under it, they would cultivate the land under the Amani Rules:

Held, that the landholder was entitled to revert to the waram system after the expiry of the period fixed without tendering a fresh pattah under section 52 of the Madras Estates Land Act providing for waram rent. [p. 685, col. 1.]

Under the Madras Estates Land Act, no prior tender or exchange of patta or muchilika is necessary to entitle a landholder to sue for rent. [p. 685, col. 2.]

The second part of clause (3) of section 52 of the Madras Estates Land Act is only a corollary to the first part and where the latter does not apply, the former is also inapplicable. [p. 685, col. 2.]

The phrase "Amani system" means waram tenure as opposed to rokkam tenure. [p. 685, col. 2.]

Muthiah Chettiar v. Periyar Kone, 55 Ind. Cas. 78; 11 L. W. 311; (1920) M. W. N. 15; 27 M. L. T. 226, followed.

Under the waram system, the landholder is entitled to a share in all the produce of the land unless there is a special contract to the contrary exempting any particular crop, and his claim to share in all the crops does not amount to an enhancement of rent and section 13 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act does not apply to such a case. A landholder is, therefore, entitled to waram even in second crop on the lands though raised by the tenants with the aid of their own well water without taking the landholder's water. [p. 685, col. 2.]

Second Appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suits Nos. 82, 84, 85, 95 and 96 of 1919, preferred against that of the Court of the Revenue Divisional Officer, Chingleput, in Summary Suits Nos. 72, 75, 86 and 87 of 1918 respectively.

Messrs. B. Somayya and S. Varada Chariar, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These second appeals arise from suits brought by the plaintiff landholder under section 77 of the Estates

Land Act for the rent of Fasli 1325 alleged to be due to him from his permanent occupancy tenants the defendants. He claims rent according to the waram system but the tenants plead that they are bound to pay only money rents as fixed in their muchilikkas, Exhibit C series. The lower Courts have decreed the landholder's claim as brought and hence these appeals by the tenants.

The main dispute between the parties centres round the first issue whether the tenure is rokkam or waram. The landholder is entitled to revert to the waram system unless the ryots establish that it has been superseded permanently by the cash system by contract, express or implied, between them and the landholder. See Ayyaperumal Odayan v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) and Muthiah Chettiar v. Periyar Kone (2). Now, in this case there is an express finding by the lower Courts that the waram system was the prevailing tenure in the estate. It is, however, contended that this finding should not be accepted as it is based on recitals in pattas Exhibits A, C and Q which as admissions in his own favour by the landholder cannot be relied on by him and on statements in muchilikkas Exhibits B, D and F which have not been proved. These muchilikkas were taken to be more than 30 years old by the lower Courts and as coming from proper custody their proof was dispensed with. The lower Courts are shown to have gone wrong there as the dates on the Exhibits show that they were not really 30 years old when tendered in evidence. But, apart from these documents, there is evidence to show that the tenure was a waram tenure to start with, and that also being the presumption, evidence is not necessary to prove it unless the presumption is rebutted, to do which, the burden is on the ryot. In this case there is some evidence that for several years the ryots paid money rents but such payments were made under specific contracts in term pattas for stated periods and the rates varied from time to time. They only show the existence of special contracts remaining in force in particular years and no inference can be drawn from them that the waram system was permanently given up. The last of such contracts is evidenced by Exhibit O series which provided for a money payment for 10 years from Fasli 1314 to 1323; by its own terms the contract came to an end in Fasli 1324 and from that fashli the landholder was entitled to revert to the waram rates.

It is next argued that, even assuming that the plaintiff was entitled to revert to waram rates, he is nevertheless disentitled to enforce those rates in Fasli 1325 without properly tendering a waram patta in Fasli 1324 by reason of the provision in the latter part of clause (3) of section 52 of the Estates Land Act and such a tender has not been made out. Before dealing with the applicability of the section it may be stated that waram pattas were attempted to be tendered to the ryots by the plaintiffs in Fasli 1324, in which year he distrained the crops for rent. But in the ryots' suit to set aside the distraint, it was held by the Courts that the tender was not proper as regards the present defendants and in consequence the distraints were set aside. That finding in Exhibit X is clearly res judicata and the question cannot be re-agitated and we must take it that there was no proper tender of any patta in Fasli 1324.

The question then is, whether the landholder is precluded from claiming waram rates in Fasli 1325. As already stated, up to the end of Fasli 1323, money rents were paid by the ryots and the argument for them is that under the first part of clause (3) of section 52 that arrangement should be treated as remaining in force for subsequent years and that to introduce a change the landholder was bound under the second part to tender a new patta in the fashli prior to one in which he proposed to enforce new terms. The lower Appellate Court has held that clause (3) does not apply to this case and we think that view is right. In the muchilikkas Exhibit O series, there is a provision by which after the expiry of the period fixed under it the ryots undertake to cultivate the land under "pattukattu muchilikka as according to the Amani Rules." These words have been understood by the lower Courts as meaning that the ryots would cultivate under the waram system.

No doubt, the learned District Judge seems to have erroneously thought that the word varapathu was in the covenant but that mistake, however, does not affect the meaning he attributed to the clause. "Amani system" has been treated as meaning waram system in our judgment in Muthiah Chettiar v. Periyar Kone (2), and as regards this very estate by the District Munsif in his judgment Exhibit W of 1887 when the landholder brought suits against the ryots to compel them to accept waram pattas. The lands are described in an earlier part of Exhibit O series as "varapathu and kaiipathu" lands. That also supports the view taken by the lower Appellate Court. The meaning of the covenant thus seems to be clear that the ryots agreed to revert to the waram system after the period fixed in O series was over. It is, therefore, not necessary for the landholder to rely on the first part of clause (3) of section 52 to regulate his relationship with his tenants for Fasli 1324 and thereafter the contract in the muchilikkas itself regulating it. In fact, in the face of that covenant, the arrangement to pay money rent cannot be held to continue in force after Fasli 1323. The second part is only a corollary to the first part of clause (3) and as the latter does not apply, it must be held that the former also does not apply to this case. As under the present Act no prior tender or exchange of patta and muchilikka is necessary to entitle a landholder to sue for rent, the present suit is clearly maintainable as brought and the plaintiff is entitled to the waram rates decreed to him.

The only other question argued is as regards the second crop on these lands raised by the tenants with the aid of their own well water without taking the landholder's water. It is contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to waram on that crop under section 13 (3) of the Act. That provision does not seem to apply as it cannot be said that any higher rate of rent is being claimed on account of increased production in consequence of the tenants' improvement. Under the waram system the landholder is entitled to a share in all the produce of the land unless there is a special contract to the contrary exempting any particular crop. His claim to share in all the crops cannot be looked upon as an enhancement of rent.

KALI KRISHNA ROY V. MAKHAN LAL.

The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, right in giving a share to the plaintiff in the second crop also.

The second appeals thus substantially fail but the decrees of the lower Appellate Court must be modified by striking out the declarations embodied in them and by confining them to decrees for rent as the suits are purely suits for rent. With this modification the second appeals are dismissed with costs. Vakils' fee Rs. 10 in each case.

Where a Will directs that, after payment of obsequious ceremonies of the testator, and certain legacies to specified persons, the residue is to be devoted to the maintenance of the worship of an idol, the residuary legatee under section 21 of the Probate and Administration Act, is the shebait of the idol, and not the priest appointed by the shebait to conduct the worship, as such appointment has not the effect of transferring the management of the debutter estate from the shebait to him [p. 687, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 1st March 1922.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitra (with him Babu Pasupati Ghosh), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of proceedings for grant of Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed. The facts are shortly these. One Bidhumoni left a Will dated 29th November 1898 directing Rs. 600 to be spent for her sraddh and made specific bequests to the extent of Rs. 1,400. The residue was left for the worship of the family idol. In 1904 the lady's first cousin took out Letters of Administration and on his death her priest Makhan Lal Mukerjee applied for Letters which have been granted by the District Judge. Against that order the present appeal is directed. I submit the residue of the lady's properties having been bequeathed to the idol its shebait is entitled to grant of Letters. The priest cannot be the shebait of the idol. See Nafar Chandra Chatterjee v. Kailash Chandra Mondal (1). I submit under the circumstances the priest is not entitled to the grant of Letters of Administration.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das (with him Babu Panshanon Ghose), for the Respondent.—

(1) 62 Ind. Cas. 510; 25 C. W. N. 201,

KALI KRISHNA ROY v. MAKHAN LAL.

I was appointed by the shebait to worship the idol as purohit and I have been acting as such for a very long time. Of course, I cannot be held to be the residuary legatee. But I am entitled to administer by virtue of my position as priest appointed by the lady.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order for the grant of Letters of Administration, with copy of the Will annexed, to the estate left by one Bidhumani Debi. The lady made a testamentary disposition of her properties on the 29th November 1898 and died on the 16th December 1898; she directed the expenditure of Rs. 600 on the occasion of her obsequious ceremonies and Rs. 1,400 in the payment of specified amounts as legacies to various persons. The residue, she directed, would be devoted to the maintenance of the worship of the idol Sri Sri Iswar Lakshmi Janardan established by the ancestors of her husband. The executor named in the Will did not take out Probate and it was not till the 5th November 1904 that one Rajendra Nath Roy, a first cousin of the lady, came forward to take out Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed. We are not now concerned with the history of the management of the estate by the administrator. It is sufficient to state that on his death, one Makhanlal Mookerjee, the priest of the testatrix, applied for Letters of Administration. In the first instance, an ex parte order was made in his favour; this was subsequently re-called and the case was re-heard in the presence of Kali Krishna Ray and Satis Chandra Ray who are the grandsons of the brothers of the testatrix and have come forward to obtain Letters of Administration. The District Judge has made a grant in favour of the priest under section 21 of the Probate and Administration Act. We are now called upon to consider whether this order can be sustained.

Section 21 is in these terms:

"When there is no executor, and no residuary legatee or representative of a residuary legatee, or he declines or is incapable to act, or cannot be found, the person or persons who would be entitled to the administration of the estate of the deceased if he had died intestate, or any other legatee having a beneficial interest, or a creditor, may be admitted to prove the Will, and Letters of Administration may be granted to him for them accordingly."

The District Judge has made an order in favour of the priest on the ground that he was the residuary legatee. In our opinion, this position cannot be supported; and, indeed, in the course of argument, the view that the priest was the residuary legatee has been abandoned. The Will directs the payment of a legacy of Rs. 50 to the priest; this clearly does not make him the residuary legatee. But it has been admitted before us that this sum has already been paid to the priest out of the estate. He cannot, consequently, be regarded as a legatee having a beneficial interest in the estate. The residuary legatee is unquestionably the idol established by the ancestors of the testatrix. It is to the idol that the residue of the estate is bequeathed, and, under section 89 of the Indian Succession Act, which is applicable to Hindus under section 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, a residuary legatee may be constituted by any words that show an intention on the part of the testator that the person designated should take the surplus or residue of his property. Consequently, the person entitled to Letters of Administration, as residuary legatee, under section 21 of the Probate and Administration Act, is the shebait of the idol. It cannot be suggested that the priest is the shebait. The shebait appointed the purohit to conduct the worship, but that does not transfer the management of the debutter estate from the shebait to the purohit, Maharane Indurjeet Kooer v. Chundemun Misser (2), Nagar Chandra Chatterjee v. Kailash Chandra Mondal (1). Where the appointment of a purohit has been at the Will of the founder, the mere fact that the appointees have performed the worship for several generations will not confer an independent right upon the members of the family so appointed, and will not entitle them as of right to be continued in office as priest; Nanabhai v. Trimbak (3), Narayana v. Ranga (4). We are consequently of opinion that the respondent is not entitled to the Letters of Administration as residuary legatee or otherwise, and the order made in his favour cannot be supported.

The result is, that the appeal is allowed and the application for Letters of Administration made by Makhan Lal Mukerjee dismissed with costs, both here and in the Court below. The hearing fee in this Court will be assessed at two gold mohurs.

The case will be remitted to the lower Court so that the question of grant of Letters of Administration to the appellants or other persons may be further considered. The residuary legatee is the person entitled to the office of shebait. We are not in a position to decide, from the materials on the record, who is entitled to the shebaitship. But we may add that it is well settled that, when the worship of an idol has been founded, the shebaitship is vested in the founder and his heirs, unless he has disposed of it otherwise or there has been some usage or course of dealing which points to a different mode of devolution; Gossami Sri Gridhariji v. Romanlalji Gossami (5), Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (6), Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Gordhan Lalji (7). In this connection, it must be borne in mind that, as stated in the Will of the lady, the worship of the idol was established by the ancestors of her husband. She is consequently not the original founder; nor can she be regarded as a founder because of her subsequent benefaction, which is nothing beyond any accretion or addition to the existing foundation; Annasami Pillai v. Rama Krishna Mudaliar (8), Appasami v. Nagappa (9). The question of shebaitship is thus a matter for careful investigation, and we direct that the application for Letters of Administration made by the present appellants be re-heard, after notice to the heirs of the husband of the lady and to the Government Pleader as representing the Crown.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 152, O. XX, r. 3—Judgment dictated in open Court—Transcript, whether can be revised—Irregularity—Revision.

A Judge who pronounces his judgment by dictation to a shorthand-writer in open Court can revise the transcript only so far as to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes arising from any accidental slip or omission. He cannot alter the effective part of the judgment or substitute a wholly new decision for the one which was originally pronounced. [p. 689, col. 2.]

Where a Judge corrects the shorthand transcript of his judgment so as to entirely change the effect of what he said in open Court, there is such material irregularity as will entitle the High Court to interfere in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, notwithstanding the fact that the order relates to claim proceedings and another remedy is open to the aggrieved party in the form of a suit under O. XXI, r. 63 of the Code. [p. 689, col. 1, p. 690, col. 1.]

Munsif concerned, whatever opinion may be formed of the propriety of his conduct.

The facts are that, on the 29th September 1921, the District Munsif gave a judgment on the present petitioner's claim to draw certain money, the subject of attachment, which was alleged to be due to the judgment-debtor from the Trichinopoly District Board. The District Munsif delivered that judgment orally, dictating it to a shorthand-writer; and there is no dispute that, in substance, whatever the exact words he used may have been, he allowed the petitioner to draw the money in case he got Probate or Succession Certificate or got his rights determined in a separate suit or gave security on unencumbered immoveable property for the amount. This order may be difficult to understand, because it is not of the nature contemplated by O. XXI, r. 60, being based on assumptions in the alternative that the judgment-debtor or the claimant was entitled to the property. With the merits of that order, however, we are not, at present, concerned. What we are concerned with is that, when the shorthand transcript reached the District Munsif for correction, he entirely changed the effect of what he had said in open Court, by leaving out the reference to the withdrawal of the money by the petitioner in case he gave security. There is no dispute that this change was made. In fact the District Munsif, when the petitioner's Vakil remonstrated with him on 8th October, 1921, dealt with the matter in a lengthy order, in which he sustained the judgment as corrected and declined to make any alteration in it, saying that it and not the judgment as pronounced, expressed his real decision. The order contains a good deal regarding the circumstances, in which the District Munsif found it necessary to make this material correction in his judgment and those in which the petitioner's Vakil discovered, owing to his clerk's consulting the Court diary that a change had been made. It is not necessary to pursue those matters. I turn to the arguments to be dealt with, first, whether the District Munsif acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction and, secondly, whether I should interfere in revision, when it is said that the petitioner has another remedy open to him by a suit under O. XXI, r. 63.

On the question of material irregularity and the right of the District Munsif to correct his judgment as he did, in fact, by substituting a refusal of relief for grant of it, reference has been made to the rule substituted by this Court for O. XX, r. 3. That rule deals with the case of a Judge, who has been empowered to pronounce his judgment by dictation to a shorthand-writer in open Court and says that the transcript of the judgment so pronounced shall, "after such revision as may be deemed necessary," be signed by the Judge; and it is urged that this authorises the Judge to revise the transcript and to substitute fresh words for the words which fell from his mouth to any extent he may deem necessary. Such a case as this is not likely to have any precedent and, accordingly, no authority on the interpretation of the rule has been brought to my notice. It seems to me, on reference to section 152 and the rule issued by this Court and from obvious considerations of principle, that the revision contemplated cannot be of the effective part of the judgment and must be of the nature referred to in section 152, one relating to "clerical or arithmetical mistakes arising from any accidental slip or omission." It is in fact impossible to see how there can be any purpose in the provision in O. XX, r. 1 that the parties and Pleaders shall be present or have notice of the pronouncement of judgment in open Court, if the decision which is to bind them ultimately is to be contradictory of what was then said. Certain judgments dictated must inevitably contain verbal or arithmetical mistakes, in respect of which revision will be advisable or even necessary. But that is not to say that by revision the Court can substitute a wholly new decision for the one which was originally pronounced. Taking this view, I hold that what purports to be the District Munsif's judgment in its ultimate form is not really the judgment. It is clear that the terms of his judgment, as originally formulated and as it must be taken for the present purpose to have been given, were to an entirely different effect; although it must be held that it is not possible to reconstruct them exactly from the materials available.

SUNDARARAJA CHARARIAR V. ALI MUHAMMAD.

I turn to the second question whether the District Munsif having been guilty of a material irregularity to the prejudice of the petitioner, the fact that the petitioner can bring a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, will disable me from proceeding in revision. It is, no doubt, the practice of this Court not to interfere in revision when another remedy is available. The present case, however, is exceptional and it is not clear that there is in fact another remedy. True, the petitioner, may sue in manner contemplated by O. XXI, r. 63 to set aside the order as ultimately promulgated by the District Munsif. But that is no reason why he should be called on to forego the advantage he obtained in the order as pronounced, which I feel bound to regard as the real order in the case. There is, moreover, the consideration that the procedure under O. XXI, r. 63 is for the establishing of the right of the party who has failed in the claim proceedings. If the petitioner were to sue for the purpose it would be difficult to see how he could be allowed to put forward what would certainly be a material part of his case, that he did not really fail in the proceedings, but was virtually successful. In any case, it seems to me that it will be a fair exercise of my discretion to use the power of revision to clear up the position of the parties; and to enable them to obtain an order which cannot be open to the very grave objections applicable to the one before me and on which they can take further action.

Taking this view, I hold that a material irregularity has been committed and that it is a proper exercise of this Court's power in revision to interfere to set it right. The only difficulty is, as I already indicated, that it is impossible to re-construct exactly the District Munsif's original order and, therefore, impossible to restore it. There is the further consideration that, if it is restored the respondent here, owing to a misapprehension for which he is not responsible, will be prejudiced in respect of the period available to him for suing, if he has to do so, under O. XXI, r. 63. The course I take is, therefore, to set aside the whole proceedings in the lower Court on the petition and to direct the present District Munsif to hear it and deal with it according to law. Costs in this Court and up to date in the lower Court will be costs in the claim petition and will be provided for in the order thereon.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the suit lands. The plaintiff alleged that he had been the Kudivaramdar of the suit lands prior to 1882 on condition of delivering waram to the landlord and that in 1882 the predecessor-in-title of the defendants executed Exhibit A under which the waram was commuted into a fixed money-rent and that the defendants claiming to revert to the waram rate were interfering with the plaintiff harvesting his crops. The defendants originally denied that plaintiff was the Kudivaramdar and contended that as the inam was a charity inam, Exhibit A was not binding on them. During the course of the trial, the plaintiff's right as Kudivaramdar was conceded. The Subordinate Judge decided against the plaintiff and he appeals.

The first question that arises for decision is the nature of the inam. Exhibit II is the Inam Register. In column 8 it was described as Kyrati which means, according to Maclean's Glossary, Volume III, page 415, a charity inam (Kheirauty) (see also Wilson's Glossary Khairat). The suit inam was described in Wallace's Register as "to the charity of Ithabar Khan" (vide column 14 Exhibit II). This is the earliest description of it now available. In column 21 the Deputy Collector describes it as forming "the grant for the support of the charities of Muhammad Ithabar Khan consisting of a Chatram, a water pandal and a mosque." He then mentions that a former Collector and the Board of Revenue considered it as falling within the operation of Regulation VII of 1817 (The Madras Endowments and Escheats Regulation, 1817) and concluded by proposing to fix a Jodi of $\frac{3}{4}$ of the Regular Survey Assessment, which will become the property of the charities to be applied to them by the Managers for the time being. "But in column 22, the order of the Commissioner was confirmed for the support of the mosque, water pandal and Chatram on the undertaking that the whole village will be resumed unless $\frac{3}{4}$ of the proceeds are appropriated to the support of the above purposes." It is clear that the Inam Commissioner did not accept the recommendation of the Deputy Collector. The entry in column 2 as "personal" and in column 9 "Free Jodi now imposed Rs. 310" must be regarded as embodying the Deputy Collector's view and as not being adopted by the Commissioner. The fact that a third share of the proceeds are being appropriated by the inamdars for their private uses does not make it the less a charity inam [see Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava Levvai Marakayar (1)] as the grant was only one and cannot be split up into two parts a personal grant of one-third and a charity grant of $\frac{3}{4}$ of the inam. It follows that Exhibit A is not binding on the charity.

The next point argued is, that the defendants are barred by limitation from repudiating the transaction of 1882. The plaintiff is a tenant and had been a tenant of the suit land prior to 1882. It is impossible for him to prescribe for the estate of a tenant holding on more favourable terms as the character of the tenant's possession continues and there can be no prescription. In this view, no question of limitation arises and it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the decisions in Vidya Varuthi Thiritha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (2), Damodar Das v. Lakhan Das (3), Narsya Udpa v. Venkataramana Bhatta (4) and Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (5).

Nor are the defendants estopped by their conduct from questioning Exhibit A. In so doing, they do not act in their personal right but as trustees of the institution which cannot suffer from their conduct [see Sena Yasim Sahib v. Kadur Ekambara Iyer (6)].

The result is there will be a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to hold the suit land as Kuduvaramdar on condition of paying the waram rate prevailing prior to 1882. The decree will be modified accordingly. As Exhibit A provides that, when the landlord wishes to revert to the waram, he can do so only on returning the Rs. 3,000 borrowed by him from the plaintiff, our decision will not stand in the way of plaintiff, recovering such portion of the Rs. 3,000 as may be binding on the trust from the properties appertaining to the charity or the whole of the amount from the heirs of the executants of Exhibit A, if so advised. As the plaintiff has substantially failed he will pay the defendants' costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (3)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20—Borrowing fresh sum and signing old account—Promise to pay—Acknowledgment.

A debtor's conduct in borrowing a fresh sum and making up and signing an old account must be taken as a promise which is the foundation of a new contract and not as an acknowledgment. Such promise is applicable as much to the sum borrowed on that day as to the sum found due on adjustment of account. [p. 694, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where there are debts due on both sides and the accounts are gone through by the parties and a balance struck, this in effect constitutes a payment to the amount of the smaller debt. But it is the striking of the balance that constitutes the payment, not the mere existence or even statement in writing of cross demands. [p. 695, col. 1.]

Where on an adjustment of accounts on a certain date between a borrower and the lender it was found that the debtor was liable for a certain sum, and on that date the debtor took a fresh advance in cash and executed a hatchita for the aggregate amount, which was duly stamped and signed by the debtor:

Held, that as the entry in the hatchita was made in respect of an aggregate sum, with regard to a portion whereof there could only be a promise to pay and not an acknowledgment, the legitimate interpretation of the entry was that there had been a promise to pay the fresh advance taken on the date of the execution of the hatchita as also a promise to pay the amount found due on adjustment of account on that date. Consequently, the liability of the debtor must be determined on the basis that there was a legally enforceable debt recoverable by the lender on the date of the execution of the hatchita, to the extent of the aggregate amount. JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money due from the defendants as representatives in estate of one Sefatulla Mandal, who had loan transactions with the plaintiff as also with the fourth and fifth defendants. There was an adjustment of accounts on the 23rd September 1909, when it was found that the debtor was liable for a sum of Rs. 2,977-3as.-15gds. On that date, the debtor took a fresh advance of Rs. 500 in cash and executed a hatchita for Rs. 3,477-3as.-15gds. The document was duly stamped and was signed by Sefatulla. On the 27th September 1909, Sefatulla paid Rs. 500 in cash and an entry to that effect was duly made in the hatchita. The subsequent transactions, as may be gathered from the entries in the hatchita, were as follows:

11th October 1909 ..	Sefatulla	borrowed
20th October 1909 ..	Sefatulla	paid
	Rs. 16.
6th November 1909 ..	Sefatulla	borrowed
	Rs. 400.
18th September 1912..	Sefatulla	paid
	Rs. 2.

The accounts were adjusted on the date last mentioned, and it was found that Rs. 3,361-3as.-15gds was due to the lender. On the 27th December 1914, Sefatulla paid Rs. 5. An entry was thereupon made in the hatchita in the following terms:

"Through self and Naziruddin Pramanick
...Rs. 5."

Credit was given for the sum and the balance due was specified at

Rs. 3,356-3as.-15gds. This entry was duly stamped and signed by Sefatulla "in the pen of Nazir-ud-din." The evidence shows that Nazir-ud-din was an officer of Sefatulla, and that Sefatulla who had been ill for some time previously, died on that very day after the payment had been made and the signature affixed. After the death of Sefatulla, his widow paid Rs. 20 on the 11th October 1916, for self and on behalf of his two infant daughters. The entry was signed by the widow in the pen of Niamatulla. The present suit was instituted on the 2nd January 1918 for recovery of the sum due to the plaintiff together with damages. The defendants, the widow and the infant daughters of Sefatulla, denied all knowledge of the transactions and also pleaded the bar of limitation. The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff on the merits, but dismissed the claim as barred by limitation. This decree has been affirmed by the Subordinate Judge. On the present appeal, the plaintiff has urged that the suit is not barred by limitation. From the arguments addressed to us, two points have emerged for consideration, namely, first, what is the legal effect of the entry signed by the borrower on the 23rd September 1909, and, secondly, what is the legal effect of the entry of the payment made on the 18th September 1912.

As regards the first question, the Subordinate Judge has held that the entry made on the 23rd September 1909, which recites that Rs. 3,477-3as.-15gds. was due on that date, is an acknowledgment, and is not sufficient to save the claim from the bar of limitation, inasmuch as the plaintiff has not established that the acknowledgment was made, as required by section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit for recovery of the amount due. We are of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. The details of the entry made on the 23rd September 1909 show that Rs. 2,320-9as.-15gds and Rs. 656-10as. were found due upon adjustment of two accounts of the previous years and that a sum of Rs. 500 in cash was taken as loan on that date. These three sums made up the aggregate of Rs. 3,477-3as.-15gds. There could not be an acknowledgment of a pre-existing liability in respect of the sum of Rs. 500, there could only be a promise to pay that sum. Consequently, the legitimate interpretation of the entry is, that there was a promise to pay Rs. 500 taken on the 23rd September 1909 as also a promise to pay Rs. 2,977-3as-15gds. found due on the adjustment of account on that date. The view we take is supported by the judgment of Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J., in Muhammad Abid Hussain Khan v. Bhagwan Das (1). In that case, a certain debt, barred by limitation, stood due to the plaintiff by the defendant. The plaintiff remitted a portion of the debt and advanced a further sum in cash. The defendant thereupon executed a sarkhat, in which he admitted the receipt in cash of a sum including the unremitted portion of the barred debt and the further sum advanced at the time, and undertook to pay interest thereon at a certain rate. It was ruled that the transaction amounted to a new contract and was not merely an acknowledgment of the barred debt. Sir John Stanley pointed out that the amount of the old debt might have been actually paid and then repaid, and if the parties had recourse to such formality, the transaction would undoubtedly have been treated as a new contract to secure the entire amount specified in it. Reference was made to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Jodharaj v. Raghavgir (2) and Vasudeo Anant v. Ramkrishna Rao Narayan (3), where it was held that the defendant's conduct in borrowing a fresh sum and making up and signing the old account must be taken as a promise which was the foundation of a new contract. From this point of view, it is needless to explore the history of the transactions between the parties antecedent to the 23rd September 1909, for it was open to the borrower to make a promise in writing signed by himself, to pay a debt of which his creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits; see section 25 (3) of the Indian Contract Act:

Matu Sheikh v. Baikuntha Nath Kar (4), Bhawani Misser v. Peari Jha (5). If the entry be construed as a promise to pay, such promise is applicable quite as much to the sum borrowed on that day as to the sum found due on adjustment of account: Appa Rao v. Suryaprakasa Rao (6); Mohammad Abdullah Khan v. Bank Instalment Co. (7), Ganapathy Mudaly v. Munisawmy Mudaly (8). The distinction between an acknowledgment and promise to pay is sometimes difficult to draw, specially as, in the words of Sir Alfred Wills in Mantaram v. Seth Rupchand (9), an unconditional acknowledgment has always been held to imply a promise to pay, because that is the natural inference, if nothing is said to the contrary; it is what every honest man would mean to do. The case before us is reasonably free from difficulty, as the entry was made in respect of an aggregate sum, with regard to a portion whereof there could only be a promise to pay and not an acknowledgment. This distinguishes the present case from the decisions in Debi Prosad v. Ram Ghulam Sahu (10), Ramji v. Dharma (11), Chowksi Himullal v. Chowksi Achrutlal (12), Ranchhodas Nathubhai v. Jeychand Khushalchand (13), Jeethibai v. Putlibai (14), Gobind Das v. Sarju Das (15), Ramaswami Pillai v. Kuppuswami Pillai (16).

Reference may in this connection be made to the well-known principle that it is not necessary that the payment should be actually made in money, for any arrangement between the parties intended to have the effect of discharging pro tanto the party indebted, will have the same effect as a payment of money: Maber v. Maber (17). Thus, where there are debts due on both sides and the accounts are gone through by the parties and a balance struck; this in effect constitutes a payment to the amount of the smaller debt: Ashby v. James (18), In re Hawkins Hawkins v. Hawkins (19). But it is the striking of the balance that constitutes the payment, not the mere existence or even statement in writing of cross-demands: Williams v. Griffiths (20), Cottam v. Partridge (21), Clark v. Alexander (22), Scholey v. Walton (23), Patt v. Clegg (24), Stewart v. Connick (25). Hence, it has been ruled that an agreed statement of accounts, where all the items are on one side only, if the statement is not signed by the party liable and is inoperative as an acknowledgment, will not be allowed to support an action on an account stated in respect of items which are statute-barred: Jones v. Ryder (26), Nash v. Hill (27); Brenan v. Crawley (28).

We hold accordingly that the liability of the defendants must be determined on the basis that there was a legally enforceable debt recoverable by the plaintiff from their predecessor on the 23rd September 1909 to the extent of Rs. 3,477-3as.-15gds.

As regards the second question, we have to consider whether the entry of the payment of Rs. 2 on the 18th September 1912 made before the lapse of three years from the 23rd September 1909 fulfils the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act. That section provides that where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made: provided that the fact of the part payment of the principal of the debt appears in the handwriting of the person making the same. In the case before us, the payment was made by the debtor through the hand of his officer Naziruddin, and the entry was made in the following form "through self and Naziruddin Pramanick." This entry, it has been established, is in the handwriting of Naziruddin and must have been made with the concurrence of the creditor who had the hatchita in his custody. When an entry has been so made with the mutual consent of the creditor and the debtor—the only two persons interested—neither of them can be permitted to repudiate the entry to the prejudice of the other. It is consequently needless to investigate, whether the money was handed over by the debtor direct to the creditor or through the hand of his officer. They were all present on the scene, and the payment must have been made in the manner alleged in order that the entry might, if necessary, be made by Naziruddin. It is clearly not open to the representatives of the borrower now to resile from an arrangement and the record thereof which was deliberately made by their predecessor with the approval of the creditor. We need not, accordingly, attempt to reconcile the decisions which deal with the precise effect of payment through a messenger or a menial servant: Sarajubala Debi v. Saradanath Bhattaacharjee (29), Duraiswami Aiyar v. Krishniah (30), Ram Kishan Das v. Shyam Sunder Lal (31). We are of opinion that the entry of the payment dated the 18th September 1912 was effective to extend the period of limitation. This was followed by the payments of the 27th December 1914 and 11th October 1916.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 96—Latent ambiguity—Extrinsic evidence, admissibility of—Evidence of intention and user—Principle applicable—Instruments, ancient and modern.

When an instrument appears, on the face of it, to be free from ambiguity, but upon the endeavour being made to apply it to the persons or things indicated, it transpires that the words are equally applicable to two or more persons or to two or more things, there is what is called a latent ambiguity. This class of ambiguity, sometimes called an equivocation, is not discovered till the instrument comes to be applied to external circumstances. In such a case as extrinsic evidence has created the ambiguity, extrinsic evidence is admissible to re-solve it; and direct evidence of intention may be given for the purpose of ascertaining which of the several persons or things to whom the words are applicable was intended to be denoted. [p. 697, col. 2.]

The principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to an ancient instrument, and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent. Appeal against a decree of the Sub-ordinate Judge, Pabna, dated the 27th

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant Municipality against the plaintiff Company in a suit for damages of illegal distress in execution of a warrant issued for recovery of latrine tax which is alleged to have been not leviable under the law.

On the 27th March 1905 the Commissioners of the Serajgunj Municipality, at a meeting decided to extend the latrine area in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884. Thereupon, on the 27th November 1905, the Government of Bengal extended the provisions of Part IX of the Bengal Municipal Act to the area mentioned in the resolution, and empowered the Commissioners to levy the latrine tax within the limits specified. The boundaries of the area were set out in the notification in the following terms: North—By Elliot Bridge. South—By Chur Raipur. East—By Hossainpur and Mirpur. West—By the Dhanbandi river.

From before the issue of this notification, the Municipal Commissioners had received from the European firms within the Municipality, a sum of Rs. 90 annually as latrine tax, and this state of things continued down to the first quarter of the year 1916-17. In the second-quarter of that year, a demand was made upon the Company, who have a cooly depot within the jurisdiction of the Municipality, for latrine tax on the footing that the depot was situated within the latrine area, so that latrine tax was leviable thereon. The amount demanded was paid under protest, and the present suit was instituted by the Company against the Municipality to test the legality of the claim. The point in controversy is, whether the cooly depot of the Company is situated within the latrine jurisdiction of the Municipality. The answer depends upon the true construction of the Government Notification dated 27th November 1905. The Courts below have concurrently answered the question in the negative. On the superficial view, it may seem that the matter in issue raises nothing beyond a question of fact. On closer examination, however, it appears that a question of interpretation is really involved.

Reference has been made in the course of argument to a map of the Serajgunj Municipality, which shows the Elliot Bridge, the Chur Raipur, and the Dhanbandi river. The map also shows, towards the east of the river, tracts marked as "Hossainpur," "land of Hossainpur Mouza," "Mirpur," and "land of Mirpur Mouza." Apparently, the tracts which are marked as "land of Hossainpur Mouza" and "land of Mirpur Mouza," extend right up to the eastern bank of the river, while the tracts marked as "Hossainpur" and "Mirpur" are smaller areas, the western boundaries whereof are at some distance from the eastern bank of the river. If, in the Notification, the terms "Hossainpur" and "Mirpur" were used to indicate the "land of Hossainpur Mouza" and the "land of Mirpur Mouza" the area covered by the Notification would reduce to a line without breadth, because the lands of these Mouzas extend up to the eastern bank of the Dhanbandi river, leaving no area between what are set out as eastern and western boundaries. On the other hand, if the terms "Hossainpur" and "Mirpur," used in the Notification, were intended to represent not the "land of Hossainpur Mouza" and "land of Mirpur Mouza," but only to the smaller areas shown as "Hossainpur" and "Mirpur" on the map, there would be a considerable area between the eastern bank of the river and the western boundaries of these localities. The question would then arise, whether the cooly depot of the Company is or is not situated within the Municipality latrine area so determined.

The substance of the matter thus is, that there is a latent ambiguity in the eastern boundary as given in the Notification dated 27th November 1905 and, consequently, the principle enunciated in section 56 of the Indian Evidence Act applies, namely, that when the facts are such that the language used might have been meant to apply to any one and could not have been meant to apply to more than one of several persons or things, evidence may be given of facts which show which of those persons or things it was intended to apply to. It is well settled that when an instrument appears on its face to be free from ambiguity, but upon the endeavour being made to apply it to the persons or things indicated, it transpires that the words are equally applicable to two or more persons or to two or more things, there is what Lord Bacon calls a latent ambiguity (Law Tracts Rules 23-25; Bacon's Works, Ed. Spedding and Heath, Vol. VII, p. 385). This class of ambiguity, sometimes called an equivocation, Doe v. Hiscocks (1) and Douglas v. Fellows(2), is not discovered till the instrument comes to be applied to external circumstances. In such a case, as Lord Wrenbury puts it, "extrinsic evidence has created the ambiguity, and extrinsic evidence is admissible to re-solve it"; See the decision of the House of Lords in Great Western Railway and Midland Railway v. Bristol Corporation (3) and direct evidence of intention may be given for the purpose of ascertaining which of the several persons or things to whom the words are applicable was intended to be denoted. Reference may in this connection be made to the observation of Baron Alderson in Smith v. Jeffryes (4); of Mr. Justice Erskine, Baron Parke, and Tindal, C. J., in Shore v. Wilson (5); of Lord Wensleydale in Waterpark v. Fennell (6); of Lord Halsbury in Van Diemen's Land Co. v. Marine Board of Table Cape (7), and of Lord Atkinson in Watcham v. Attorney-General on behalf of the Government of the East Africa Protectorate (8). The decision of the Judicial Committee last mentioned shows that the principle that when an instrument contains an ambiguity, evidence of user under it may be given in order to show the sense in which the parties used the language employed, applies to a modern as well as to an ancient instrument and where the ambiguity is patent as well as where it is latent.

We are of opinion that the question of interpretation of the Government Notification dated 27th November 1905 has not been approached from the correct standpoint, and the case before us has not been properly tried. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the case remitted to the Court of first instance for re-trial. Each party will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence as to what was intended by the terms "Hossainpur" and "Mirpur," and, if necessary, a map will be prepared on fresh Survey. The costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Benami transaction—Test—Court, duty of—Co-sharers—Default in payment of Government dues—Sale of estate—Defaulting co-sharer, purchase by—Other co-sharer, right of—Public Demands Recovery Act (I B. C. of 1895), s. 10—Omission to serve notice of sale—Sale, whether nullity—Public Demands Recovery Act (III B. C. of 1913), ss. 31, 36, 37—Retrospective effect.

The Courts in India need not approach a transaction alleged to be benami with that scrupulous rigour which, in other systems of jurisprudence, may demand the existence of the clearest positive evidence that the ex facie owner of a property holds the same for the interest of another. The vital test in cases of this class is, what is the source from whence the consideration came. The Court should also take into consideration the question of possession. But where the production of evidence of a conclusive character to satisfy these tests is hardly feasible, the Court must examine the surrounding circumstances. [p. 700, cols. 1 & 2.]

A co-sharer who has defaulted to pay the Government dues and has thereby brought about the sale of an estate, cannot be permitted, if he purchases the estate at the sale, to hold it for his own benefit to the exclusion of his co-owner. [p. 701, col. 1.]

The co-owner who thus acts in breach of his obligation, contractual or fiduciary, cannot be permitted to profit by his own wrong to the detriment of the person whose interest it was his duty to protect. [p. 701, col. 2.]

When notice has not been served under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, a sale under the Act must be deemed to be a nullity, a sale wholly without authority. In such circumstances, the plaintiff in a suit to recover possession need not ask that the sale be set aside; he is entitled to recover possession upon the footing that the sale has not affected his title. [p. 702, col. 1.]

There is abundant indication in the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, that it was not intended to have retrospective operation so as to extinguish or modify causes of action which might have already accrued by reason of failure to serve the notice issued under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, for section 36 of the new Act must be read along with section 3 (1). JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for confirmation or recovery of possession of land on establishment of title. The disputed property is one-and-a-quarter annas share of taluk Ramprosad which bears louzi No. 1631 of the Bakerganj Collectorate. In respect of seven-and-three-quarters annas share of the entire taluk, a separate account had been opened in the Collectorate; of this share, four annas belonged to the zemindars of Kirtipasa with whom we are not concerned here, and three-and-three-quarters annas to the Guhas, who are the sixth and seventh defendants in this litigation. Of the residuary share, one-and-a-quarter anna belonged to Ellen Jolly, three-and-a-half annas to the Boses who are the second, third and fourth defendants in this suit, and another three-and-a-half annas share to the Guhas, who are the sixth and seventh defendants. The plaintiff purchased the share of Ellen Jolly on the 7th February, 1895, and, at the time of the events which have led up to this litigation, he was the proprietor thereof. Before the conveyance in favour of the plaintiff, Ellen Jolly had, on the 24th May 1888, created a tenure in respect of her share in favour of Ambica Charan Guha (now represented by the sixth and seventh defendants) and Manikyamala Bose (the predecessor-in-interest of the second and third defendants). The rent was settled at Rs. 920, and out of this sum, the lessees undertook to pay into the Collectorate, on behalf of the lessor, a sum of Rs. 573, as revenue and cesses leviable in respect of his share of the taluk. The position, consequently, was, that the second and third defendants were co-sharers of the plaintiffs and also tenure-holders under him, and were thus bound to pay cesses in respect of his share and their own share. The fourth and fifth defendants were co-sharers of the plaintiff and were bound to pay cesses in respect of their own share alone. The sixth and seventh defendants were co-sharers of the plaintiff and also lessees under him, and were thus bound to pay cesses in respect of his share besides their own share. The second and third defendants, however, in breach of their obligation, defaulted to pay the cesses due for the September instalment of the year 1912. The consequence was that, on the 23rd December 1912, the Collector made a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895. Notice was thereupon directed to issue under section 10. On the 11th March 1913 it was reported to the Collector that the notice had been duly served upon the defaulting proprietors. A distress warrant was thereafter issued on the 4th April 1913, and is stated to have been served on the 20th April 1913. On the 2nd May 1913 the property in arrear was ordered to be sold, and a notice under section 10 was again directed to issue on the judgment-debtors. On the 18th June 1913 notice was ordered to issue for settlement of sale proclamation under O. XXI, r. 66 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908; this notice, it is said, was served on the 24th June 1913. On the 24th July 1913 the sale proclamation was ordered to issue. The sale proclamation is alleged to have been served on the 8th August 1913. On the 30th September 1913 the property was put up to sale by the Collector. The first defendant Sen was the sole bidder present, and he bought the property for the sum of Rs. 82-10-3 which was the amount due on the certificate. The sale was confirmed on the 1st December 1913. The sale-certificate was granted on the 7th July 1914. The purchaser got his name registered in the Collectorate on the 21st July 1914. He applied for delivery of possession to the Collector on the 15th January 1915; the order for issue of writ was made on the 8th April 1915 and possession was delivered by beat of drum in the customary manner on the 25th April 1915. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit on the 26th September 1916 for confirmation or recovery of possession on the allegation that the proceedings were throughout fraudulent and had been controlled by the second and third defendants, who had managed to purchase the property in the name of the first defendant. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit. He has held, first, that the second and third defendants deliberately defaulted to pay the Government dues; secondly, that they have purchased the disputed share, which is worth at least Rs. 5,000, for an insignificant sum; thirdly, that the notice under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, was not duly served and that the proceedings were consequently without jurisdiction; fourthly, that the proceedings, specially those subsequent to the sale, were fraudulent and were concealed from the plaintiff. On the present appeal, the first defendant has assailed these conclusions as erroneous in fact and in law.

As regards the first point, we feel no doubt that the Boses deliberately defaulted to pay the Government dues. It was their duty, as tenure-holders under the plaintiff, to pay the cesses due on his share; it was also their duty to pay the cesses in respect of their own share. They intentionally withheld payment so that the property might be brought to sale; they must accordingly be deemed to have intended what they must have known would be the normal consequence of their default.

As regards the second point, the Subordinate Judge has found that the purchase at the sale held by the Collector was made nominally by the first defendant, but really for the benefit of the Boses. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of this conclusion. We have been pressed with the view that, as observed by Lord Shaw in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (1), the Court must rest its decision, not upon suspicion but upon legal evidence established by legal testimony. But the Court need not approach the transaction with that scrupulous rigour which, in other systems of jurisprudence, may demand the existence of the clearest positive evidence that the ex facie owner of a property holds the same for the interest of another. It may further be conceded that, as observed by Mr. Amir Ali in Nriyamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (2), the vital test in cases of this class is, what is the source from whence the consideration came (see also Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (3) and Parbati Dasi v. Baikuntha Nath Das (4), which recall the earlier pronouncements in Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (5), and Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gunga- persaud Gosain (6). In the present case, however, the sum paid for purchase at the sale was so small that it might, without difficulty, have been provided by either the Boses or Sen, both of whom, it is conceded, are men of considerable means. The endeavour made by Sen to establish that he withdrew from the Bank a sum of Rs. 100 for the purpose has the appearance of an attempt to create evidence, and does not justify the inference that he must have provided the purchase-money. It need not further be questioned that, as pointed out in Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag (7), the Court should take into consideration the question of possession. In the present case, however, the interval between the alleged delivery of possession and the institution of the suit is so short that the production of evidence of possession of a conclusive character is hardly feasible. The entries in the official records, no doubt, stand, as might be expected, in the name of the person declared as the purchaser; that is a feature common to cases of this class and cannot be treated as a decisive factor. We must consequently examine the surrounding circumstances. It is undeniable that the Boses intentionally committed default. They knew that the inevitable consequence would be a sale of their share as also of the share of the plaintiff. They made no attempt whatever to pay up the small sum due, so as to avert the sale. They made no attempt to offer bids at the sale. They took no steps to have the sale set aside either by application to the Collector or by recourse to a suit. The first defendant opportunely made his appearance on the scene. He had no connection with the property. He could not explain how he was apprised of the impending sale; he still denies that he is a habitual frequenter at Collectorate sales; in the expectation of an opportunity to make speculative purchases. He had fortunately no competitors at the sale and was able to buy a valuable property for less than a fiftieth of its value. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that, in such circumstances, the inference might legitimately be drawn that the Boses purchased the property in the name of Sen, and they have not moved an inch with a view to challenge the propriety of the sale, because their interest has not been affected by the event. A sale so contrived cannot prejudice the interest of the real owner. A co-sharer who has defaulted to pay the Government dues and has thereby brought about the sale of the estate, cannot be permitted, if he purchases the estate at the sale, to hold it for his own benefit to the exclusion of his co-owner; see Ram Prasad Singh v. Pawan Singh (8), Janki Singh v. Debi Nandan Prasad (9), Harendra Lal Roy v. Purna Chandra (10), Faizar Rahman v. Maimuna Khatun (11). The view that a joint tenant who deliberately makes default in payment of the Government revenue due on account of his share, should not be allowed to use the machinery provided by law for the realisation of the dues of the State to injure the interest of his co-sharer, has now been approved by the Judicial Committee in the case of Deonandan Prasad v. Janki Singh (12), which overruled the decision in Deorga Singh v. Sheo Pershad Singh (13) and affirmed the decision in Janki Singh v. Debi Nandan Prasad (9). The position is similar when a tenant, in violation of his agreement, defaults to pay, on behalf of his immediate landlord, the dues of the superior holder and thereby brings about a sale of the interest of his landlord; see Harendra Lal Roy v. Salimullah (14), Nawab Sidhee Nuzur Ally Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan (15); Sreenath Ghose v. Huronath Dutt Chowdhury (16) and other cases reviewed in Uma Charan Mandal

v. Midnapore Zemindary Company (17), which was reversed by the Judicial Committee on a different point, Midnapore Zemindary Company v. Uma Charan Mandal (18); see also Satish Kantha Roy v. Satis Chandra (19). The essence of the matter is that the co-owner or the lessee who thus acts in breach of his obligation, contractual or fiduciary, cannot be permitted to profit by his own wrong to the detriment of the person whose interest it was his duty to protect. From this point of view, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to succeed in this litigation.

As regards the third point, the Subordinate Judge has held that the notice issued under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, was not served upon the plaintiff. His view is amply justified by the evidence on the record. The evidence of service is not only unsatisfactory, but is calculated to give rise to grave suspicion as to the genuineness of the proceedings. There is no escape from the conclusion that though the return sets out that service was effected on the plaintiff personally on the 25th February 1913 at a place called Bakai, he was on that date at Dacca.

We hold, accordingly, in concurrence with the Court below, that the allegation of service of notice under section 10 is entirely false. The legal consequence of such omission to serve the notice was determined by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Purna Chandra Chatterjee v. Dinabandhu Mukerjee (20); see also the decision of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Abdul Hal v. Gujraj Sakai (21), affirming Gujraj Sakai v. Secretary of State (22) and Baijnath Sahai v. Ramgat Singh (23), affirming Baij Nath v. Ramgat Singh (24). The decision of the Full Bench shows that when notice has not been served under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, the sale must be deemed to be a nullity, a sale wholly without authority. In such circumstances, the plaintiff need not ask that the sale be set aside; he is entitled to recover possession upon the footing that the sale has not affected his title, and the suit is governed by Art. 142 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act: see also Mohiuddin v. Pirthichand Lal Choudhury (25). This renders inevitable the conclusion that there is no answer to the claim put forward by the plaintiff. The defendant-appellant has consequently been driven to urge that as the sale in this case was held on the 30th September, 1913 after the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, had come into operation on the 1st July 1913, the position of the plaintiff must be tested with reference to the provisions of the Statute of 1913 and not to those of the Statute of 1895. This view is clearly untenable. The Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, cannot be construed to have retrospective operation so as to destroy rights which had previously accrued. The notice issued under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, was not served, and yet the proceedings were carried on as if the notice had been served. The right thereupon accrued to the plaintiff to treat the proceedings as taken without jurisdiction and without legal authority. In such circumstances, the principle enunciated by the Judicial Committee in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (26) is clearly applicable. In that case the right of appeal from the Supreme Court of Queensland to His Majesty in Council was taken away by the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act and in lieu thereof was substituted an appeal to the High Court of Australia. It was ruled that a right of appeal to the King in Council in a suit pending when the Judiciary Act was passed and decided by the Supreme Court afterwards was not taken away. Lord Macnaghten observed as follows:—

“As regards the general principles applicable to the case, there was no controversy. On the one hand, it was not disputed that if the matter in question be a matter of procedure only, the petition is well-founded. On the other hand, if it be more than a matter of procedure, if it touches a right in existence at the passing of the Act, it was conceded that, in accordance with a long line of authorities extending from the time of Lord Coke to the present day, the appellants would be entitled to succeed. The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intendment. And, therefore, the only question is, was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to well-known general principle that the Statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested.”

To the same effect are the decisions in Munjuri Bibi v. Akkel Mahmud (27) and Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (28). The decision of the Judicial Committee in Soni Ram v. Kanhatya Lal (29), as to the law of limitation which governs the legal effect of an acknowledgment does not conclude the matter; it merely shows that the law of limitation applicable to a suit is prima facie the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit. But this is, as shown in Budhu Kumar v. Hafiz Hussain (30), subject to the reservation that there may be circumstances connected with the new Statute which furnish an indication that the Legislature never intended it to affect retrospectively existing causes of action: Bisseshur Sanamat v. Jasoda Lal Chowdhury (31), Makar Ali v. Sarfaddin (32), Tirumalaisami Naidu v. Subramaniam Chettiar (33), Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levvai (34), and Alaji Iseek Sahib v. Vengu Chetty (35). Similar observations apply to the decision of the Full Court in Jogodanund Singh v. Amrita Lal (36), which ruled that section 310 (A) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, had retrospective operation, contrary to the decision of the Full Bench in Lal Mohan v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (37); Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal (38) and Girish Chundra Basu v. Apurba Krishna Dass (39). In the case before us, section 37 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court only where the question relates to the making, execution, discharge or satisfaction of a certificate duly filed under the Act, or relates to the confirmation or setting aside of a sale held in execution of such certificate. The expression "certificate-debtor" used in sections 36 and 37 is defined in section 3 (1) to mean a person named as debtor in a certificate filed under the Act; in this connection, reference should also be made to section 7 which refers to certificates filed under sections 4 and 6 of the Act. In our opinion, there is abundant indication in the provisions of the new Statute that it was not intended to have retrospective operation so as to extinguish or modify causes of action which might have already accrued by reason of failure to serve the notice issued under section 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895; for section 36 must be read along with section 3 (1). We hold accordingly that the Subordinate Judge has correctly found that the plaintiff is entitled to relief on the footing that the sale which was held without service of notice on the plaintiff under section 10 has not affected his title.

As regards the fourth point, the Subordinate Judge has held that the proceedings, specially those subsequent to the sale, were fraudulent and were concealed from the plaintiff. This is fully supported by the evidence. It is significant that no attempt was made to take delivery of possession until more than a year-and-a-half had elapsed from the date of the auction-sale, and the purchaser did not pay the Government Revenue until two years after his alleged auction-purchase. The intention plainly was that more than a year should elapse after the sale, so that if a suit should be brought, it might be met by the bar of limitation under section 36 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913. But even if that Statute had been applicable, section 56 would have entitled the plaintiff to the benefit of section 18 of the Indian Limitation Act. We feel no doubt that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge on this part of the case, as on the others, is correct.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs payable by the appellants to the plaintiffs-respondents.

SRIRANGAM MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, v. BODY.

1884) s. 45—Lease of right to collect fees or tolls—Written contract, absence of, effect of—Suit to recover money due by lessee, maintainability of—Implied contract.

The right to collect fees or tolls for slaughtering cattle in a slaughter-house was leased by the plaintiff Municipality to the defendant and the latter enjoyed the right for the period of the lease but no written contract was executed as required by section 45 of the Madras District Municipalities Act of 1884. In a suit by the Municipality to recover the lease amount:

Held, that, although no claim could be made on the basis of a written contract, the plaintiff Municipality was entitled to a decree inasmuch as the defendant had enjoyed the right for the period contracted for and was liable as on an implied contract.

Mr. N. Rajagopalachariar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the defendant bought in auction the right to collect fees or tolls for slaughtering cattle in the slaughter-house of the plaintiff Corporation. This suit is for the balance money due from him. The suit has been dismissed by the lower Court on the ground that no written contract was executed as required by section 45 of the old District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884, which was in force. It is argued before me that though no claim could be made on the basis of the written contract, a decree should have been given at any rate on the footing of executed consideration, the defendant having been found to have enjoyed the right of collecting the toll for the whole year.

There is no doubt a conflict of authority on the point. So far as the English Law is concerned it must now be taken as settled by Lawford v. Billericay Rural Council (1) in favour of such decrees being given. The learned Judges refer to Young v. Mayor of Leemington Corporation (2) which was taken to have laid down the opposite view and point out that the question was expressly reserved there. In Douglass v. Rhyl Urban Council (3) Joyce, J., holds that the case in Lawford v. Billericay Rural Council (1) settles the English Law on the point.

As regards the authorities in our High Court the case in Raman Chetti v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (4) does not really deal with this question. The observation in Ramaswamy Chetty v. Municipal Council, Tanjore (5) is based on Young v. Mayor of Leemington Corporation (2) which has now been explained away and is in the nature of an obiter. I do not propose to refer to the other Indian cases. I think the plaintiff Municipality is entitled to a decree as sued for on the footing that defendant has enjoyed the right of collecting the toll for the whole year contracted for and is liable as on an implied contract.

The civil revision petition is allowed and the decree of the lower Court is set aside and a decree given to the plaintiff as sued for with costs in this Court and the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—I have had an opportunity of perusing the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother.
I agree with the conclusions at which he has arrived and have nothing to add.Foster, J.—These appeals arise out of two suits which were tried together and decided by the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in his judgment dated the 26th August 1919. The two suits came to be numbered 40 of 1919 and 41 of 1919, but in fact they were instituted before that year.
The plaintiffs in Suit No. 40 are defendants in Suit No. 41 and the defendants in Suit
No. 41 are plaintiffs in Suit No. 40. Both parties are interested in Dardha, a large village which has come under Settlement, the Record of Rights having been finally published in October 1914; and each party has sued for a declaration that certain of the entries in that record are incorrect. The suit now registered as No.
40 of 1919 was instituted in 1915 by representatives of the three branches of a family having a common ancestor. The most prominent persons of this family at the time of the Record of Rights were Bhikhari Singh and Raj Keshwar Singh in one branch, Sheobalak Singh and Lokenath Singh in another, and Ram Kewal Singh in the third.
These persons have been for convenience sake called the plaintiffs in the judgment of the Trial Court, though they are defendants in the second suit; and the defendants, though plaintiffs in the second suit, are called defendants throughout. The second suit was instituted in 1917. Both parties have interest as landlord in the village, but the plaintiffs are also possessed of extensive tenancies under direct cultivation.Both the suits impeached as incorrect a very large part of the Record of Rights of village Dardha, but the Subordinate Judge in each party's case allowed only one of the least important of the claims and dismissed the rest. So with two very small exceptions the Record of Rights was upheld.
Those whom it is convenient to call defendants are the appellants in each suit;
and the so-called plaintiffs, as respondents, have filed a cross-appeal in connection with the appeal in the second suit. The two appeals and the cross-appeal cover much less ground than the original suits, and, moreover, many points have been abandoned in the course of argument. For the better understanding of the matters still in controversy it is necessary to make an outline of the various interests shown in the Record of Rights of Dardha village.

RAM DHEYAN SINGH v. BHULOTAN SINGH.

There are 14 Khewats in the Record of Rights showing the interests of the proprietors and tenure-holders in the village. The proprietary interest of the whole village is held by the family of Khawaja Hasan Jan (Khewats Nos. 1 to 3). Under the proprietor are two mokarrari shares, 8-annas each, one of which was held at the time of the Settlement by Bibi Guna. The other 8-annas mokarrari had been sub-let in darmokarrari and Bibi Guna had acquired the sub-lease. So Bibi Guna had 8-annas mokarrari share and 8-annas darmokarrari share, and this 16-annas interest was leased to the plaintiffs by her predecessors-in-interest and by herself in successive terms under thicca lease since the year 1874. The last term ended in 1918 during the pendency of these suits. Bibi Guna transferred her 16-annas mokarrari and darmokarrari interest to the plaintiffs and defendants; the plaintiffs acquired 4-annas of this in 1906 and the defendants the residue in 1912. So at the time of the final publication of the Record of Rights (14th October 1914) and at the time of the institution of these suits (1915 and 1917), the plaintiffs who were originally thiccadars of the 16-annas interest were in possession of the village as darmokarraridars of 4-annas share, and as thiccadars of 12-annas share paying rent for that 12-annas share to the defendants; and the lands held by the plaintiffs in these two capacities were shown in the Record of Rights as follows: (a) within the thicca tenure (Khewat No. 8), there is khata No. 82, a small area of road side land on which stood a mahua tree in the possession of Sheobalak Singh, one of the plaintiffs; (b) also in the thicca khewat, a large area (khata No. 3) shown as bakasht thiccadar; (c) a still larger area held by cultivating tenants under the thiccadars. The lands in possession of the cultivating tenants include seven tenancies in connection with which disputes have arisen between the parties. There are six permanent tenures, having rent not fixed in perpetuity, and one occupancy holding: all these stand in the names of one or other of the plaintiff's family in khewats Nos. 9 to 14 comprising Khatas Nos. 83 to 89 and 67.

The tenures are as follows:—

(1) Khewat No. 9. Tenure-holder Ram Kewal Singh 35'33 acres, produce rent detailed in khatas Nos. 83 and 84.

(2) Khewat No. 10. Tenure-holder Bhi-khari Singh, 9'89 acres, cash-rent, khata No. 85.

(3) Khewat No. 11. Tenure-holder Bhi-khari Singh, 35'72, produce rent, khata No. 86.

(4) Khewat No. 12. Tenure-holder Sheo-balak Singh 5'22 acres, khata No. 77, cash rent.

(5) Khewat No. 13. Tenure-holder Sheo-balak Singh 31'76 acres, khata No. 88, produce rent.

(6) Khewat No. 14. Tenure-holder Sheo-balak Singh 11'41 acres, khata No. 89, produce rent.

The single occupancy holding is a well and orchard standing in the name of Sheo-balak Singh and described as free of rent. Its area is 1.64 acres and it is recorded in Khata No. 67.

It will be convenient to take the defendants' two appeals in their order and then to come to the plaintiffs' cross appeal.

Appeal No. 34 concerns the six permanent tenures and part of the occupancy holding set out above, as well as the mahua tree which I have mentioned; and Appeal No. 35 concerns the remainder of the occupancy holding. I proceed to decide the questions raised.

APPEAL NO. 34.

(1) The contention as to Khatas Nos. 83 and 85, which are recorded as permanent tenures bearing rent not fixed in perpetuity and which at first the appellants claimed should be bakasht thiccadars, has been abandoned, and it is agreed that the Record of Rights should stand as it is.

(2) A similar claim in respect of Khata No. 86 has been pressed. It is necessary for the understanding of this point of appeal to have a clear idea of what took place in the Settlement. In khanapuri and attestation there were many disputes between the parties, and the most serious was as to the extent of the plaintiffs' raiya holding. The plaintiffs had been thiccadars since 1874 and were in direct possession of a considerable area in the village, and no doubt few people could speak with certainty as to the state of affairs forty one years ago, so as to identify the old *raiya*ti holding of this family. If the identity can be ascertained, a very substantial foundation will be found for coming to a decision in this dispute. The oral evidence shows that it is common ground that since 1874 the plaintiffs' cultivation has greatly increased: the plaintiffs say the increase was due to purchase, but the defendants assert that a large part of it was due to reclamation, by which they imply uncultivated land bakasht thiccadar was brought under cultivation; and it is also contended that the few purchases definitely asserted were such as could not convey any personal title to the plaintiffs. It is clear that the cultivating tenancy of the plaintiffs can amount only to their original jote plus what they have legally acquired in their personal capacity; and the residue would have to be considered to be held by the plaintiffs in the capacity of thiccadars, and so subject to the superior landlords' reversion. Now at the attestation the defendants admitted only certain land, about 55 bighas in area, to be the ancient ancestral jote of the plaintiffs, and this admission was accepted: I refer to the dispute No. 70 of the Dispute List, order dated the 14th February 1914. The admission was restricted to bhaoli lands, and there were no admissions as to nakdi. In July 1914 the Settlement proceedings reached the stage of objections under section 103-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and Mr. Harihar Prasad, Assistant Settlement Officer, was deputed to make a local investigation. His report is on the record, and it appears to be a most painstaking work. What led to this proceeding is disclosed in the evidence of Siri Lal, an elderly man, who was servant of Dost Mohammad, who, we see from Raj Keshwar Singh's deposition and the lease, Exhibit 2-B, had a one-third share (mokarrari) in the village in 1871 and afterwards. Enquiries were made of Siri Lal and he found amongst his deceased master's records a bundle of papers including a measurement khasra. These papers were produced at a late stage in the Settlement, and this is suggested as a ground for distrusting them. The measurement khasra has been exhibited: it is of 1873, and is an elaborate list of the bhaoli tenancies of the village showing the kind of crops grown, the rough area and the locality (kita). No substantial grounds have been urged for distrusting its authenticity, nor in fact has the document ever been seriously impugned. No doubt, the attestation proceedings show that Bibi Guna had no old papers in her custody, but that would hardly throw doubt on evidence that her husband's former co-sharer had some old estate records. The Settlement Authorities made use of the measurement khasra and other papers, and for some days Mr. Harihar Prasad was engaged in the presence of the parties and their Pleaders in identifying the plaintiffs' old *raiya*ti plots of 1873 with the Settlement plots, using the old measurement khasra for the bhaoli lands and some old leases produced by the plaintiffs for the nakdi lands, besides ascertaining what the plaintiffs had acquired by inheritance and purchase. The results are shown in his report Exhibits 35 and 36. I should mention that it had been already decided that as the plaintiffs held more than 100 bighas, it was to be presumed, under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act that they had the status of the tenure-holders in respect of lands belonging to their ancient jote and their subsequent acquisitions. The defendants in their appeal urge that the Settlement Authorities came to a wrong conclusion in using the measurement khasra and removing land from the khata "bakasht of thiccadars" to the khata "bakasht of tenure-holders": on the other hand, the plaintiffs in their cross-appeal want more bakasht for their tenures on the basis of this measurement khasra. It is urged that the road-cess returns Exhibits M and C show that the plaintiffs as thiccadars in 1886 and 1902 admitted a less area of *raiya*ti lands than now claimed: but an examination of the entries of the holdings of Fakir Singh and Ram Kewal Singh in Exhibit M, and of Bhikhari Singh and Ram Kewal Singh in Exhibit C shows the reverse.

I find no reason for accepting the defendant-appellant's contention that khata No. 86 should be declared to be the thiccadars' bakasht.

(3) I come now to *khata*s Nos. 87 and 88, which are nakdi and bhaoli tenures of Sheobalak Singh. These are made up of lands said to have been partly inherited from the husband of Musammât Sundari Koer and partly to have been purchased from Musammât Talukraj Koer and three cultivators Sibnarain, Isar and Chaka Lal.

The acquisitions from Musammats are not any longer impeached and it is agreed that the Record of Rights shall remain as it is in this portion of khatas Nos. 87 and 88: But in respect of the lands acquired from Sheonarain, Isar and Chaka Lal, the appeal is pressed, and it is contended that the plaintiffs could only acquire them as "bakashi thiccadars." Now the evidence shows that these three persons were tenants of Dardha to whom the plaintiffs had made takkavi loans for agricultural purposes; and that they found themselves unable to meet their debts and gave up their lands instead. The defendants have called the village Patwari Sarju Lal, son of Chaka Lal, as a witness, and he has denied that his father's lands were so transferred. As the learned Subordinate Judge points out, quite justifiably in my opinion, this witness's cross-examination, shows that he is untruthful and the plaintiffs' evidence remains un rebutted. The plaintiffs attempted to prove some entries said to have been made by these three tenants in the plaintiff's cash-book, but as the documents purported to transfer the lands and were not stamped or registered, they were excluded. Sibnarain owed Rs. 118 and gave up his lands in 1890; Isar's debt was Rs. 77 and he gave up his lands in 1893; and Chaka did the same in 1902 for a debt of Rs. 269. As to the legal effect of these transfers, it is important to note that, when they were made, the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 were in force, but not the Act of 1907 amending (inter alia) section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. The learned Vakil for the defendants contends, first of all, that these transactions were surrenders or abandonments of holdings, and that the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act preclude any contention that they were sales, at least where the value was more than Rs. 100. To treat them as surrenders in the sense of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would be to ignore the important fact that the takkavi advances were from the plaintiffs' private funds, and that the transactions were between the plaintiffs as creditors and the three tenants as debtors, and not between landlords and tenants as such. It should be noted that the question of transferability of holdings was not raised in the Trial Court and no evidence was adduced. A reference to the Settlement dispute list will show that both plaintiffs and defendants at that time relied on their purchases and the plea of non-transferability was not raised then. I think we have no reason for allowing the issues to be complicated with this new question, and the plea itself appears to me to have no material on the record to support it. I do not think these takkavi transactions were surrenders. Nor do I think they fulfil the legal requirements of an abandonment; for the tenants did not leave the lands without notice to the landlords. The learned Vakil for the defendants is on somewhat firmer ground when he relies on section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. But on the other side it is pointed out that the burden of proof that the entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect rests on the defendants; and these defendants have against them the fact that as between the plaintiffs and the tenants, Sibnarain, Isar and Chaka Lal, the former could point to the fact that the consideration in each case was a debt due to them, that they obtained possession with the consent of the tenants, and that they have been in possession ever since. So, it seems to me, as between the parties to these transactions, there has been such part performance on both sides as to leave to the tenants no room, in equity, for recovery of the lands. The cases in point are Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (1), Salamat-uz Zamani Begam v. Masha Allah Khan (2) and Puchha Lal v. Kunj Behary Lal (3).

The last objection to these transactions urged by the defendant-appellant is that the plaintiffs as ijaradars were debarred by section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from acquiring a right of occupancy. As it stood at the time of these transfers, the section provided that a person holding as an ijaradar shall not while so holding acquire a right of occupancy in any land comprised in his ijara. In the amending Act of 1907 the words "by purchase or otherwise" were added. But before the amendment the word "acquire" was held to mean "acquire under the law," words used in section 21 and evidently meaning, by force of the Statute: Ramrup Mahto v. H. Manners (4). The correctness of this decision was doubted by Mukherji, J., in Raghubar Mahto v. Manners (5), a judgment passed after the amendment. In Pierpont Morgan v. Ramjee Ram (6), the former decision was followed. The following consideration seems to me to point to the correctness of the first and third of these decisions. The word "acquire" in respect of occupancy rights is really used in the Act; but in the preceding section 21, sub-section (2), it occurs "shall be deemed to have acquired a right of occupancy under the law then in force." but it appears to be carefully avoided in section 22, sub-section (2) in the sentence commencing "if the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person." It would appear then, from the context, that the word "acquire" implies the accrual to a raiyyati tenancy of rights conferred by the Statute rather than the transfer of rights by another tenant.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs points out that this last point is not material, for if the plaintiffs could not acquire occupancy rights by purchase, they would at least acquire non-occupancy rights, which by virtue of section 21 of the Tenancy Act would at once on the termination of the thicca lease ripen into occupancy rights.

The result of all this discussion of the third point taken in appeal appears to me to be that the learned Vakil for the appellants, in asking us to declare the Record of Rights incorrect, has propounded legal arguments based on section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and sections 86, 87 and 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but, on the other hand, there are weighty reasons based on legal principles which debar us from conceding that the plaintiffs hold these lands as thiccadars, subject to reversion to the superior landlord on expiration of their lease. In my opinion, the appeal should fail on this point.

(4) The next point urged concerns the lands in khata No. 89, which were raiyyati settlements taken in two short term leases ten years and two years before the first thicca lease of 1874. It is agreed by both parties that the lands shall be declared to be a non-occupancy nakdi holding and not 'bakasht malguzar.'

This matter comes into the cross-appeal also.

(5) It is urged that the houses of khata Nos. 67 and 84 are homestead of raiyyats of the village under the thiccadars and not houses standing on lands belonging to the raiyyat (khata No. 67) or the tenureholder (khata No. 84). It should be noted that part of the plots of khata No. 67 and all the plots of khata No. 84 are shown as sites of houses in the possession of certain persons. The contention has been abandoned as regards khata No. 67, but is pressed as regards khata No. 84. It is also to be noted that the occupants of these houses are defendants in the case, but they do not support the principal defendants' claim. On the other hand, some of them have filed written statements supporting the plaintiffs' case and the Record of Rights. The oral evidence on the defendants' side is surprisingly meagre. Deobehari Singh says he did not see the houses built, but he saw the raiyyats live in them and repair them. This is not very convincing, for we want evidence that the sites of the houses are the raiyyati land, held by raiyyats as their homestead, under the village landlord. The other witnesses do not supply this information, nor is there definite evidence that the plaintiffs did not, as they allege, grant the materials. Now, the houses mentioned in this khata were under dispute in the settlement. The dispute list (tanaza No. 36) shows that as regards plots Nos. 772 and 774 of khata No. 84 the defendant Deobehari Singh, who appears to have been representing the defendants' interest, admitted that he had no right over the houses and that he had no right on which to found a dispute. As regards most of the other plots of this khata the disputes are Nos. 50, 52 and 53, and the khanapuri and attestation officers looked into the matter and passed decisions adverse to the defendants' claim. The attestation officer found that in this village it is the custom for tenants to build on their lands houses for their own labourers. All this shows that the entries in the Record of Rights were not made without investigation. The plaintiffs have always had extensive cultivation of their own, apart from their thicca interest, and it is not surprising to find that they have built houses for their labourers. After considering the defendants' evidence, I do not think it can be regarded as sufficient to rebut the Record of Rights, fortified as it is by oral evidence of ownership on the plaintiffs' side.

(6) Both parties appear to have misapprehended the Record of Rights as to the entry in khata No. 82, which is plot No. 67r, and is a village path. The entry in the margin is "Mahua tree, in possession of Sheobalak Singh resident of the village, plum trees 3" . . . (et cetera). The claim of the defendants was based on a supposition that all the trees were entered in the name of Sheobalak Singh, and they contended that after his name should be added the word "thiccadar." The only entry in this part of the khata to which exception can be taken by the defendants is in respect of the mahua tree. The oral evidence consists merely in a statement of each party's case and there is no particular evidence about the mahua tree except that it is about five years old. I do not find any ground for discrediting the Record of Rights.

The only matter of contention in Appeal No. 35 was as regards four plots in khata No. 67, comprising an orchard and a well; but this claim has been withdrawn.

I turn now to the cross-appeal of the plaintiffs, which has reference to Suit No. 40 and Appeal No. 35. This involves three claims which I shall discuss in order (a) that certain land entered in khata No. 3 as bakasht thiccadar should be declared to be part of the ancestral batal holding of the plaintiffs; (b) that certain other lands, mostly from khata No. 3 should be declared to be part of the ancestral nakdi holding of the plaintiffs; (c) that two plots Nos. 296 and 321 of khata No. 3 should be entered as in the possession of Raj Keshwar Singh as mokarraridar. On the last point the parties agree that the plaintiffs have darmokarrari rights in the two plots, and the contest is concluded. The two other points raise the question of the extent of the plaintiffs' old holdings on the produce-rent and cash-rent. The two claims have a common ground, as will be seen in the following general summary of the plaintiff's contentions as I have understood them:—

"We had extensive ancestral raiya lands which in our long period of thicca lease since 1874 almost lost their identity, but still we were entitled to them as against the landlords' right of reversion on determination of our thicca term. Fortunately we were able to secure the old measurement khassra of 1873 to identify our bhaoli lands, and we discover old leases to show that we were entitled to certain nakdi lands. The Assistant Settlement Officer Mr. Harihar Prasad in the proceedings under section 103, A went to the spot and identified the plots which we are now claiming under these two heads as our ancient bhaoli and nakdi holdings, but his superior Mr. Duncan must have overlooked these details, or the Settlement staff made mistakes, and the result is that the lands were not so recorded in the final publication. Then the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment agreed with Mr. Harihar Prasad's identifications, but by oversight he failed to give us a decree, probably under the impression that Mr. Harihar Prasad's note had been followed in toto in the Record of Rights as finally published."

I proceed to consider the two claims in detail:

(a) The claim is that certain plots and parts of plots entered in kha'a No. 3 as bakasht of the thiccadars should be declared to be the ancestral batal raiyati jote of the plaintiffs. They amount to 32 bhigas 8 kathas 15 dhurs and are only a portion of the original Schedule I of the plaint in Suit No. 40, the claim being now restricted to those plots which were identified on the spot by Mr. Harihar Prasad in the proceedings under section 103-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendant's reply is that the fact that these plots were not included in the Record of Rights, finally published three months after Mr. Harihar Prasad's investigation, shows that Mr. Duncan, his superior officer, did not accept the identifications. But we have no clear evidence as to Mr. Duncan's opinion, and the defendants' argument would be more convincing if they could have pointed to some reason why this tract of 32 bighas odd should be differentiated from the rest of the bhacchi lands identified by Mr. Harihar Prasad. An attempt was, in fact, made in this direction in respect of six plots; on the notes put against these plots Mr. Harihar Prasad has not specifically mentioned what he means by 'identity' for he has not mentioned expressly the old measurement khasra. The argument does not impress me for the context shows clearly what is meant.

In this matter little assistance can be got from the oral evidence, in which no details are stated. The area of the old batai holding and the plots comprised in that area can only be ascertained by the old records. The question whether the plots comprising the 32 bighas odd are parts of the plaintiffs' ancient holding can be answered only by the measurement khasra of 1280 Fasli, provided that it is authentic and trustworthy. I have discussed this question before and shown how the khasra was produced and followed in Settlement, and how little the defendants have to say against its authenticity or veracity. It is on the record, and my opinion is that it would be a most difficult task to fabricate such a record of the conditions of the village holdings existing more than 40 years ago, without betraying the forgery. The learned Subordinate Judge has recorded an emphatic opinion. He says, Mr. Harihar Prasad's "judgment and notes are very careful and extensive documents written after a thorough and scrutinizing investigation of the locality and the consideration of the documents produced by the parties before him." "The Assistant Settlement Officer believed the papers to be genuine and acted upon them. He went to the very lands with the chitta and other papers and verified the entries by comparison with the actual lands. This was his advantage and he embodied the result in his note Exhibit 36. I compared the notes by looking at the maps of the village, and found the result arrived at by the Assistant Settlement Officer to be absolutely correct. The Record of Rights based on these notes must, therefore, remain unaltered." It is not understood how on this finding of complete accuracy, Mr. Harihar Prasad's note was not followed completely by the learned Subordinate Judge, and I can only consider the final order in the judgment so far as it omitted a declaration as to the plaintiffs' title to 32 bighas odd of bhaoli kashit, to be made by oversight or under a misapprehension. So I arrive at the conclusion that the plaintiffs should succeed in obtaining a declaration as to this area, which is defined in their cross-appeal read with their original Schedule and Mr. Harihar Prasad's note.

(b) The claim concerns 40 bighas odd, alleged to be the ancestral holdings, on cash-rent, of the plaintiffs. This area comprises the whole of the plaintiffs' Schedule II. It may be noted at once that out of this area nine khasra plots having an area of 18 bighas 5 kathas 2 dhurs are now outside the dispute, for the parties have agreed that these plots, Nos. 241 to 494 of the Schedule, which belong to khata No. 89, shall be recorded as the non-occupancy nakdi holding of the plaintiffs. These were claimed as coming under the patta of 1278 Fasli. Another matter to note is that 5 bighas 13 kathas 18 dhurs of khata No. 83 have already on the defendants' admission been recorded as the plaintiffs' bhaoli lands, but the plaintiffs contend that they are nakdi lands settled with them as such under the patta of 1261 Fasli. Some tabulation of the areas is necessary to make the position clear. It should be remembered that the two pattas of 1278 comprise one holding demised by two co-sharers.

A. The area lying within khata No. 3 entered as bakasht thiccadar is 16 bighas

2 kathas 13 dhurs made up of :—

Kita Kurarpur ..	1	0	0
Kita Nagahia ..	3	18	3
Kita Dih Ke Utter ..	3	3	1
	16	16	9

The plaintiffs show pattas for these areas, with the exception of Kita Dih Ke Utter plots Nos. 666 and 670 of khata No. 3. Deducting the area of these two plots, we are left with the Lodipur, Kurarpur and Nagahia lands having a Survey area of 12 bighas 19 kathas 12 dhurs. The pattas show of course a rough measurement, but Mr. Harihar Prasad identified the plots, and the difference in area is insignificant.

B. The area of Khata No. 83 claimed as nakdi is 5 bighas 13 kathas 18 dhurs out of the Harnathpur Ahar Ke Pit area, and is said to be included in the patta of 1261 Fasli. This was identified by Mr. Harihar Prasad as plot No. 1307.

C. Then there is the area of khata No. 89, 18 bighas 5 kathas 2 dhurs which is now not disputed. This comes under the pattas of 1278 F.

Adding A, B and C we get—

I proceed now to a more particular examination of the evidence. The pattas of 1261 Fasli and 1278 Fasli were produced late in the Settlement at the stage of section 103A proceedings. The patta of 1261 Fasli stands in the names of Radhu Singh and Ugrah Singh, so at once the question arises, how and when did these lands pass to the plaintiffs? To this question I can find no definite reply. From the evidence of Raj Keshwar Singh, plaintiff, I gather that Radhu had a son Rupnath, and Rupnath's son was Harihar whose widow Dakho Kuer was alive at the time of trial of this case. Radhu was Raj Keshwar's grandfather's cousin, but it is not asserted that the plaintiffs succeeded to the lease-hold properties as heirs of Radhu or his successors. In fact, Jagdeo Singh another plaintiff and also Raj Keshwar himself depose that Dakho Kuer sold her lands to the plaintiff. Then Ugrah the other lessee of this patta of 1261 Fasli had a son Thakur, and Thakur's son was according to defendant Deobehari Singh's evidence Deonath, who is still alive. Raj Keshwar deposes that Thakur was in some way related to his aunt, and Thakur Singh's widow made over her lands to him: the time is nowhere stated. There is in fact no evidence to show acquisition of the land of this patta by the plaintiffs in their private capacity, as distinct from their position as thiccadars. Their evidence merely amounts to this: they hold the lands and they have possession of the instrument of lease, a lease to others than themselves.

As to the lands of khata No. 83—5 bighas 13 kathas 18 dhurs—I have already noted that these lands stand in that khata because the defendants admitted them to be the plaintiffs' bhaoli lands; the plaintiffs' contention in appeal is that these are not bhaoli but nakdi lands settled with them by the patta of 1261 Fasli. In my opinion this contention should prevail, for when the defendants have gone so far as to admit that this tract is held by the plaintiffs as part of their raiya tenancy, when the plaintiffs have shown that so long ago as 1261 Fasli the lands were subject to cash rent, and when the defendants have no evidence to show that the rent was bhaoli, there is no other reasonable conclusion but that this part of khata No. 83 is held on cash-rent, at the rate mentioned in the patta.

RAM DHEEYAN SINGH v. BHULOTAN SINGH.

I come now to the lands of patta of 1278 Fasli which, as I have already shown in the table above, comprise about 6 bighas 5 kathas in Kitas Lodipur, Kuarpur and Nagahia. The plots were identified by Mr. Harihar Prasad and there is nothing on the record to discredit his identifications. The learned Subordinate Judge checked the identifications with the village map and found them correct. These leases which are of 1278 Fasli have an appearance of genuineness and the only points urged against accepting them are those I have already discussed, namely, their late production at the time of the settlement and the argument, already shown to be incorrect, as to the extent of the plaintiffs' holdings, deduced from the plaintiffs' old road-cess returns. In my opinion these leases can be accepted as genuine and as showing that at the time when the plaintiffs first took the thicca lease (from 1874) they had possession of a non-occupancy holding at least to the extent of the area found by Mr. Harihar Prasad; for this is all that has been identified on the map and not already conceded by the Settlement Authorities.

In my opinion the interest of the plaintiffs in these lands must be held to be the same in extent and quality at the end as at the beginning of the thicca lease, and so the lands must be a non-occupancy holding. I rely on Thomas Savi v. Panchanun Roy (7), a case decided on the basis of the tenancy law existing between 1869 and 1885. The Tenancy Acts that have followed, in 1885 and subsequent years, have, in no way, disturbed this decision, but have rather confirmed it. The case of Jasimuddin v. Beni Madhab Das (8) rests on a special provision as to chur lands (section 180 of the Bengal Tenancy Act), and is not applicable to this case.

As to the area of 3 bighas 3 kathas of Kita Dih Ke Utter, plot's Nos. 666 and 670 of khata No. 3, the plaintiffs' difficulty is that they have no evidence to show how they came to hold this area in nakdi kasht. The sole evidence that these lands were ever nakdi kasht of the plaintiffs is to be found in the Schedule annexed to a petition of compromise filed in Court by the parties of this case who were then litigating. The compromise included among the properties there dealt with a certain jagir, and of that jagir the south boundary is described in the Schedule annexed to the compromise to be "Sheobalak Singh's nakdi." Mr. Harihar Prasad noted the results of his investigation in the last paragraph of his report thus:—

"These lands are claimed as nakdi manrosi but not under any patta. In the sulehnama dated the 27th June 1911 made between the parties and filed in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Aurangabad regarding a contiguous plot of land (No. 321) to the north of these plots the southern land is stated to be the nakdi kasht of the objector. The other gotias of the objector too have got their ancestral kasht lands at this place and are in possession. The rent is Rs. 9-6-0 exclusive of cesses as stated by the objector. The defendant says that he made the admission in the sulehnama under coercion. There is no evidence of this. These plots will also be entered as objector's nakdi with a jama of Rs. 9-6-0 exclusive of cesses."

In his evidence Raj Keshwar Singh, one of the plaintiffs, who has come into the witness-box evidently for the purpose of stating the whole of the plaintiffs' case, says nothing specific about this area and in fact omits it from his list of nakdi lands. So there is no evidence oral or documentary of a lease of these lands, and in my judgment the statement of a boundary in a compromise petition is not sufficiently strong evidence by itself to rebut the Record of Rights.

In my opinion the appeals and the cross-appeals should succeed or fail as set out in the following statement:

APPEALS Nos. 24 AND 35.

A. The claim in respect of khata Nos. 67, 82, 84, 85, 86, 87 and 88 will be dismissed.

(B). 5 bighas 13 kathas 18 dhurs, plot No. 2-1307 of khata No. 83 should be declared to be plaintiffs' raiyyati nakdi kasht (kaimi). The rest of this khata No. 83 is not found to be incorrect and the appeal fails.

(C) The lands comprised in khata No. 89 are declared to be non-occupancy raiyyati nakdi holding and not bakasht malguzar. This is according to the agreement of the parties: in other respects the Record of Rights is not declared correct.

CROSS-APPEAL.

(A) The following plots, in whole or part, as shown in the plaintiffs' First Schedule annexed to his plaint should be declared to be the plaintiffs' bhaoli raiyati kashit (batai) with occupancy rights:—

Plots Nos. 1241, 1227, 1207, 1005, 596, 597, 237, 266, 288 and 338.

The situation and identity of these bhaoli lands are to be as fixed by Mr. Harihar Prasad, Assistant Settlement Officer in his statement (Exhibit 36 of this case) dated the 16th July 1914.

(B) Khata No. 89 should be declared to comprise the non-occupancy nakdi holding of the plaintiffs.

(C) The areas identified by Mr. Harihar Prasad in his statement (Exhibit 36) as parts of plots Nos. 1005, 237, 1241 and 1229 and as the nakdi kashit settled with the plaintiffs in the patta of 1278 Fasli are declared to be the non-occupancy raiayati nakdi holding of the plaintiffs. These areas, are within the Kitas Lodipur, Kuarpur and Nagahia.

(D) The rest of the claim for the declaration of the plaintiffs' nakdi kashit should be dismissed, excepting the area of 5 bighas 13 kathas 18 dhurs of khata No. 83 herein before declared to be nakdi raiyati kashit.

(E) Plots Nos. 296 and 321 of khata No. 3 should be declared to be in possession of Raj Keshwar Singh as mokarraridar, as agreed by the parties.

I feel some hesitation in, awarding either parties their costs. The learned Subordinate Judge directed that the parties should bear their own costs. No doubt the plaintiffs have succeeded to some extent in their claim, but it is to be remembered that at the time of the settlement they were undoubtedly in possession of old village records which they did not produce or only produced at the eleventh hour. The result was that the Record of Rights was not as complete and accurate as it might be. Moreover, both parties have in this litigation put forward excessive and unreasonable claims. I would make no order as to costs.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CIVIL RULE No. 272 OF 1922.

August 28, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir Thomas Richardson, Kt., and Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose.

THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY CO., LTD.—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

RADHIKA MOHAN NATH—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 77, 140—Suit against Railway Company for compensation for non-delivery of goods—Notice, service of—Notice on Traffic Manager, if sufficient—“Loss,” if includes non-delivery.

Where a person sues a Railway Company for damages on account of the non-delivery of goods consigned to it for carriage, he must give notice as provided in section 77 of the Railways Act, and where the head-quarters of the Railway Company are in England, such notice should be given to the Agent of the Company in India. A notice served on the Traffic Manager of the Company is not sufficient in law. [p. 716, cols. 1 & 2.]

(Case-law reviewed.)

A claim for compensation for non-delivery of goods includes the case of the loss of the goods just as much as the case of the detention of the goods. [p. 717, col. 2.]

Where detention is not pleaded or put in issue a claim simpliciter for compensation for non-delivery of goods against a Railway Company must be understood as including or involving a claim for the “loss” of the goods within the meaning of section 77 of the Railways Act. [p. 717, col. 2.]

Per B. B. Ghose, J.—The word “loss” used in section 77 of the Railways Act is wide enough to include all cases where the goods are not forthcoming and, therefore, includes a case of non-delivery. [p. 719, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Munshigunj, in (S. C. C.) Suit No. 1929 of 1921.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Petitioner:—The defendant is the petitioner. The plaintiff, opposite party, brought a suit against us in the Small Cause Court at Munshigunj for compensation for non-delivery of a parcel containing medicines. They served a notice on the Traffic Manager of the defendant Company which has been held to be a good notice by the Court below. My submission is that under sections 77 and 140 of the Indian Railway Act notice must be served on the Agent of our Company. See East Indian Railway Company v. Madhu Lal (1), Radha Kissen v. East Indian Railway

ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY CO. LD. v. RADHIKA MOHAN NATH.

Company (2), East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Autar (3). In all these cases it has been distinctly laid down that notice must be given to the Agent. In the present case there is no evidence to show that the Agent got the notice. The Court below has held without any evidence to support that matters of this kind are referred to the Traffic Manager. I submit that would not do inasmuch as that would be directly going against the law. See Kala Chand Shaha v. Secretary of State (4). The case relied on by the Court below in Woods, Agent to the Assam-Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) is distinguishable. The offer by the Traffic Manager to pay Rs. 18 was made without prejudice. I submit the Court below ought to have summarily dismissed the suit on the ground of non-service of notice as contemplated by the Act.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Opposite Party:—My submission is that the findings of the Court below that matters of this kind are referred to the Traffic Manager by the Agent for settlement and the fact of the Traffic Manager having agreed to pay Rs. 18 as compensation in settlement of the claim are sufficiently conclusive to show that the Agent received the notice and that there was no defect in the notice served. The case of Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) is directly in point. My further submission is that even if the notice be held to be bad, no notice at all was necessary. We sent the parcel to the Steamer Company to be delivered at a station of the defendant Railway Company. We complained to the Steamer Company who referred us to the Railway Company. Therefore, the case does not fall within the provisions of section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. There was no loss within the meaning of that section. See East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan-Ram Prashad (6), Gheabhai Purni

v. East Indian Railway Company (7). Our case is that they have not delivered the parcel. There is some distinction between loss and non-delivery. I would rely on Arts. 30, 31 of the Indian Limitation Act for the distinction of the two expressions. "Loss" does not mean "non-delivery."

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, in reply:—The point now raised is new. They did not put their case on that basis in the primary Court, so there is no force in their contention. The case of East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan-Ram Prashad (6) does not apply. The observations there are mere obiter dicta.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—The opposite party obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court at Munshigunj against the petitioner, the Assam Bengal Railway Company, for compensation for non-delivery of a parcel of medicines. The goods were entrusted by the opposite party as consignor to a Steamer Company for carriage to a station on the Assam Bengal Railway. It was thus the Steamer Company which delivered the goods to the Railway Company. This Rule, obtained by the Railway Company, calls upon the opposite party to show cause why the decree should not be set aside on several grounds of which the following are material:—

1. "For that the Court below has erred in law in holding that notice to the Traffic Manager was notice to the Agent of the defendant Company within the meaning of sections 77 and 140 of the Indian Railways Act, IX of 1890, and the said Court ought to have held that the plaintiff's suit was fit to be dismissed for want of notice."

2. "For that in the absence of any finding that the Traffic Manager had any authority to accept notice on behalf of the Agent or that the Agent in this particular case had any knowledge directly or indirectly of the plaintiff's claim within the statutory period of six months the Court below is wrong in decreeing the suit."

3. "For that the Court below has misconceived the legal effect of the Traffic Manager's communication and without prejudice to the rights of the Company and this has materially affected the decision of the case on the merits."

As to these pleas the question is whether the learned Subordinate Judge correctly applied the law to the facts found by him. What he says in his judgment is this :—

"Upon the evidence I find that the plaintiff gave notice of his claim to the Traffic Manager who offered to pay Rs. 18 to him in satisfaction of the claim. Under the rules, the Traffic Manager settles all claims and the Agent refers some claims to him for settlement. Under the circumstances I hold that notice to the Traffic Manager is notice to the Agent as held in Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) and the notice was given within 6 months' time as laid down in the law."

It has frequently been held in this Court under section 140 of the Act, that in the case of a Railway Company the head-quarters of which are in England, the notice required by section 77 should be given to the Agent of the Company in India. The case of Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) on which the learned Judge relies has been distinguished more than once in language appropriate to the present case. See East Indian Railway Company v. Madhu Lal (1); Radha Kissen v. East Indian Railway Company (2) and East Indian Railway Company v. Ram Autar (3). Here also there is no evidence that claims of this kind are usually referred by the Agent to the Traffic Manager and there is no finding, as there was in the case of Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5), that notice has in fact reached the Agent. In Madhu Lal's case (1) it was pointed out that the learned Judges who decided Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) did not lay it down as matter of law that service on the Traffic Manager was a sufficient compliance with the Act and that the decision was based on the particular facts of the case. Reference may also be made to Kala Chand Shaha v. Secretary of State (4). In my opinion the view of the learned Judge that notice to the Traffic Manager was notice to the Agent is erroneous in law.

The case of Radha Sham Basak v. Secretary of State (8) cited for the opposite party is distinguishable. The question which arose there is not the question which we have to determine.

As to the offer made by the Traffic Manager to the opposite party, the learned Judge does not refer to the fact that the offer was made without prejudice. In any case, the offer in itself cannot show that the Traffic Manager had authority to receive the notice on behalf of the Agent.

So far the petitioner is entitled to succeed, but for the opposite party an attempt was made to support the decision of the learned Judge on the ground that in the present case no notice under section 77 was necessary.

It was contended, in the first place, that the case was not within section 77 by reason of the fact that the goods were handed to the Railway Company for carriage not by the opposite party but by the Steamer Company. It is not easy, however, to see how the claim made by the opposite party against the Railway Company can be maintained at all unless it be on the footing that in handing the goods to the Railway Company, the Steamer Company acted as his Agent. It was said that the Steamer Company referred the opposite party to the Railway Company. If that be so, the explanation no doubt is that the Steamer Company took up this position, that as regards the Railway Company the Steamer Company was merely an Agent acting on behalf of the opposite party as principal.

In the second place, it was argued that in the present case there was no "loss" of any goods within the meaning of section 77 of the Act and that for that reason there was no necessity to give any notice of the claim to the Railway Company. It does not appear to have been contended in any previous case in this Court that no notice is required of a claim for compensation in respect of the non-delivery or short delivery of goods entrusted to a Railway Administration for carriage. But that is not of itself a sufficient answer.

Section 77 of the Act so far as it is material provides:—"A person shall not be entitled to compensation for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to be so carried," that is carried by Railway, "unless his claim to the compensation has been preferred in writing by him or on his behalf to the Railway Administration within six months from the date of the delivery of the animals or goods for carriage by Railway."

I will assume that the word "loss" in this section means loss by the Railway Administration. The argument is that goods not delivered or short delivered are not "lost" and reliance was placed on the judgment of Jwala Prasad, J., in East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan-Ram Prashad (6). The learned Judge referred to the distinction which appears in Arts. 30 and 31 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act between claims against a carrier on the one hand for compensation of losing or injuring goods and on the other for compensation for non-delivery of or delay in delivering goods. In the first case limitation runs from the time when the loss or injury occurs and in the second case from the time when the goods ought to be delivered. In my opinion, with respect, these two Articles of the Limitation Act throw little, if any, light on the construction of section 77 of the Railways Act. There may be reasons for the presence of both Articles in the Limitation Act but they may still be overlapping. Where there is an agreement by a carrier to deliver goods at a fixed time or within a reasonable time, a claim for goods lost may be drawn as a claim for their non-delivery.

The reasoning of the learned Judge then proceeds on the assumption, mistaken, as I venture to think, that a claim for non-delivery necessarily imports that the Railway Company are consciously and deliberately withholding goods in their possession, which they might deliver if they chose to do so.

As it seems to me, a claim for non-delivery without more, merely asserts that the goods were not delivered at the agreed time or within a reasonable time. Such a claim asserts nothing as to the cause of the non-delivery.

In Ghelabhai Punsli v. East Indian Railway Company (7) there was no question as to the construction of section 77 of the Railways Act. The question was as to the right of the Railway Company to exemption from liability under a Risk-Note in Form B. The decision is based on the judgment of Pallet, C. B., in the Irish case of Curran v. Midland G. W. Railway Company of Ireland (9) which also turned on a special contract between the consignor and the Railway Company. Curran's case (9) has recently been the subject of comment in the House of Lords in Smith Limited v. Great Western Railway (10). But for the present purpose it is unnecessary to examine these cases. The question discussed was a question of the burden of proof turning on the state of the evidence at the conclusion of the trial upon an issue raised between the parties which it was necessary to decide one way or the other.

In the present case there is no finding that the goods were detained by the Railway Company. It is true also that there is no finding that the goods had, as the Company alleged, been stolen from the godown. As the case seems to have been framed and placed before the Court, it was not necessary to deal with these matters. Damages were awarded merely for the non-delivery of the goods.

I have indicated that, in my view, a claim for compensation for non-delivery includes the case of the loss of the goods just as much as the case of the detention of the goods. If that be so, it seems to follow that the statutory notice is a condition precedent to a verdict being taken on that alternative footing, because on that footing the goods may have been lost.

If it be conceded, though I do not decide, that where goods are wrongfully detained by a Railway Company, no notice is necessary under section 77, a plea by the Company of want of notice must at least be met on that ground and the Court must be asked to find that the goods were being detained and were not lost when they ought to have been delivered.

Where detention is not pleaded or put in issue a claim simpliciter for compensation for non-delivery must be understood as including or involving a claim for the loss of the goods within the meaning of section 77.

ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY CO. LD. v. RADHIKA MOHAN NATH.

The result is that, in my opinion, the Rule should be made absolute and the suit against the Company dismissed with costs of the Court below and of this Rule (hearing-fee four gold mohurs).

Ghose, J.—I agree. The current of decisions in this Court is that notice under section 77 of the Railways Act should be served on the Agent. In the case of Woods, Agent to the Assam Bengal Railway Company v. Meher Ali (5) the learned Judges expressly say that they did not desire to differ from those decisions. It was apparently found as a fact in that case that the Agent was aware of the notice, and it was held, under the circumstances of the case, that the Agent had the required notice. If that is so, the decision was in accordance with Secretary of State v. Dip Chand (11) where it was held that the plea of want of notice would be sufficiently met if it were shewn that the notice served on the Traffic Superintendent reached the Manager within six months of the delivery of the goods. There is no such allegation or finding in this case. The notice served on the Traffic Manager was not, therefore, sufficient in law.

I do not think that there is much substance in the argument advanced by the learned Vakil for the opposite party in support of the decision of the lower Court, that no notice under section 77 of the Railways Act was necessary in the present case as the goods were not delivered by the plaintiff to the Railway Company for being carried by the Railway. If this contention is accepted I think it would cut the ground on which the claim against the Railway Company rests, and the Railway Company would not at all be liable for the value of the goods. The learned Vakil urged that the Steamer Company was really liable to the plaintiff and the Railway Company is only liable because they took upon themselves the liability of the Steamer Company to pay damages for the breach of their contract. The plaintiff, however, did not bring his suit on that basis, and if he had done so there might have been various grounds for defence on behalf of the Railway Company. The liability of the Railway Company must, therefore, depend on the fact that there was delivery of the goods to the Railway Company, either by the Steamer Company acting as agents of the plaintiff, or by the plaintiff to the Steamer Company who received delivery of the goods as agents of the Railway Company. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot get rid of the obligation to give notice of his claim on this ground.

It is next urged by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that no notice under section 77 was necessary as the plaintiff sued for non-delivery of the goods and not for loss. For this distinction reliance is placed on the case of East Indian Railway Company v. Kali Charan-Ram Prashad (6). I find some difficulty in understanding the facts of the case as reported. It is stated at page 147* of the report: "The Court below has found that the goods in question were lost not on account of a running train robbery, nor on account of any theft, but on account of the wilful neglect on the part of defendant's servants." Thus, there was a finding that the goods were lost, and in such a case it cannot be questioned that notice is necessary. But there is another passage at page 148* which runs thus:—"The lower Court has disbelieved the plea set up by the defendant of the loss of the goods in the manner alleged by the Company and has expressly held that it was a case of non-delivery of the goods to the plaintiff." The learned Judge, however, held that, although no notice was necessary, the plaintiff had actually given notice, which according to him was good notice under section 77 of the Act. He cited a number of cases in support of his opinion that the notice served was sufficient. It may, however, be pointed out, in passing, that the cases of the Calcutta High Court cited do not seem to support his proposition. The observations, therefore, in the judgment that notice under section 77 was not necessary in the case of non-delivery of goods, are mere obiter. In conclusion the learned Judge declined to exercise his discretionary power of revision in favour of the Company as in his opinion justice had been done.

Reference has been made to Arts. 30 and 31 of the Limitation Act in support of the contention that there is a distinction between loss and non-delivery. That distinction may be necessary for the purpose of fixing the starting point for the period of limitation for suits under different circumstances. Art. 30 applies only to a suit for compensation against a carrier for losing or injuring goods, and difficulty was actually experienced in applying the appropriate Article to suits for damages for non-delivery before the amendment of the Limitation Act, I shall refer to later on. It can, therefore, be hardly argued by reference to those Articles that the word 'loss' in section 77 of the Railways Act excludes 'non-delivery of' the goods. The words 'non-delivery of' in Art. 31 of the Limitation Act were first introduced by way of amendment in the Limitation Act of 1877, by section 3 of Act X of 1899. By section 2 of the same Act addition of a new section 10 to the Carriers Act of 1865 was made. Section 9 of the Carriers Act provides that, "In any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss, damage or non-delivery of goods it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove....." Under the new section 10 notice was required to be given as is provided in section 77 of the Railways Act. The word 'non-delivery' does not appear in section 10, but it seems to me that it was not intended to exclude the necessity of giving notice in the case of non-delivery, although a different Article was found necessary for the purpose of limitation of suits. The case might have been different if the suit was for damages for wrongful detention of the plaintiff's goods. But in such a case as that, the plaintiff must prove that the goods are with the Railway Company which have been wrongfully detained by them otherwise his suit must fail. The word 'loss' used in section 77 is, in my opinion, wide enough to include all cases where the goods are not forthcoming and, therefore, includes a case of non-delivery. It may also be observed that under section 72 of the Railways Act, subject to the other provisions of the Act, the liability of the Railway Company is that of a bailee under sections 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 161 of the Contract Act runs as follows:—"If, by the fault of the bailee, the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, or destruction or any deterioration of the goods from that time." It seems to me that if any person asks for damages for any loss on account of goods not being delivered against a Railway Company, he is, under the provisions of section 72, bound to give notice under section 77.

In order to see whether the contention of the opposite party can find any support in the case of Curran v. Midland G. W. Railway Company of Ireland (9) and the case of Ghelabhai Punsi v. East Indian Railway Company (7) which followed the Irish case, we have examined those cases as also the case of Smith Limited v. Great Western Railway Company (10) in which Curran's case (9) was distinguished and commented on. Curran's case (9) turned upon the question of burden of proof with reference to the special contract entered into between the parties and cannot, therefore, be of any assistance in deciding the question whether the word "loss" in section 77 of the Railways Act excludes the case of 'non-delivery'.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it was incumbent on the plaintiff who sues the Railway Company for damages for non-delivery of goods to give notice as provided in section 77 of the Railways Act. I desire, however, to make it clear that I do not intend to express any opinion as to the meaning of the word "loss" where it is contained in a Risk-Note or any other document which should be construed with reference to the context. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

SAUDAMINI DEBYA—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Stipulation for exorbitant interest on rent in arrears—Sale of tenancy for arrears of rent—Purchaser without notice of stipulation, position of.

ANNADAMOYI DEBI v. SAUDAMINI DEBYA;

The purchaser of a holding at a sale for arrears of rent held at the instance of the landlord, purchases it with the ordinary incidents of a tenancy. A stipulation for the payment of interest at an unusual and an exorbitant rate on the rent in arrears is not an incident of a tenancy. [p. 720, col. 2.]

Where a holding is put up to sale for arrears of rent at the instance of the landlord without any notice in the sale proclamation that there was a written contract for the payment of interest at a very high rate, a purchaser would be justified in purchasing the holding on the assumption that the ordinary rate of interest was payable, and the landlord is not entitled to recover from such purchaser the rate of interest stated in the written contract. Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bakerganj, dated the 25th September 1920, modifying the decree of Additional Munsif, Perozepore, dated the 30th July 1919.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Bepin Chandra Bose), for the Appellant.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The question is as to the rate of interest payable by the defendants. The kabuliyat was executed in 1882 before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Court below has allowed interest at the rate of 12½ per cent. I submit the mere fact that the defendant is an auction-purchaser would not disentitle me from claiming interest at the stipulated rate. Refers to Raj Narain Mitter v. Panna Chand Singh (1), Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (2), Tiluk Chandra Roy v. Jasoda Kumar Roy (3), Madhumala v. Alfazaddi Kazi (4) and Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Miji (5). My submission is that no distinction should be drawn between private purchases and purchases at auction-sale.

Babu Brojo Lal Chackravarty (with him Babu Susil Kumar Bose), for the Respondents.—I submit the learned Judge has quite correctly disallowed the interest at the rate claimed which is unusual and exorbitant. See Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (2) and Alim v. Satis Chandra Chaturdhuri (6). The cases cited by the appellant are all distinguishable and do not apply. The distinction between a private sale and an auction-sale is vitally important inasmuch as in the latter case the purchaser is absolutely in the dark as to the incidents of the tenancy. The purchaser, therefore, in justice and equity cannot be bound by unusual stipulations of which he knew nothing at the time of the purchase.

Dr. Basak, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The only question involved in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff-landlord is entitled to interest on overdue instalments at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum.

The Court of Appeal below has found that interest at 75 per cent. is an unusual and exorbitant rate and that it was an unconscionable bargain at its inception. It accordingly allowed simple interest at 12½ per cent. per annum.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and it is contended that as the kabuliyat was executed in May 1882 before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendant is liable to pay interest at the rate stipulated in it.

No doubt, the kabuliyat having been executed prior to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of section 67 are not applicable to the case; but the defendant purchased the holding at a sale for arrears of rent held at the instance of the landlord, the plaintiff. As a purchaser at the rent sale, the defendant purchased it with the ordinary incidents of a tenancy.

It was pointed out by Banerji, J., in the case of Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (2) that "a stipulation for the payment of interest at an unusual and an exorbitant rate cannot be supposed to be an incident of a tenancy which would attach to it even after a sale for arrears of rent;" and again "the distinction between usual and unusual term of a contract of tenancy is a distinction which should be taken into consideration in determining whether the incident in question continues to attach to the tenancy, notwithstanding its sale for arrears of rent, and it is a distinction which has been given effect to by this Court in certain cases, of which I may refer to the following, namely, Deendyal Paramanick v. Juggeshur Roy (7) and Alim v. Satis Chandra Chaturdhurin (6)."

On behalf of the appellant, we have been referred to the case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Panma Chand Singh (1) where the auction-purchaser of a dur-putni tenure was held to be bound by the stipulation contained in the dur-putni lease as to the payment of interest on arrears of rent, such a stipulation where there is nothing unusual in it being part of an ordinary incident of a tenure. It was also held that the auction-sale of a tenancy does not involve any new contract between the auction-purchaser and the landlord, a question upon which an opinion was expressed by one of the Judges (Rampini, J.) in the case of Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (2); the other Judge Banerji, J., expressing no opinion on the point. As stated above, however, in the case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Panma Chand Singh (1), the tenancy was a dur-putni, i.e., a permanent tenure and not a raiya holding and it was upon that ground that Banerji, J., distinguished the cases Alim v. Satis Chandra Chaturdhurin (6) and Kali Nath Sen v. Trailokhya Nath Roy (2).

It is unnecessary to refer to cases relating to permanent tenures, because the holder of a permanent lease may not be entitled to the indulgent consideration which might be extended to a raiya. So far as cases governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act are concerned, section 179 expressly provides that nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent a proprietor or a holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area from granting a permanent mukarrari lease on any terms agreed on between him and his tenant.

The learned Pleader for the appellant also relied upon the cases of Tiluk Chandra Roy v. Jasoda Kumar Roy (3) and Madhumila v. Alafzaddi Kazi (4).

These cases, no doubt, related to raiya holdings but the defendants in both the cases were private purchasers from the original tenant; and, apart from the provisions (7) Marsh 252; 2 Hay 21.

of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they would be bound by the contract in the same way as the original tenant was.

We were also referred to the case, of Abdul Hamid v. Abdul Miji (5) where the original kabuliyat which was executed prior to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act provided for interest at the rate of 75 per cent. on overdue instalments and there was subsequently a solenama between the landlord and the tenant by which there was some variation of the rent. The question was whether the solenama created any new contract of tenancy. It was held that the solenama did not create any new contract of tenancy and the plaintiff was entitled to get interest at the rate stipulated. But there the defendant was the original tenant and there was no question of purchase at a sale for arrears of rent at the instance of the landlord.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the appellant that no distinction should be drawn between the case of a private purchaser and a purchaser at a rent-sale.

But there is a distinction between these two cases. In the case of a private transfer, the transferee can and should call for the title-deed of the vendor; and if there is a lease providing for interest at a high rate, the purchaser becomes aware of such a contract before his purchase. He, therefore, purchases with full knowledge of the terms of the lease and he cannot, in these circumstances, complain that the rate of interest is an exorbitant one. In the case of a rent-sale, on the other hand, the purchaser ordinarily cannot have any knowledge of the terms of the contract between the landlord and the tenant, unless the landlord chooses to specify in the sale proclamation any incident of the tenancy or refer to the contract under which the tenancy is held.

In these cases, we may observe, there was no such notification by the landlord. Many agricultural tenancies in this country are held without any written contract at all and if the landlord does not in the sale proclamation refer to any written contract under which interest at a very high rate is payable, the purchaser has no means of knowing the terms of the contract; and when a holding is put up to sale at the instance of the landlord himself without any such notifications, the purchaser may be justified in purchasing the holding on the assumption that the ordinary rate of interest is payable, interest under the Bengal Tenancy Act being payable at 12½ per cent. and before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act at 12 per cent. under Act VIII of 1869.

For reasons stated above, we think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Manager, position—
Suit for rent by manager—Minor co-parceners,

Joint landlords—Suit for rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 188, application of.

The ordinary rule no doubt is that all persons in whom the right to any relief exists should be joined as plaintiffs. But this rule is not of general application. There are several statutory exceptions to the rule, and there is no reason why there should not be other exceptions based not on any legislative provision but on the substantive law applicable to the parties. The case of the manager of a Hindu joint family is such an exception. [p. 724, col. 2; p. 725, col. 1.]

A suit for rent instituted by the managing members of a joint Mitakshara family is not of necessity bound to fail, merely because the infant co-parceners have not been placed on the record as joint plaintiffs or pro forma defendants. [p. 726, col. 2; p. 727, col. 1.]

(Case-law reviewed.)

Where all the adult members of a joint Hindu family appear on the record as plaintiffs or defendants it is a legitimate presumption that they are acting as managers on behalf of themselves and of the minor members of the family who do not join in the suit. [p. 726, col. 1.]

Where a suit is brought by or against a manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the other members of the family are not necessary parties to the suit, which will consequently not fail by reason of their non-joinder. [p. 724, col. 1.]

The tendency of modern decisions is in favour of recognition of the representative character of the manager, though the question must be decided in each individual case or special class of cases, subject to the operation of relevant statutory provisions if any, such as the one embodied in section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 725, col. 2.]

The provision contained in section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to the institution of a suit for arrears of rent, which is not something that the landlord is required or authorised to do by the Act. [p. 723, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 19th March 1920, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Midnapore, dated the 22nd December 1917.

Babus Mahendra Nath Ray and Gopendra Nath Das, for the Defendants.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are directed against the decree in a suit for arrears of rent. The defendant holds a tenure in the zemindari mahal Tamruk situated in the District of Midnapore. The plaintiffs, who are two brothers governed by the Mitakshara Law, own twelve-and-a-half annas share in the zemindari and are patnidars under the proprietors of the remaining three-and-a-half annas share. The plaintiffs are consequently the immediate landlords of the defendant as a tenureholder, and as such they instituted the present suit on the 12th December 1916, for recovery of arrears of rent due from him. On the 12th February 1917 the defendant filed a written statement setting forth various objections to the claim. On the 28th February 1917 he filed an additional written statement contending that the suit could not proceed, inasmuch as the minor son of the first plaintiff, born on the 16th November 1916, had not been joined as a co-plaintiff. On the 20th December 1917 he filed a supplementary written statement objecting that the suit could not proceed as the minor son of the second plaintiff, born on the 15th April 1917, had not been joined as a co-plaintiff. The Trial Court held that the plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit without joining their minor sons as co-plaintiffs, and, after dealing with the objections on the merits, decreed the claim in part. Upon appeal, the District Judge held that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit for the entire rent in the absence of their sons, but he decreed the claim in respect of twelve-and-a-half annas share, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had been registered under the Land Registration Act as proprietors in respect of that share. Both the parties were dissatisfied with this decree. The plaintiffs have appealed (No. 1747 of 1920) on the ground that they were competent to maintain the claim for the entire rent as managers of a joint Mitakshara family, even though their minor sons were not brought on the record. The defendant has appealed (No. 1655 of 1920) on the ground that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been misconstrued and misapplied by the District Judge and the claim should have been dismissed in its entirety. We shall consider, first, the appeal preferred by the plaintiffs.

It may be observed at the outset that the plaintiffs, who are members of a joint Mitakshara family, are joint landlords within the meaning of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is, under the Act, required or authorised to do, must be done, either by both or all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them. This provision has no application to the institution of a suit for arrears of rent, which is not something that the landlord is required or authorised to do by the Bengal Tenancy Act: See Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (1). This renders inapplicable the decisions in Sati Prosad v. Radha Nath (2) and Sati Prosad Gorga v. Sanatan Dhara (3), where, in cases instituted by the present plaintiffs, it was ruled that section 188 governed a suit for alteration of rent on alteration of area under section 52 and a proceeding for settlement of fair and equitable rent under section 105. The case before us, which is not subject to the operation of section 188, must consequently be determined with reference to what Sir Arthur Wilson called "the general principles of legal procedure," in Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (1).

The proposition that in suits relating to transactions affecting a joint Hindu family, all the members thereof need not always be joined, was foreshadowed by Sir James Colville in Jogendra Deb Roy Kut v. Funindro Deb Roy Kut (4), when he observed that cases sometimes occur "wherein the interest of a joint and undivided family being in issue, one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit which may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit." This assumes that, in respect of the subject-matter of the litigation, the members of the family had no conflicting interest inter se. This principle has been reiterated by the Judicial Committee in two recent decisions. In Kishen Parshad v. Har Narain (5) where the Judicial Committee reversed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Shamrathi Singh v. Kishen Prasad (6), Lord Robson observed as follows:

"The Indian decisions as to the powers of the managing members of an undivided Hindu joint family are somewhat conflicting. It is, however, clear that where a business like money-lending has to be carried on in the interests of the family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving receipts and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business. Without a general power of that sort, it would be impossible for the business to be carried on at all."

Again, in Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (7), where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Jaddo Kuar v. Sheo Shanker Ram (8) Lord Moulton observed as follows:

KALIPADA DAS v. RAJA SATI PRASAD.

"There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions, from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent, that there are occasions, including foreclosure suits, when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of this case and the findings of the Courts upon them, that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggestion that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself."

These pronouncements by the Judicial Committee weaken the effect of the decisions in Bal Kishan Lal v. Topeswar Singh (9), Lala Suraj Prosad v. Golab Chand (10); Debi Prosad v. Dharamjit (11) and Bissonath Prosad Malita v. Brindesri Prosad Singh (12), which had already been doubted by the Full Bench in Bidya Prosad Singh v. Bhupnarain Singh (13), namely, that all the co-parceners are necessary parties to a suit on a mortgage of a joint family property, so that if a decree is passed in such a suit without their being joined as parties, the decree is not binding on them and they are entitled to sue for declaration that their interests are not bound thereby. The opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee, namely, that where a suit is brought on a mortgage by or against a manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the other members of the family are not necessary parties to the suit, which will consequently not fail by reason of their non-joinder, harmonises with the rule enforced in Allahabad in Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (14); Madan Lal

v. Kishen Singh (15); in Madras in Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Aiyar (16), and in Patna in Abdul Rahman v. Shib Lal Sahu (17); Bajinath Goenka v. Daleep Narain Singh (18); Muhammad Sadiq v. Khedan Lal (19); Girwar Narain Mahton v. Makhbulunnissa (20) and Raghunandan Singh v. Parmeshwar Dayal Singh (21). In Bombay, a similar result has been reached by a circuitous process, for, although it has been held that all the co-parceners are necessary parties to a suit brought on a mortgage by or against the manager, the decree in a suit, not so constituted against all the members, but brought against the manager alone in his representative character, when executed, passes the interest of the other co-parceners also in the property, though the sale may be avoided by them on the ground that they were not liable to the debt contracted by the manager; see Ramchandra Narayan v. Shripatrao Tukojirao (22); Laxmam Nilkant v. Vinayak Keshav (23); Chimana Sada Shiv v. Sada Barka (24); Ramakrishna Narayan v. Vinayak Narayan (25); Madhusudan Shivaram Kanvinde v. Bhanu Atramaram Lad (26). The true position is tersely put by Benson and Sundara Aiyar, J.J., in Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Aiyar (16).

"The ordinary rule no doubt is that all persons in whom the right to any relief exists, should be joined as plaintiffs. But this rule is not of universal application. The language of section 26 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, corresponding to O. I, r. 1, of the present Code, is 'that all persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs, in whom the right to any relief..... is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative.....' Section 30 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to O. I. r. 8, lays down the general rule of procedure where one or more persons wish to sue on behalf of or for the benefit of themselves and other persons having the same interest in a suit. But it cannot, in our opinion, be laid down that in no case has a person a right to sue on behalf of himself and others, where the procedure laid down in section 30 is either not applicable or has not been taken advantage of. There are several statutory exceptions to the rule, and there is no reason why there should not be other exceptions based not on any legislative provision but on the substantive law applicable to the parties. The judgment of the Judicial Committee, in Kishen Parshad v. Har Narain (5), already referred to, shows that the case of the manager of a Hindu family is such an exception."

This view does not militate against the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Balwant Singh v. Rockwell Clancy (27), and Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram (28). In the first case, Sir John Edge held that a mortgage by the elder of two brothers was void as against the minor younger brother, even though the mortgage was for discharging the father's debts, inasmuch as the elder brother did not profess to represent the younger brother in the transaction, and acted on his assumed position as absolute owner. In the second case, Mr. Ameer Ali held that where a minor co-parcener has in fact been joined as a party to a litigation, represented by the manager as his guardian ad litem, leave of the Court in accordance with the statutory procedure is essential to the validity of a compromise by the manager on behalf of the minor; see Upendra Nath Biswas v. Shib Kumari

Debi (29). On the other hand, the Judicial Committee held in Gulab Singh v. Raja Seth Gokuldas (30) that a manager would be acting within his powers and authority, if, in order to save the heavily encumbered joint family estate, he placed the same under the charge of the Court of Wards. It is, we think, fairly obvious that even if we assume, contrary to the opinion expressed in Daya Shankar v. Hub Lal (31), that the manager of a joint family cannot, as a universal rule, be deemed entitled to sue or liable to be sued on behalf of the family, Padmakar Vinayak Joshi v. Mahadev Krishna Joshi (32); Kashinath v. Chinnaji (33); the tendency of the modern decisions, specially those of the Judicial Committee, is in favour of recognition of the representative character of the manager, though, no doubt, the question must be decided in each individual case or special class of cases, subject to the operation of relevant statutory provisions, if any, such as the one embodied in section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An instructive example is afforded by the decision in Bhola Roy v. Jung Bahadur (34), where it was ruled that the plaintiff, who alone had always collected rent as the head of the joint Mitakshara family, was himself competent to maintain the suit, even though he had an infant nephew. The addition of the infant as co-plaintiff raised in that case, a question of limitation; it was ruled, that this did not affect the right of the original plaintiff to continue the suit and to recover the amount due. A stricter view had been previously adopted in Mir Tapurah Hossein v. Gopi Narayan (35), where it was ruled that when rent is due to the members of a joint Hindu family, it is not open to the manager alone to maintain a suit for rent without joining the other members, either as plaintiffs or as defendants, except when the tenant has dealt with such managing members as sole landlords. In support of this view, reliance was placed, amongst other decisions, on Shamrathi Singh v. Kishan Prasad (6), which, as we have seen, has been overruled by the Judicial Committee on appeal: Kishan Pershad v. Har Narain (5); see also Muhammad Sadiq v. Khedan Lal (19); Romesh Chandra Mandal v. Bhuyan Bhaskar Mahapatra (36). The decision in Harihar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal (37) also harmonises with the less stringent view, though in that case, as in Bhola Roy v. Jung Bahadur (34), the minor member had been placed on the record represented by the adult managing member as guardian ad litem. That, however, is, in most cases, really a matter of form, though it has the appearance of substance. As explained in Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda Sahoy (38) a guardian cannot be appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, in respect of the property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law and possessed of no separate estate. In such an event, if the minor is added as a party to the suit, the manager would represent himself and his minor co-parceners as his guardian ad litem. But precisely the same result is reached, if the manager be deemed to have instituted the suit or to have defended the claim in his representative character, and, as pointed out in Krishna Jiva Tewari v. Bishnath (39), where all the adult members of a joint Hindu family appear on the record as plaintiffs or defendants, it is a legitimate presumption that they are acting as managers on behalf of themselves and of the minor members of the family who do not join in the suit: Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (14); Madan Lal v. Kishen Singh (15); Sheo Dulare v. Brij Bhukhan (40).

It is well established that the manager of a joint Hindu family has power to acknowledge a debt and pay interest thereon so as to bind all the members including minors: Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram De Sinha (41); Chidambaram Chetti v. Ramaswami Chettiar (42); and he may give a discharge under section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act: Banwari Lal v. Sheo Sankar Misser (43). It is competent to him to agree to a reference to arbitration on behalf of himself and his minor co-parceners: Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Nahwa Salimullah Bahadur (44); Uppara Chinngappa v. Gaddam Chinna Hanumanna (45). He is equally competent to enter into a compromise, beneficial to his minor co-parceners, with a view to put an end to a threatened litigation: Bai Rewa v. Jethabhai Vithaldas (46). A decree obtained against him in a suit to which the other members are not parties, may be operative against the latter under certain circumstances, provided the matter was one in which the manager sued was entitled to represent the whole family; Amrita Sundari v. Sherajuddin Ahamed (47); Balki v. Brojobashi (48); Jijamba Bai Sahib v. Sagniram Jathai Row Sahib (49). It is equally well settled that in a joint Hindu family all the members need not join in granting leases; the manager can grant leases and sue for rents on behalf of the family: Ayyappa v. Venkatakrishnamarazu (50); Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Rangasawmy Aiyangar (51) he can also recognise the transferee of a non-transferable holding; Golapdi Meah v. Purna Chandra Dutta (52).

In these circumstances, we are not prepared to hold that a suit for rent instituted by the managing members of a joint Mitakshara family must of necessity fail, merely because the infant co-parceners have not been placed on the record as joint plaintiffs or pro forma defendants. In the case before us, there is manifestly no substance in the objection taken piecemeal by the defendant. He held the tenure under the plaintiffs and had always paid rent to them, and cannot be maintained with any show of reason that he would have been secured immunity from a possible claim by the infants if they had been brought on the record and represented by their respective fathers as guardian ad litem.

The result is, that the appeal by the plaintiffs is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The appeal by the defendant must as a corollary stand dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration from fraudulent transferee, whether protected.

A bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration from a fraudulent transferee without notice of the fraud is protected under the proviso to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 728, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 747 of 1919, presented against a decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Tirur, in Original Suit No. 469 of 1918.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 21st, 25th, 27th of July and 3rd of August 1922: the Court delivered the following.

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother and can add nothing to his reasons for it.

Ramesam, J.—The facts out of which this second appeal arises may be briefly stated as follows:—The plaintiff obtained on the 31st March 1914 a decree in Original Suit No. 500 of 1912 against the present defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and in execution of the decree attached the suit properties. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 relying on a sale-deed (Exhibit III dated 5th October 1914) preferred a claim objecting to the attachment (Miscellaneous Petition No. 328 of 1918). The claim was allowed on 21st February 1918 (Exhibit A). The present suit was filed on 10th August 1918 for a declaration that the sale under Exhibit III was made with intent to defraud creditors and cannot affect plaintiff's right to attach the properties. On 24th February 1918 (three days after the disposal of the claim petition) the property was purchased from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by defendants Nos. 5 and 6 under Exhibit VI. They contend that they are bona fide purchasers for consideration and without notice of the intention to defraud, if any, on the part of the parties to Exhibit III. The Courts below have held that Exhibit III was executed as alleged by the plaintiff. As to defendants Nos. 5 and 6, they held, relying on Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Sahib (1) that their sale under Exhibit VI was void against plaintiffs as being made pendente lite and did not express any opinion on the question whether they are bona fide purchasers for value. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 appeal. The finding that Exhibit III is voidable by the plaintiff is not challenged in appeal.

(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 11; 38 M. 535; 26 M. L. J. 449.

POTHANE PUTHAN VITTHIL V. ADRASSERI RARU NAIR.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the case in Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb (1) is not correctly decided; that it has been dissented from in Pethu Aiyar v. Sankaranarayana Pillai (2) and that a finding should be called for from the lower Appellate Court on the question whether defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are bona fide purchasers for value.

It is contended for the respondent that, even if the sale to defendants Nos. 5 and 6 is not vitiated by the doctrine of lis pendens, it is unnecessary to have a finding on its bona fides as the proviso to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act does not protect bona fide purchasers for consideration from a fraudulent transferee but protects only bona fide purchasers from the first transferor. In support of this contention he relied on In Basti Begam v. Banarsi Prasad (3). The conclusion stated at page 308 of that case—"Basti Begum took the transfer subject to all defects in the title of her transferor and cannot in equity set up the fictitious document against a bona fide mortgage. The fictitious instrument received, we think, no new force against the plaintiff from the transfer. The proviso to section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, which was relied on by Mr. Dillon, does not appear to us to help his client. That proviso was intended to safeguard rights which have been already acquired—" seem to support the respondent, though the last sentence is not quite intelligible. In this case, the first transaction is a mortgage, but, as I do not see any reason to distinguish between a mortgage and a sale or between a mortgage of immoveable property and one of moveables in the application of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, the case requires further consideration. A number of English cases were cited in it. In the first one Halifax Barking Company v. Gledhill (4), the provisions of 13 Eliz., Ch. V., were referred to; but the confusion of Kay, J., does not support the conclusion in Basti Begam v. Banarsi Prasad (3) and no reasons are given in the latter to show how the former was intended to be got over. I will refer to this case again. The other cases cited in Basti Begam v. Banarsi Prasad (3) fall into two groups:—In the first group, consisting of Cockell v. Taylor (5), Ogilvie v. Jeaffreson (6), Parker v. Clarke (7) the second transaction, though bona fide did not prevail; in the second group, consisting of French v. Hope (8), Bickerton v. Walker (9) and Rice v. Rice (10), the second transaction was upheld on the ground that it was a bona fide transaction for consideration without notice of the prior equity. In all these six cases there is no question of the application of 13 Eliz., Ch. V., or 27 Eliz., Ch. IV. The earlier transactions in the first three cases were not valid even as between the parties—Collett was defrauded by Taylor in Cockell v. Taylor (5) Ogilvie was defrauded by his Solicitor in Ogilvie v. Jeaffreson (6) and Cruchley executed the mortgage while in prison and under the undue influence of Thomas in Parker v. Clarke (7). In each of the other three cases the first transaction was perfectly valid—there being no fraud or undue influence vitiating it. The second transferees obtained valid titles by estoppel. It seems to me these six cases are illustrative of the rule now embodied in India in section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the first three cases there was not the free consent of the original owner so as to confer a title by estoppel on the second transferee. I do not think it is necessary to say, as Kekewich, J., thought in French v. Hope (8), that Parker v. Clarke (7) was overruled by Bickerton v. Walker (9). I may also add that the Vice-Chancellor's summary of the facts in Ogilvie v. Jeaffreson (6) shows that the second transferee in that case cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value. However this may be, I do not think any of these cases are a guide in the discussion of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. It seems to me that the conclusion in Basti Begam v. Banarsi Prasad (3) is not justified by the cases cited in it.

The case of Doe d. Bothell v. Martyn (11), is similar to the case above cited and does not help us. On the other hand, there are a number of other English cases on 13 Eliz., Ch. V, and 27 Eliz., Ch. IV, which will now be considered. I will divide them into two groups.

(a) Those decided with reference to 27 Eliz., Ch. IV (1), Prodgers v. Langham (12) where it was held that the feoffee for valuable consideration from the first feoffee whose feoffment was coverious has a good title against a second feoffee from the original owner. This case was followed by Lord Eldon in George v. Milbanke (13) cited below.

The case of Lloyd v. Attwood (14) seems to decide differently (see especially, Turner, L. J., 655 and Knight-Bruce, L. J., 647); but in that case the two Misses Attwood parted with the title-deeds and their mortgage has lost its priority by reason of their laches and the Misses Medley who obtained a sub-mortgage and could have asked for and known the absence of the title-deeds cannot be regarded as bona fide transferees for value. Nor did Turner, L. J., and Knight-Bruce, L. J., regard them as bona fide transferees for value. I doubt if the passage in May on Fraudulent Conveyances, page 254, relating to this case, is justified, especially in view of the cases cited at page 253.

(b) Cases decided on 13 Eliz., Ch. V.

(1) George v. Milbanke (13). For the purposes of the decision the fact that until the Voluntary Conveyances Act of 1893, all voluntary conveyances, though made without a fraudulent intention, were void against creditors, does not make a difference. This case supports the appellant.

(2) Payne v. Mortimer (15). In this case

Turner, L. J., says: "Lord Eldon, however, in George v. Milbanke (13), did not put the case upon the Statute of Elizabeth. He had regard, no doubt, and indeed the report shows, although but obscurely, that he had regard to the provision in the Statute which protects alienees for value only in the case of absence of notice, and he puts the case upon the ground of the assignee for value having a better equity than the general creditors of the settlor. That principle seems to me to reach the present case."

(3) Halifax Banking Company v. Gledhill (4). On the facts, the settlor's reservation of an interest not being tainted by intent to defraud creditors—the point does not seem to arise, but Kay, J.'s opinion is in favour of the appellant. He also seems to think that Turner, L. J.'s opinion in Payne v. Mortimer (15) is to the same effect.

(4) In re Mouat (16). The opinion of Sterling, J., at p. 834 in favour of the appellant is only an obiter dictum.

(5) Morewood v. South Yorkshire Railway & River Dun Company (17). The opinion of the Court (Pollock, C. B., and Watson Bramwell, B.B.), is in favour of the appellant.

Generally, I am unwilling to refer to American decisions. But, having regard to the paucity of authority in India and the somewhat inconclusive nature of the English cases, I now refer to two of the American cases. In Lee v. Abbe (18) and in Anderson v. Roberts (19) it was held that bona fide purchasers from a fraudulent grantee without notice of the fraud will be protected. I agree with the remarks of Spencer, C. J., at page 241, "again, the proviso is general, it exempts any conveyance upon good consideration and bona fide, to any person not having notice of the fraud or collusion, from the effects of the enacting clause. And why should not its benefits be extended to any bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, whether he purchases from the fraudulent grantor or the fraudulent grantee? I trust it has sufficiently appeared that the fraudulent grantee takes the entire interest of the fraudulent grantor, and that the deed is voidable at the instance of the creditor, not legally and strictly void." He then refers to Marshall, C. J.'s decision in Fletcher v. Peck (20) to show that a bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent grantor, is protected and proceeds: "It is in vain that we search for any difference between a conveyance by a fraudulent grantee, where the intention was to deceive subsequent purchasers, and a conveyance by a fraudulent grantor, where the intention was to defraud present or future creditors." He then refers with approval to Prodgers v. Langham (12).

I am, therefore, of opinion that the appellants' contention is right and that we must have a finding on the question whether they are bona fide purchasers for consideration and without notice of the fraud relating to Exhibit III. The question of lis pendens will be decided, if necessary, after the finding is returned. The finding will be returned with reference to the evidence on record. Six weeks are allowed for finding and ten days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of South Malabar, at Calicut, submitted the following FINDING.—Plaintiff obtained a decree in Original Suit No. 509 of 1912 against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 for possession of certain property and for rent. He executed the decree and obtained delivery of the property on 4th October 1914. On the next day, 5th October 1914, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 assigned the suit property to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under a deed, Exhibit III. Subsequently, plaintiff attached this property and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 preferred a claim. Their claim was allowed in an order passed on 21st February 1918 (Exhibit A). On 24th February 1918 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 assigned the three items of property in respect of which the claim had been allowed and one other item to defendants Nos. 5 and 6 (the appellants) by a registered deed (Exhibit VI).

2. The assignment deed executed by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to defendants

Nos. 1 and 2 (Exhibit III) has been found to be a fraud on the present plaintiff, and I am now directed to submit a finding on the evidence on record on the following issue, viz., "whether defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are bona fide purchasers for consideration and without notice of the fraud relating to Exhibit III".

3. I think that there can be no doubt that the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 purchased the property for consideration. The consideration recited in the document is the redemption of two mortgages of Rs. 150 and 100 respectively and a cash payment of Rs. 250. The two mortgages are evidenced by Exhibit IV and Exhibit V and are proved by Krishna Menon (D.W. No. 2) who attested both of them. He says that the mortgages were executed for full consideration and that the mortgagee of Exhibit IV was in possession of the mortgaged property by virtue of the mortgage. He does not say if the other mortgagee obtained possession. This witness's evidence is not impeached. That defendants Nos. 5 and 6 redeemed these mortgages is evidenced by the surrender deeds (Exhibits VIII and IX) executed by the mortgagees on 18th April 1918 and 27th March 1918. The sixth defendant, examined as D. W. No. 1, also says that he and fifth defendant paid the consideration for Exhibit VI in full and have since been in possession of the property and have been paying the Government revenue thereon. The title-deeds, Exhibits I, II and III, were produced in the suit by defendants Nos. 5 and 6. I cannot see any suspicious features in the transaction between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The fact that the property was purchased only three days after the claim petition was allowed is not, to my mind, suspicious. The fact that the claim was allowed might well lead defendants Nos. 5 and 6 to conclude that the title of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was good and so induce them to conclude the sale. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are not related to any of the other defendants. It is argued that the consideration paid was inadequate. The rent is said to be 37 paras of paddy and I am asked to capitalise this at 4 per cent., and so arrive at a value of a little over Rs. 500 as against the sum of Rs. 500 paid for the property. But this is not a safe conclusion to draw. Interest on his money is not the only consideration which influences a purchaser. Moreover, even the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 did make a good bargain it does not follow that they are not bona fide purchasers.

4. It has next to be considered whether defendants Nos. 5 and 6 had notice. They certainly had notice, Exhibit III, but it does not follow that they had notice of the fraud, and I do not think that they can be assumed to have had notice either actual or constructive of the fraud relating to Exhibit III. The persons to whom they would naturally go for information are defendants' witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 and the mortgagee Narayanan Nair who held the document, Exhibit III. None of these persons was likely to tell them anything that would lead them to think that a fraud had been committed. Defendants' witnesses Nos. 1 and 2, of course, would not do so and Narayanan Nair naturally would not as he was to get his mortgage redeemed by them. The document itself (Exhibit III) which defendant No. 6 says he saw would tell him nothing. Even if he knew of the claim petition, this too would, I think, tell him nothing; on the other hand, the order allowing the claim would lead him to think that title of the claimants was good. I do not think that the defendants were bound to pursue the matter of the claim petition and ascertain what objections to the claim were raised by the decree-holder and unless they did this, they would not know the defect in their vendor's title.

5. In the result my finding is that the defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are bona fide purchasers for consideration and without notice of the fraud relating to Exhibit III.

This second appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The lower Court was called on to find on the question whether the appellant (fifth and sixth defendants) were bona fide purchasers for consideration without notice of the fraud involved in Exhibit III. In returning its finding it has dealt separately with the question whether the fifth and sixth defendants were bona fide purchasers and whether they had notice. The attempt to separate these two questions is not usually sound. For it is seldom possible to form an adequate or correct opinion of the conduct of a transferee without considering whether his good faith extends to his possession of actual or constructive notice, with reference to the whole circumstances of the case. It is, however, sufficient for us to deal with the portion of the finding which relates to the fifth and sixth defendants' possession of notice. For the lower Court has, in our opinion, entirely mistaken the legal position created by the facts.

The lower Court says that the fifth and sixth defendants would not, even if they made enquiries, have obtained information from the first and second defendants' witnesses or the mortgagee Narayanan Nair, because the first and second defendants' witnesses of course would not disclose any fraud, and Narayanan Nair equally would not do so, as he was to get his mortgage redeemed by them. The lower Court then goes on:—"The document which the defendant No. 6 says he saw would tell him nothing" and that may be correct. But then it goes further and says that the defendants were not bound to pursue the matter of the claim petition and ascertain what objections to the claim were raised by the decree-holder. This, in our opinion, is entirely wrong. The decree-holder, the person who was alleging fraud in connection with Exhibit III, was the person, to whom enquiries as to any objections to the title to the property would naturally be addressed, and he would certainly be in the best position to say what objections in the shape of fraud were available against the title. The lower Court says also that, even if the sixth defendant knew of the claim petition, that would tell him nothing; on the other hand, the order allowing the claim would lead him to think that the title of the claimants was good. This is an absolute misrepresentation of the effect of the order, Exhibit A; and, even if this were the only objection to the lower Court's finding, we should be unable to accept that finding on account of it. Exhibit A, after stating the facts and the case of the decree-holder as being that Exhibit III evidences a fraudulent lent and collusive transaction, goes on to say that the claimant must establish his case in a regular suit properly framed for the purpose. That statement is presumably made with reference to authority, as it then stood, that a transfer can be impeached as fraudulent, not by way of a plea in defence, but in a suit properly framed for the purpose. True, the next sentence in Exhibit A, is to the effect that the claimants have established a bona fide title to the properties, whatever that may mean. But it is clear that the effect of Exhibit A, as a whole, was simply to decide in favour of the continuance of the attachment and that the order did not, and indeed could not, do more than make the title to the attached property contingent on the result of the suit, if any, which might be brought within a year. That being the real effect of Exhibit A, and the possession being with the fifth and sixth defendants, they have on their own showing failed to make any enquiry of the person who could have given them the best information as to the defects in the title. We cannot hold that they were transferees in good faith without notice. We must, therefore, reject the lower Court's finding.

The result is, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an execution first appeal which has arisen out of proceedings in execution of a decree. A preliminary objection is taken to its hearing on the ground that it was presented beyond time and is barred by limitation. The following facts must be stated to show how the appeal has arisen:—

On the 14th June 1915 the Marwar Bank in liquidation obtained a decree for sale against one Sher Muhammad Khan for Rs. 11,702-12-2. On the 9th of August 1917 the Marwar Bank assigned the decree to Nur Muhammad Khan and Abdul Aziz, the balance then due under the decree being Rs. 7,000. The assignee executed the decree and sold the mortgage property and realised a part of the decretal money leaving a balance of Rs. 4,395 still due. For the recovery of this amount the house in dispute was attached. This execution was taken against Umrao Bahadur Khan and Muhammad Alam Khan, the sons and legal representatives of Sher Muhammad Khan, who had died in the meantime. They objected to the attachment of the house on the allegation that it did not belong to the deceased judgment-debtor, their father, but that it was their own exclusive property. These objections were disallowed by an order dated the 4th of February 1922, which is the subject-matter of this appeal. The objectors lodged an appeal against this order on the 1st of March 1922 in the Court of the District Judge of Karnal. The District Judge, by an order dated the 25th of August 1922 returned the memorandum of appeal, holding that the appeal did not lie to his Court and ought to have been presented to the High Court. Accordingly, the appeal was presented to this Court on the 16th of October 1922, long after the expiry of the period within which it ought to have been filed. Along with the memorandum of appeal an affidavit was filed explaining the delay which had taken place in presenting the appeal. In the affidavit it is stated that "the memorandum of appeal was handed over to the appellant on the 29th of August 1922, so that the appellant may present the same to the High Court and the appellant has not been negligent in the prosecution of the appeal in any way. I further swear that for about six months the appeal had been pending in the Court of the District Judge, Karnal, and that the appellant had no knowledge before this time that the appeal had to be presented to the High Court."

In reply to the preliminary objection Mr. Mool Chand, Counsel for the appellant, has contended that sufficient cause has been shown for the delay and that this Court should extend the period of limitation under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. I have to decide whether the cause shown is sufficient for extending the period of limitation under the said section. The only excuse put forward in the affidavit for not filing the appeal within time in this Court is that the appellants had no knowledge before the order of the District Judge returning the memorandum of appeal that it had to be presented to the High Court. Mr. Mool Chand has contended that in the warrant for attachment the amount of the decree was shown to be only Rs. 4,395 and this had led to the mistake of filing the appeal in the Court of the District Judge, Karnal. The following facts will show that there is no truth or substance in this explanation:—

(1). On the assignment of the decree to Nur Muhammad Khan and Abdul Aziz the latter applied to have their names substituted on the execution record in place of Marwar Bank. Sher Muhammad Khan, the original judgment-debtor, objected to this application but his objection was overruled on the 4th of October 1917. Sher Muhammad Khan appealed to the Chief Court against the order overruling his objection. During the pendency of this appeal Sher Muhammad Khan died and the present appellants got their names substituted on the record in place of the name of their father and prosecuted the appeal which was eventually dismissed on the 22nd of March 1918.

(2) On the 16th of August 1918 the present appellants objected to the sale of the mortgaged property on the ground that it belonged to them, and that Sher Muhammad Khan had wrongly mortgaged it as his property and a decree for its sale had wrongly been passed. This application was presented by Mr. Baij Nath, a Vakil, at Karnal. It is necessary to mention this, because the same learned Vakil had also presented the appeal to the District Judge against the present order. On the 18th of December 1918 these objections were overruled. The appellants then presented an appeal to the Chief Court. This appeal was dismissed on the 14th of March 1919. The appellants then filed a suit for a declaration and valued their suit at Rs. 10,000 representing the amount of the decree. The suit was dismissed on the 11th of February 1920 and an appeal filed against this order is still pending in this Court.

(3) The mortgaged property was eventually sold, and on the 13th of December 1920 the sale was confirmed. Against this order the appellants filed an appeal to the High Court which was accepted on the 15th of March 1921, and the case was remanded for a re-decision. The Execution Court again decided against the objectors and the sale was again confirmed by an order made on the 14th of October 1921. The appellants again filed an appeal in the High Court which was dismissed in due course.

These facts clearly show that the appellants were perfectly aware that the valuation of the suit in which the decree under execution had been passed was over Rs. 5,000 and that an appeal in the execution proceedings would, therefore, lie to the High

UMRAO BAKHSH V. NUR MUHAMMAD KHAN.

Court. They themselves from time to time had been appealing to the High Court against various orders passed against them and they could have been under no honest and bona fide mistake when filing the appeal to the District Judge. In the case of Sarat Chander Bose v. Saraswati Debi (1) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, under circumstances almost similar to those disclosed in the present case, at page 218 made the following pertinent remark:—"Now, under section 21 of Act XII of 1887, an appeal from a decree or order of a Subordinate Judge lies to the District Judge, only when the value of the original suit in which or in any proceedings arising out of which, the decree or order was made, did not exceed Rs. 5,000, and the appeal lies to the High Court in all other cases. The test, therefore, which a litigant or his legal adviser has to apply when the forum of appeal in an execution case has to be ascertained, is what was the value of the original suit. It is not suggested in the affidavit, filed on behalf of the appellants, who are themselves Pleaders of distinction, that they were not aware, or misunderstood the effect, of this provision of the law; or that they had not materials before them sufficient to enable them to know the value of the suit. Indeed, the petition of objection, which they filed in the Court below on the 29th August 1905, furnishes ample evidence, that they had before them at that time, the decrees made by the Subordinate Judge and by this Court in the original suit; the first of these papers shows, on the face of it, that the value of the original suit was Rs. 15,260 while the second paper shows that the appeal against the original decree was preferred to this Court. It is manifest, therefore, that there was no reasonable excuse whatever for the mistake which, it is alleged, the appellants committed. In their affidavit it is stated, that as maintenance had been allowed by the decree at Rs. 108 per year, it did not strike the appellants and their legal advisers, that the value of the original suit was more than Rs. 5,000. This is obviously an indication that there was carelessness on the part of the appellants; if they had looked into the papers, with the contents of which they appear to have been quite familiar, there would not have been any room for the erroneous impression. We are unable to hold, therefore, that the appellants have made out sufficient cause within the meaning of section 5 of the "Limitation Act."

I have taken the liberty of quoting this passage because every word of what was stated by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court applies with equal force to the facts of the present case. In fact, from the facts stated above it is clear that the appellants were fully aware of the nature of the suit and of the forum of the appeal. Curiously enough, the excuse put forward in the Calcutta case was also almost exactly the same as is put forward by Mr. Mool Chand in his arguments, namely, that the amount of the decree at the date of the present execution was shown below Rs. 5,000. In order to ascertain the forum of appeal, as remarked by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, the appellants and their Vakils ought to have seen what the value of the original suit was. They have been doing this while filing appeals from previous orders to which I have referred. There is no reason why they should have made the mistake of filing the appeal to the District Judge. There was a gross negligence and carelessness both on the part of the appellants and that of their Vakils, Mr. Baij Nath, who appears to have been their legal adviser in all the previous proceedings as well. In the case of Ahmad Hassan v. Shams-ul-nisa (2). Mr. Justice Broadway held that, "a legal adviser's mistake, in order to justify an extension of the period prescribed for presenting an appeal, must be a bona fide one, and nothing can be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention." A similar rule was laid down in the case of Resal Singh v. Shadi (3). In the case of Sant Singh v. Qaim (4) a Division Bench of the Chief Court, under the circumstances exactly the same as in the present case refused to extend the period of limitation under section 5 of the Limitation Act, holding that "mere carelessness or oversight of the appellant or his Counsel in presenting an appeal in a wrong Court, which by the exercise of due diligence, could have been avoided, cannot be recognised as a sufficient reason for delay under this section." Cases might be multiplied in support of the proposition laid down in the cases already referred to, but it is not necessary to do so. In fact, the circumstances disclosed in the present case are much stronger than those disclosed in the rulings cited before me.

I am clearly of opinion that, under the circumstances established in this case, I will not be justified in extending the period of limitation under section 5 of the Limitation Act. I, therefore, hold that the appeal is barred by time and dismiss it with costs.

—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 24—Rules framed by Government to control sale of certain goods in interest of public—Agreement to sell in contravention of rules—Public policy—Money paid under agreement, whether can be recovered—Fraud—In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, applicability of.

Under the rules framed by the Madras Government relating to control of import and transport of rice, the defendant obtained a license from Government under the terms of which he was forbidden to sell rice to wholesale merchants in the port of entry and was only allowed to sell to retail dealers approved by the Collector of the District. In violation of the terms of that license the defendant entered into a contract for the sale of rice to the plaintiff who had notice of the rules and who was not an approved retail dealer within the rules. Plaintiff paid the purchase amount to defendant and the rice was delivered to the plaintiff, but, shortly after, the rice was commandeered by Government and plaintiff received only the actually controlled price which was far less than the amount paid by him to the defendant. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the difference from the defendant as loss sustained by the fraudulent representations of the defendant:

Held, (1) that the contract being in contravention of the Regulations imposed by the Government in the interests of the country and of the general public was opposed to public policy and, under sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act was void, and no claim could be legally based upon such a contract; [p. 737, col. 1.]

(2) that no claim could be based upon the fraud of the defendant apart from the contract, the plaintiff being aware of the conditions of the sale of rice; and that both parties being in pari delicto, the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applied, and the Court would not assist the plaintiff to recover in such a case. JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The plaintiff and the defendant are both merchants of Negapatam and the plaintiff entered into a contract for the purchase of rice from the defendant on the terms of Exhibits A and A1. At the time when the contract was entered into, namely, July 19, the import of rice was controlled by Government and rules were framed in accordance with which alone import and transport of rice was permitted. The defendant obtained a license from Government to import certain rice from Burma and it was this rice which he agreed to sell to the plaintiff. The rice was delivered to the plaintiff, but, shortly afterwards, 2123 bags were commandeered by Government and the plaintiff received only the actual controlled price, whereas he had paid to the defendant a considerably larger sum. The balance of 1320 bags had already been re-sold by the plaintiff and Government took no action in regard to them. The plaintiff now claims damages for loss that he has sustained by this action on the part of Government and alleges that he sustained this loss owing to the fraudulent representations of the defendant.

A question has now been raised in appeal as to whether the plaint contract was not one that was void, as being (1) opposed to public policy and (2) illegal. The question was not raised in the pleadings in the lower Court, but it is evident from the Subordinate Judge's judgment that it was, at any rate, raised at the time of arguments, and when a question of this sort is raised, I think that a Court should take notice of it, even though it does not appear in the pleadings [vide Scott v. Brown (1)] and this case can, I think, be disposed of upon this ground. When the contract was entered into, the defendant, under the terms of his license, Exhibit III, was forbidden to sell this rice to other wholesale merchants in the port of entry and he was only allowed to sell to retail dealers in the port of entry who were approved by the Collector of the District. Admittedly, the plaintiff was not one of those approved dealers and he was a wholesale merchant. Thus, these restrictions have been contravened by the sale to the plaintiff. It is contended for the plaintiff that he was not aware of these restrictions, and the lower Court has found in somewhat peculiar language that "there is no doubt that defendant was a party in pari delicto so far as his obligations were concerned to the Director of Civil Supplies * * *. But there are no convincing circumstances to show that plaintiff was aware on the date of the suit contract, that defendant was committing a breach of a legal duty by entering into the suit transaction * * * and I am not prepared to hold that both the parties are in pari delicto though one of them is and that is the defendant." It is unnecessary to discuss here whether a contract would only be void if the plaintiff entered into it, knowing that it was in breach of public policy, or illegal for I think that, in the evidence on record, there is sufficient to establish plaintiff's knowledge.

(1) (1892) 2 Q. B. 724; 61 L. J. Q. B. 738; 4 R. 42; 67 L. T. 782; 41 W. R. 116; 57 J. P. 213.

The contract, Exhibit A, reads as follows:—"I have settled price with you at the Controller's rate for the rice coming for me by the Viravu Steamer and marked 'N. R.' If perhaps the Madras Director of Supplies should ask the said bags from me and if I should have to give the bags to him, I shall return to you the money you have given me with one per cent. interest." Similar conditions appear in the counterpart executed by the plaintiff to the defendant Exhibit A1. The rates are not specified in these two documents, but a separate document bearing the same date was written by the defendant to the plaintiff in which the rates of the various kinds of rice are set forth. It is plaintiff's case that these were the agreed rates, he being informed by the defendant that they were the Controller's rates; but the defendant states that these rates were only given by him approximately as he did not know the exact rates fixed by the Controller until the 15th of July. On this point I think it is clear that the plaintiff's case is correct and that the rates were agreed upon as per Exhibit B. The defendant knew that he was not allowed to sell to the plaintiff and naturally would want some higher profit than the four annas a bag allowed to him by Government, and, if he entered into such a contract, he would naturally fix the prices at something higher than the controlled rates. Plaintiff being a big merchant in the place, must have known that he could not purchase rice except by permission from Government and, therefore, he was probably very willing to pay defendant these higher rates in order to secure the rice; when there was control of rice imports and rice sales set up in Negapatam as in other places, it is impossible to believe that the plaintiff, who was himself a big rice merchant, did not know these facts. The mention in the contract of the possibility of the rice being taken by the Director of Civil Supplies is quite sufficient to put him upon notice of the control and of the various regulations which had been prescribed with reference to the sale of rice. The plaintiff's contention that he did not know that the rates in Exhibit B were not controlled rates is somewhat futile, for no man of reasonable prudence would have entered into such a large contract without taking some steps to ascertain what were the proper rates and it is unlikely that he would have been content with this simple document, Exhibit B. If the plaintiff was aware of the conditions governing the sale of rice, conditions which had been enacted by Government for the good of the country generally; it is obvious that, in entering into this contract in contravention of those conditions, the plaintiff knew, that he was inducing the defendant to sell the rice to him, and that such sale was undoubtedly opposed to public policy; if not actually illegal. No evidence has been let in to show what were the actual Notifications of Government at the time, or whether the license, Exhibit III, was based upon those Notifications; and, therefore, it is perhaps doubtful whether the contract was actually opposed to law, but, when it was in contravention of regulations imposed for the good of the country and the general public, it is clear that the contract was opposed to public policy. Under sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act the contract is, therefore, void and the plaintiff can base no claim upon it.

It is, however, contended that his action is not based upon the contract but upon the fraud of the defendant; but, even if such fraud had been established and I have held above that I do not think it has been — the plaintiff must have been aware of the conditions governing the sale of rice when he entered into the contract and this plea would still not be good; for, even if the claim is based upon fraud, there can be no claim apart from the contract. When both parties are in pari delicto the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applies and the Courts will not assist the plaintiff to recover in such a case.

If it were necessary to do so, I would hold that the payment by the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 3,000 on the 21st of July to the defendant is proved. The lower Court has, no doubt, found that it is proved, but unfortunately only one of the plaintiff's accounts was translated in that Court and, although plaintiff's witness No. 3 in the witness-box produced the accounts and on reference to them mentioned details, the lower Court has held that there was no corroborative proof. We have the evidence not only of the plaintiff's but of plaintiff's witness No. 3 as to the payment and it is strongly corroborated by the plaintiff's accounts which there seems to be no reason to distrust. His omission to examine two of the defendant's gumastahs to whom the money was paid cannot have much importance, for although they are said to have left defendant's service, one would have expected defendant to examine them to contradict the alleged payment to them. There is also considerable ground for suspecting the truth of the defendant's accounts, but as this point is not necessary for the determination of the appeal, I will not go into this question in detail but merely state that I consider that the payment of Rs. 3,000 is proved.

The plaintiff's suit must, however, fail and this appeal be dismissed, considering defendant's conduct, each party will bear his own costs.

Devadoss, J.—The plaintiff appeals against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tanjore who dismissed his suit. The plaintiff's case as disclosed in the plaint is that he contracted with the defendant to buy 300 bags of rice at prices noted in Exhibit B; that he incurred certain charges for removing the bags of rice from the wharf to his godown; that a good portion of the rice was commandeered by the Director of Civil Supplies, Madras, and that he sustained loss thereby, and the defendant being guilty of fraud is liable for the loss sustained by him. The defendant's case is that the plaintiff contracted with him to buy imported rice at the rate fixed by the Director of Civil Supplies; that he paid only the price of the rice supplied less a small amount; that he gave delivery at the wharf; that he is not guilty of any fraud, and that he is not liable to make good any loss the plaintiff may have sustained by a portion of the rice sold being commandeered by the Director of Civil Supplies.

The main contention urged by the appellant is that a sum of Rs. 3,000 paid by him on 21st July, 1919 was not given credit to in the defendant's books. According to his case he paid a sum of Rs. 48,996 and the defendant admits all the payments but a sum of Rs. 3,000. The question is whether this sum was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on 21st July 1919. The plaintiff's evidence is that it was paid to the defendant's clerks on the 21st July 1919 in two sums Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 and he is corroborated by his accounts. The defendant's books do not show the receipt of Rs. 3,000. In order to determine whether the amount was paid by the plaintiff or not, we have to see what the rates at which plaintiff contracted to buy the rice imported by the defendant were. If the contract rates were those mentioned in Exhibit B, the plaintiff's case is rendered very probable. In this connection a few facts have to be remembered. At that time there was rice control in this Presidency. The defendant was given a permit or license by the Director of Civil Supplies, Madras, to import rice from Rangoon and, according to the terms of the license, Exhibit III, he could sell only to licensed dealers at the rates fixed by him, and should not sell to any wholesale merchant in Negapatam. The plaintiff was not a licensed dealer and was not authorised to import rice and he could not buy rice in Negapatam from any licensed dealer as he is a wholesale merchant, and according to the terms of the license granted by the Director a wholesale merchant could not buy in Negapatam, rice imported by any rice dealer. Therefore, he must have consented to pay a higher price than the Director's price in order to secure a large quantity of rice which he could sell at a considerable profit.

The defendant having sold to the plaintiff who is not a licensed dealer in contravention of the terms of Exhibit III, the Director of Civil Supplies ordered the forfeiture of the deposit of the Rs. 5,000 made by the defendant and the defendant petitioned the Director as will be seen from Exhibit XII, to reconsider his case and to pass orders cancelling the order of forfeiture by trying to make out that he was not guilty of wilful breach of the conditions of the license. In these circumstances, it is unlikely that he would admit that he sold the rice at the prices mentioned in Exhibit B. His explanation is that Exhibit B gives only tentative prices in order to enable the plaintiff to have the money ready to be paid as soon as the ship bringing the rice arrived in port. Exhibit A is the contract signed by the defendant and Exhibit A1 is the counter-part signed by the plaintiff. If the defendant's case is true, he could very well have mentioned in Exhibit B, that these prices were only tentative prices and the real prices would be those fixed by the Controller. If his case were true, why was not Exhibit B made a part of Exhibit A or Exhibit A1? It is on a separate sheet of paper which could be suppressed if the parties wished. His explanation, therefore, that these prices were only tentative prices cannot be accepted, and from the conduct of the parties it is quite clear that Exhibit B contains the real contract prices as settled between them, for it is unlikely that the plaintiff would have paid a large sum of money, nearly amounting to half a lakh of rupees, without ascertaining what the prices fixed by the Director were.

Considerable argument was advanced as regards the state of accounts of the defendant. There is a sum of Rs. 3,000 credited on 21st July 1919 in his books for which he does not give a satisfactory explanation. His evidence on that point is very unsatisfactory and, therefore, I have no hesitation in holding that Rs. 3,000 was paid to him by the plaintiff on the 21st of July 1919.

The next point argued is as regards the charge incurred by the plaintiff for removing the bags of rice from the wharf to his godown. The agreement is silent as to the place of delivery. It is not clear why the plaintiff should have paid the charges for removing the bags from the wharf without requiring the defendant to deliver the goods at his godown, or asking him to meet the costs of the removal. There is nothing in the documents to show that the defendant undertook to bear the charges of carting the rice from the wharf to the plaintiff's godown. The plaintiff not being a licensed dealer and knowing he was violating the terms of the license, Exhibit III, he was anxious evidently to remove the bags as soon as they were landed and it is likely that he took delivery at the wharf. There is evidence on the side of the plaintiff that the delivery was to be at the wharf. Whether that was so or not, the plaintiff volunteered the payment of the charges for the removal of the rice from the wharf to his godown and he cannot in law claim them from the defendant.

He claims damages on the ground of loss caused by the rice being commandeered by the Director of Civil Supplies, and his being paid a sum not less than that contracted for by him. It is unnecessary to deal with this question at length in the view I take of the questions of law in this case. Two questions arise for consideration in this case: (1) Is the contract entered into by the plaintiff with the defendant legal or not? and (2) if it is illegal, can the plaintiff get back the amount paid by him? the defendant evidently did not plead the illegality of the contract as he was trying to get back from the Director of Civil Supplies the amount of deposit made by him for obtaining the license, Exhibit III, which that officer had directed to be forfeited. It is urged by the appellant that this point was not raised before the lower Court. There is some indication in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that this question was argued before him. Otherwise, I fail to see how he could have referred to Nathu Khan v. Sewak Koori (2),³ and distinguished it from the present. Whether the point was specifically raised in the lower Court or not, this Court has to see whether the plaintiff should be given any help in getting back the money which he paid under a contract which is illegal, as being opposed to public policy. In Scott v. Brown (1) the Court of Appeal held that a contract between two parties for the purchase of shares in order to induce other persons to buy shares believing that the shares were selling at a premium when there was no bona fide market for them was an illegal transaction and could be made the subject of an indictment for conspiracy and no action could be maintained in respect of such agreement or purchase of shares. Lindley, L. J., observed at page 728, "no Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality the Court ought not to assist him. If authority is wanted for this proposition, it will be found in the well-known judgment of Lord Mansfield in Holman v. Johnson (3).⁴ The facts appearing in the evidence in this case being clear, namely, that the defendant was not authorised to sell to the plaintiff and that he was not authorised to sell at rates higher than those fixed by the Director of Civil Supplies, and the plaintiff was not a person licensed to buy wholesale at Negapatam controlled rice, I have no hesitation in holding that the contract is an illegal one, as being opposed to public policy. The next question is whether the plaintiff should be helped by the Court in getting back the money paid in execution of an illegal contract. No doubt in this Court the respondent relied upon the illegality of the contract in resisting the appellant's claim. His contention is that he is entitled to get relief on the ground that he does not seek to enforce the terms of the contract but only to get back money paid by him to the defendant for a consideration which failed. In Javerbhai Jorabhai v. Gordhan Narsi (4) certain alienations were made in contravention of the Bhagdari and Narwadari Tenures Act and the High Court held that, though the alienations were illegal and void as contravening the terms of the Act, yet the money advanced for the alienation could be recovered. Though at first sight it may appear that the case supports the plaintiff's contention, yet, on a close perusal of the judgment, it would be clear that the learned Judges rest their decision on a separate covenant whereby the mortgagor undertook to repay to the plaintiff the amount lent. At page 366* the learned Judges observe: "But there still remains the question whether the plaintiff is not entitled to recover for breach of a separate covenant contained in the deed of mortgage. That covenant was passed by the defendant-mortgagors in the following terms:—'If there should be any hindrance or obstruction concerning the house, or if the house should be taken out of your possession, then we and our property and our heirs and representatives are liable for any loss you may suffer and for your moneys advanced'.... Here the covenant covers as well the cases where hind-france or obstruction should occur, in taking possession as the case where possession, after having once been obtained, is afterwards taken away from the purchaser." In the present case there is no separate covenant for the return of any money that may be due to the plaintiff as the difference between the price that might be paid by the Controller of Civil Supplies and the contract price. Whether such a contract would be legal or not it is unnecessary to consider as there is none set up in this case. The next case relied upon by the appellant is Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ramkumar Saha and Chittagong District Board (5), where it was held, that "where a Corporation receives money or property under an agreement which turns out to be ultra vires or illegal, it is not entitled to retain the money. The obligation to do justice rests upon all persons natural and artificial; if one obtained the money, or property of others, without authority, the law, independently of express contract, will compel restitution or compensation." In that case there was no performance of the contract entered into by the Corporation and the learned Judges held that "the relief is granted not upon the illegal contract nor according to its terms, but on an implied contract by the Corporation to return or, failing to do that, to make compensation for property or money which it has no right to retain." In the present case the contract was fully performed by the plaintiff taking delivery of the 300 tons of rice contracted for and he only claims compensation for the difference in price between that paid by him to the defendant and that paid to him by the Director of Civil Supplies. In the first place, there is no covenant by the defendant to make good any loss that might occur to the plaintiff by the rice being commandeered, and in the next, the contract has been fully performed. The plaintiff contracted to buy at the rates mentioned in Exhibit B and paid accordingly. The Director of Civil Supplies commandeered the rice as he was entitled to do and paid the plaintiff its price according to the terms of the license under which the rice was imported. The case might be different if the rice had been commandeered before the plaintiff took delivery, but when once the contract is completed by delivery, it is difficult to understand how the plaintiff could seek relief against the defendant on the ground that the Director of Civil Supplies commandeered the rice from him. He no doubt relies on the alleged fraud of the defendant in not disclosing the contents of Exhibit I by which the Director of Civil Supplies informed the defendant to hold the goods at his disposal as the shipment was under the license granted to him. Granting that Exhibit I was not shown to the plaintiff, he has no reason to complain. Exhibit I does not import a new condition which is not to be found in Exhibit III. It cannot be contended with any show of reason that the plaintiff was unaware of the contents of Exhibit III. Exhibit III makes it clear that the licensee should hold the quantity imported at the disposal of the Director and the explanation of the clause "that the whole rice imported on this license must be placed at the disposal of the Government" is, that "it can only be sold to merchants or dealers selected or approved, by the Director of Civil Supplies, or some one authorised by him in this behalf." That being so, Exhibit I does not import any new term or put any restriction upon the defendant with regard to his dealing with the imported rice, which was not contained in Exhibit III. It is, therefore, not clear how the plaintiff could contend that the defendant is responsible for the loss sustained by him, by the non-disclosure of the contents of Exhibit I. In Srinivasa Aiyar v. Sesha Iyer (6), it was held that "a marriage brokerage agreement is unlawful and void and brokerage paid thereunder is recoverable if the agreement or a substantial part of it is not performed." Oldfield, J., relies upon Taylor v. Bowers (7) and observes, "the exception to the general rule, based on the absence of any or of any substantial performance, is clearly recognised without reference to the distinction proposed in a case later than the majority of those relied on by the learned Judges, in Taylor v. Bowers (7) in which the object of the agreement a fraud on creditors would, if persisted in, have resulted in the frustration of the Insolvency Law." The learned Judges gave relief to the plaintiff on the ground that the agreement or a substantial portion of it was not performed. In the case of Taylor v. Bowers (7), the facts were "the goods were made over to Alcock for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff's creditors. But they were made over by Alcock to the defendant without the plaintiff's authority; and not in furtherance of the fraudulent purpose for which they had been assigned to him. And while the fraud on the plaintiff's creditors originally contemplated remained wholly unaccomplished, the plaintiff repudiated what had been done, and claimed to have the goods restored to him, which done, they would have been again available to the creditors." Cockburn, C. J., held: "Now it seems to us well established that where money has been paid, or goods delivered, under an unlawful agreement, but there has been no further performance of it, the party paying the money or delivering the goods may repudiate the transaction, and recover back his money or goods." In the present case, as I have observed, there has been a complete performance of the contract and the case in Srinivasa Aiyar v. Sesha Iyer (6) does not help the appellant. In Bhikambhai v. Hiratal (8) there was a condition in a lease of tolls that the lessee should not sub-let the tolls without the permission of the Collector. The plaintiff, the lessee, sued the defendant, the sub-lessee, for certain moneys due to him under the sub-lease. The defendant contended that the contract was void and no money was recoverable. The learned Judges held that the restriction as regards the sub-lessee was in the interests of revenue and not for the benefit of the public. They observe at page 625: "The Act imposing tolls is an Act passed for the benefit of the revenue and not an Act for the protection of public morals such as the Abkari and Opium Acts are in this country and the Licensing Acts are in England, and to which different considerations apply." They gave a decree to the plaintiff on the ground that the defendant was liable to make good the amount due to the plaintiff. But here the rice control was established during War conditions and was continued for the benefit of the public after the War was over on account of the economic conditions prevailing then and it cannot be, therefore, contended that the control was in the interests of revenue and the violation of the rule would not stand in the way of the plaintiff getting relief. It is not suggested for the appellant that the rules under which rice was imported from Rangoon were ultra vires or that the rice control was not under proper statutory provisions. Under the Ordinance, promulgated, during the War and afterwards, rice control was established in various parts of the country and the Director of Civil Supplies, Madras, was authorised to issue permits and licenses and the licensees or permit-holders could only deal according to the terms of the license. The rice control was for the benefit of the public and any violation of the rules is opposed to public policy. It is unnecessary to notice all the cases relied upon by the parties as it is quite clear that the Court should not render its aid for the purpose of helping the plaintiff and get back money which he paid under a contract, which was opposed to public policy and, therefore, void. In this case, the contract has been fully completed and the plaintiff who seeks relief on the ground of fraud is not entitled to it, as I find on the evidence that he was not deceived as regards the terms of the license and his conduct in getting rice without a license to buy in Negapatam, was in violation of the rules framed in the interests of the public. This point is fatal to the plaintiff's case and he is entitled to no relief. The defendant's conduct was grossly improper in having sold the rice imported by him under the license granted by the Director of Civil Supplies to an unlicensed person and, therefore, he is not entitled to his costs.

The appeal is dismissed and, in the circumstances of the case, both parties should bear their own costs.

From the separation of the members of a joint family in food, residence and worship, owing to the fact that in order to manage the family business and property at different places the members had to go to and to live in those places separately, it does not necessarily follow that the family had divided. JUDGMENT.—This first appeal arises out of third suit for partition of the properties which once belonged to the joint family composed of Paras Ram, a Jaini Mahajan of Sirsa, and his five sons, (1) Dilsukh, (2) Gaja Nand, (3) Dhan Raj, (4) Balmokand and (5) Lakhmi Chand. The home of the family was at Sirsa but different members of it kept shops and carried on business at Sirsa, Fazilka, Anupgarh and Minchinabad, respectively. The latter two towns are in Native States. The estate of the family consisted of immovable properties situated in all these towns and also of moveables and outstandings relating to the shops at these places.

Paras Ram died in Sambat 1952. None of his five sons had male issue. Dilsukh (1) died in his lifetime in Sambat 1940. Bhagwan Das, plaintiff, is his adopted son. Ram Kishan, who figures as defendant No. 3, was the adopted son of Lakhmi Chand (5). Gaja Nand (2) died in 1908 or 1909 without adopting any one, but his remaining two surviving brothers have left adopted sons.

The first suit for partition was instituted in 1910 by Ram Kishan, and a preliminary decree was passed in his favour in 1911 declaring him entitled to $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the family estate. But before actual partition the parties made a compromise in 1912 according to which some properties were agreed to be partitioned and the rest were left joint. Gaja Nand had died prior to the suit.

The second and third suits were both instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Hissar, on the 21st November and 1st December 1915; respectively—the one by Bhagwan Das and the other by Ram Kishan. The two surviving sons of Paras Ram and the adopted sons of their deceased brothers were impleaded as defendants in both. Bhagwan Das and Ram Kishan admitted each other's claims which shows that they were acting in concert though they elected to sue separately. Ram Kishan's suit was dismissed by the First Court and his appeal to the District Judge was also dismissed. He came in second appeal to this Court and we, by our recent judgment dated the 17th January 1923, accepted his appeal, set aside the orders of the Courts below and directed that a preliminary decree be passed against Bhagwan Das holding him responsible for the rendition of the accounts of the property in suit. We held in that case that "the jointness of this family came to an end in 1912 but that it was specifically agreed that certain property should continue to remain joint as before and that the British Courts had jurisdiction to deal with the suit as instituted including the immoveable property situated in Native States."

On the pleadings of the parties the lower Courts settled the following issues:—

(1) Has not this Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit for partition in respect of the property situate at Anupgarh, Minchinabad and Fazilka?

(2) Is the plaintiff's suit in respect of the whole or any portion of the property in suit barred by time?

(3) What is the extent of the plaintiff's share in the property in suit?

(4) Are the two shops and house, situate at Sirsa, and entered in the plaintiff's list as Nos. 6, 7 and 8 liable to partition and is plaintiff entitled to a share?

(5) Is not the plaintiff entitled to a share in the sale proceeds of the joint family property at Fazilka?

(6) Is not the plaintiff entitled to a share in the private property of Gaja Nand, deceased?

(7) If so, is the suit in respect of Gaja Nand's property within time?

(8) Should all or any portion of the property entered in the defendant's list of date (showing property held by the plaintiff) be included in the suit for partition?

The findings arrived at by the lower Court were:—

(1) That the Court had no jurisdiction in respect of the immovable properties situated in Native States but had jurisdiction with regard to moveable property even if it was beyond the limits of British India.

(2) That though the family had ceased to be joint, the members thereof remained co-owners of the family estate; that, therefore, the defendants' possession was not adverse to plaintiff but that his claim to moveable property was barred by time because Art. 127 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act of 1908 was not applicable to his suit.

(3) That the plaintiff was entitled to 1/3rd share in the family estate.

(4) That shops Nos. 6 and 7 and house No. 8 belonged to the joint family but that plaintiff's claim with regard to the house and shop No. 7 which had been sold was barred by time.

(5) That his claim to Fazilka property was untenable and was barred by time.

(6) That his claim to Gaja Nand's property was barred by time.

Upon these findings the lower Court passed a decree to the effect "that the plaintiff be given by partition 1/3rd of houses Nos. 1 and 3-6 and that plaintiff shall bring into the hotchpot Rs. 2,000 received by him by sale of a shop at Minchinabad."

Both the parties have appealed each to contest the findings in favour of the other. But the question most strenuously argued before us is that of limitation. Mr. N. C. Pandit contended on behalf of the defendants that, as it was admitted that the family was not joint at the time of the suit, the onus of proving that it was joint within 12 years before that was on the plaintiff; that not only had he failed to discharge that onus but that there was evidence on the record to the contrary proving that he had been turned out and excluded from the family property for more than 12 years. He cited and relied upon Ram Ghulam Singh v. Ram Behari Singh (1), Obhoy Churn Ghose v. Gobind Chunder Dey (2), Sham Lal v. Chhajju Mal (3), Mehr Singh v. Devi Dyal (4), *Bala Bux v. BHAGWAN DAS v. PARBATI.

But we are of opinion that the evidence on the record establishes that the family remained joint till 1910 when Ram Kishen brought his first suit for partition, and that the fact and circumstances from which the lower Court drew the conclusion that plaintiff has separated from the family are insufficient to support it. These facts may be considered one by one.

(1) In a deposition before the District Judge, Minchinabad, Bhagwan Das, plaintiff, stated as below on the 19th March 1906 :—

"I was adopted in Sambat 1940 or Sambat 1941. At that time Dilsukh was not alive. Paras Ram recognized me as the adopted son of Dilsukh * * * * *. The defendant (Balmokand) and his brothers denied the factum of my adoption from Sambat 1958. I had lived with them up to that time and I had a joint board with them. I have ever since been residing in the joint shops of the defendant and his brothers at Anupgarh."

This statement clearly shows that, though after the death of Paras Ram his sons Balmokand and others denied plaintiff's adoption, he continued to enjoy his rights as the adopted son of Dilsukh, and this was undoubtedly true because it is admitted even now that he had been in possession of the family property at Anupgarh and Minchinabad. If he was turned out from the family residence at Sirsa in Sambat 1965 or 1966 it does not follow that he had ceased to be a member of the family especially when he was allowed to carry on the branch of the family business at Anupgarh and to enjoy possession of the family property there and elsewhere.

(2) Though disputes arose between Bhagwan Das and the other members of the family in 1902 or 1904 it does not indicate that disruption of the family was the inevitable consequence thereof. On the other hand, the fact that all the members, including Bhagwan Das, jointly obtained a decree for Rs. 3,650-0-0 against Ujjain Singh indicates clearly that they were joint. (The post-card printed at page 38 of the paper-book was not proved, and, therefore, should not have been taken into consideration by the Court below.)

(3) The document printed at page 39 of the paper-book which is referred to as an award of certain arbitrators effecting partition of property among the members of the family is neither an award nor an instrument of partition, but is merely a statement of the arrangement made to pay certain debts due by the family firm.

(4) Some members of the family individually brought or defended suits, and acquired or sold properties, but as the family owned property and had branches of its business in different towns, the member representing the family at each town, could do all these things.

A complete reply to this theory of early disruption is, that in the suit of 1910 to which all the members were parties the family was stated to be joint. The lower Court referring to that suit observed :—

"It is true that in the litigation of 1911-1912 it was held that the property of the family was joint and partible, but this finding is to be distinguished from holding that the parties then constituted a joint Hindu family."

But not only the property of the family was held to be joint and partible, but the family itself was stated to be joint, because the District Judge wrote in his judgment dated the 23rd February 1911 (page 19 of the paper-book) that the plaintiff Ram Kishen being a member of the joint family is to get $\frac{1}{4}$ th share. Therefore, it is quite clear that not only the property but the family also was joint till 1910.

From the separation of the members of the family in food, residence and worship it does not follow in this particular case that the family had divided because in order to manage the family business and property at different places the members had to go to, and live in those places separately. But even if it be conceded for a moment that in consequence of the difference that arose among the members after the death of Paras Ram, the family ceased to be joint in the true conception of that term, still the members thereof, as found by the Court below, remained co-owners of the family property and business, and each member was managing the business and possessing the property at each particular place on behalf of the rest.

Such being the facts, it could not be said that plaintiff had been excluded from the family property for 12 years, and Article

MAHARAJAH OF JEYPORE v. CHETRUCHERLA GANGARAJU.

127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act was clearly applicable to his suit. As disruption of the family took place in 1912 his claim to a share in the immoveable as well as moveable properties was within time. On this point may be referred to Kumarappa Chettiar v. Saminatha Chettiar (11) Muthusami Mudaliar v. Nallakulantha Mudaliar (12), Gavrishankar Parabhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram (13), Ajodhya Pershad v. Mahadeo Pershad (14), Gajraj Singh v. Sadho Singh (15), which were cited by Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of the plaintiff. In Kumarappa Chettiar v. Saminatha Chettiar (11) it was held that when a member of a Hindu family who is divided in status from others is in enjoyment of a portion of the family properties while the others enjoy other portions, he is not in law excluded or ousted from those other portions, so as to disentitle him to his share of those portions, however long their enjoyment by others. In Ajodhya Pershad v. Mahadeo Pershad (14), which is a judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, the following were the conclusions arrived at by a reference to Gavrishankar Parabhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram (13), Purushottam v. Atmaram Janardan (16) and Muthusami Mudaliar v. Nallakulantha Mudaliar (12):—

“A family may remain joint in regard to some properties after a separation in regard to the others. Therefore, the mere fact that there had been a partial partition of the family property does not affect the rights of the parties to sue for partition in regard to other properties which remained undivided.

“Twelve years’ limitation applies to a suit for partition in regard to the properties which remained joint under Article 127 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877.”

If the defendants acquired any properties before the disruption of the family they did so on behalf of the family, and if they alienated any property they have to account for the sale proceeds thereof to plaintiff. Therefore, the decision of the Court below relating to shop No. 6 is correct.

As regards the price of shop No. 7 and house No. 8 sold by the defendants, and the property of Gaja Nand which came into their possession after his death, they are bound to pay to plaintiff his share therein or to account for it otherwise.

It was too late to deny plaintiff's status as the adopted son of Dilsukh in the grounds of appeal, when, ever since the death of Paras Ram, he had been treated as his adopted son.

As regards the account-books it is clear that each member was in possession of the account-books of the place where he lived and carried on business. So Bagwan Das, plaintiff, must produce the books of Anupgarh, and the defendants those of other places.

The result is, that the defendant's appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, while that of the plaintiff is accepted with costs and, modifying the judgment and decree of the Court below, we direct that Court to frame, in the light of our findings stated above a preliminary decree for partition and rendition of accounts in his favour for plaintiff's 3rd share in the properties referred to above. The plaintiff will also be bound to produce account-books, and account for the properties or moneys that are in his possession.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

s. 107—Madras Agency Rules, 1920, r. XIV—Transfer from Agency Commissioner's Court—Power of High Court—District Court, whether Court of superior or equal jurisdiction to that of Agency Commissioner.

The general power of the High Court to transfer a proceeding from the file of a Court which is not subject to the Civil Procedure Code is conferred by section 107 of the Government of India Act, and is exercisable thereunder subject to the fulfilment of two conditions; (1) that the Court from which the transfer is made is subject to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction, and (2) that the transfer is made to another Court of equal or superior jurisdiction. [p. 746, col. 2.]

Under the Madras Agency Rules of 1920, the High Court has appellate jurisdiction over the Court of the Agency Commissioner and is, therefore, a Court of superior jurisdiction to that of the Agency Commissioner but a District Court is not of "equal or superior" jurisdiction to that of the Agency Commissioner. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Accordingly, under section 107 of the Government of India Act the High Court can transfer a case from the Court of the Agency Commissioner to its own file but not to the file of a District Court. [p. 748, col. 1.]

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing transfer of Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 2 of 1922 on the file of the District Court, Vizagapatam; to the High Court to be tried along with Civil Revision Petition No. 751 of 1921 on it its file, preferred against the order of the Judicial Assistant Commissioner, Waltair, in First Appeal No. of 1921, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1921.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents

ORDER.—In Original Suit No. 5 of 1921 on his file, the Judicial Assistant Commissioner of the Agency Division dismissed an application for the appointment of a Receiver, and the petitioner before us appealed against that order of dismissal to the Agency Commissioner. The Commissioner, on the ground that one of the parties to the proceedings was his ward, obtained an order from this Court, transferring the appeal to the District Court, Vizagapatam. We are now asked to transfer it from that Court to the High Court.

The transfer to the District Court was made by us administratively and without notice to the petitioner, no dispute as to the correctness or sufficiency of the ground on which it was proposed being possible; and there is accordingly no reason why it should not be reconsidered at his instance. He urges that it should be, because this Court had no power to make it or transfer a case from the file of the Commissioner to that of any Court except the High Court. This contention no doubt involves that our order of transfer to the District Court was ultra vires and ineffective and, therefore, the relief required is a transfer from the file of the Commissioner from which the appeal has never been removed in any legal way, to the file of this Court, although that it is not what is actually, asked for in the petition before us. But it is not suggested by respondents that there is any substance in the difference. We, therefore, turn to the law to ascertain our powers in the matter, observing only that neither side disputes the necessity for a transfer to some Court other than that of the Agent with reference to his position as guardian of a party.

The general power of the High Court to transfer from the file of a Court, such as that of the Agency Commissioner, which is not subject to the Civil Procedure Code is conferred by section 107 of the Government of India Act (5 & 6 Geo. V, C., 61) and is exercisable thereunder subject to the fulfilment of two conditions that (1) the Court from which the transfer is made is subject to the High Court's Appellate jurisdiction, (2) the transfer is to another Court of equal or superior jurisdiction. The first of these conditions is, in our opinion, complied with, because under Rule XIV of the Agency Rules at present in force an appeal lies to the High Court from "all decrees passed by the Agency Commissioner upon original suits," and the conclusion founded directly on this comprehensive wording cannot be affected by the fact relied on by respondents as inconsistent with the application of section 107 (1) and, therefore, of the section as a whole; that Rule XIX provides for the submission to the High Court of returns, since that provision may have been made simply for convenience and completeness or with reference to section 107 proviso.

The respondents have referred to the decision in Maharajah of Jeypore v. Papa- yyamma (1) as negating this Court's power to transfer, not only to the District Court (consistently with the petitioner's contention), but also to its own file. It is not material that this decision was given under section 15, Indian High Courts Act (24 & 25 Vic., C. 104), because that section has been re-enacted in almost identical terms in the section of the Government of India Act above referred to; but it is material to both the points above stated that a different set of Agency Rules was promulgated on 9th November 1920 in the Fort Saint George Gazette, Part I, p. 1425 and governs the present case. For, as regards the point at present under consideration, the appellate jurisdiction of this Court was sustained in the judgment of White, C. J., with reference to Rule XIX, and was negated by Benson, J., namely, with reference to the exclusion from the jurisdiction of the class of suits referred to in Rule XXII of the Rules then in force, transfer of a suit of that class being (it may be added) in fact in question. Whilst, however, the former Rule XXI is reproduced without substantial difference in the present Rule XIV, the proviso to the present Rule II (3) which deals with cases of the nature of those dealt with in the former Rule XXII those in which the succession to or an interest in the estate of a Chief is in dispute, differs from it materially, because it entirely excludes such cases from the jurisdiction of the Courts and from trial as suits, was maintained, but the fact on which Benson, J., to some extent relied, the appeal was to the Governor-in-Council and, if it was (as the rule provided) referred to the Sadr or High Court for decision, the decree could be carried into execution only with his permission. No such derogation from the High Courts Appellate Jurisdiction is recognised in the present rules, and accordingly we have not to take into consideration the main ground on which Benson, J.'s, conclusion was based. It may be true that the suit, in connection with which in the present case the appeal to the Commissioner was filed, is (as respondents contend) of the description referred to in the former Rule XXII and in the present Rule II (3). But, if so that is merely possible ground for objection to the Court's jurisdiction at the trial; it cannot be urged on the present application and is not material to the disposal of the general question of construction at present under discussion. On that question we must hold that the High Court had appellate jurisdiction over the Court of the Agency Commissioner.

The learned Judges in Maharajah of Jeypore v. Papayamma (1) were agreed in holding on the second question stated above that a District Court was not of "equal or superior jurisdiction" to that of the Agent (corresponding with the Agency Commissioner in the present Rules), White C. J., referring apparently in this connection, only to an argument based on the policy of the Legislature, on which Benson, J., had relied generally, and also expressing an opinion against the general power of the High Court to transfer suits from an Agency Court to itself. Regarding the merits of this argument, which has also been pressed on us, that the policy of the Legislature is indicated as being against any power of transfer by its provision of Special Statutes and statutory rules adapted to the backward condition of the Agency tracts, to which the developed procedure of the ordinary Courts would be unsuited, it would, with all respect, be sufficient that the true inference from the existence of such provision is in favour of discrimination in the use of the power of transfer, not of its absence and of the absence of any means of protecting an Agency litigant against a disqualified Judge. But we need not pursue this consideration further, because, whatever its weight, when (as those learned Judges thought) the language of the Rules they were construing admitted of doubt or a secondary interpretation, it is inadmissible to control the clearer language with which we are concerned.

The conclusion already reached with reference to the comprehensive wording of Rule XIV, that the High Court has Appellate Jurisdiction over the Court of the Agency Commissioner, in fact precludes all doubts, that the one is superior to the other, the exercise of Appellate Jurisdiction being the clearest test of superiority; and only the position of the District Court remains for consideration. In favour of equality (superiority is not alleged) between it and the Court of the Agency Commissioner there is, so far as we have been shown, only the fact that the original pecuniary jurisdiction of both is unlimited. On the other hand, the powers which each can use in disposing of cases differ widely, as the learned Judges have shown in Maharajah of Jeypore v. Pappayamma (1), and those differences remain under the rules now in force. There can be no comparison and no question of equality between Courts so differently constituted. The conclusion must accordingly be that the High Court being superior to the Court of the Agency Commissioner, can transfer a case therefrom to its own file, but not to the file of a District Court which is not equal or superior.

This being so, we hold that the appeal numbered as Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 2 of 1922 on the file of the District Court of Vizagapatam has never been legally transferred from the file of the Agency Commissioner and transfer it to the file of this Court for disposal.

According to the Shia Law there are four essential requisites on which the validity of a wakf depends:—(1) The wakf must be perpetual; (2) it must not be contingent; (3) possession must be given of the thing dedicated, or, in other words, the properties should cease to be the properties of the donor, and (4) the right of the donor should be entirely divested therefrom. [p. 759, col. 1.]

It is, however, lawful for the donor to constitute himself the mutwalli, and in such a case a formal change of possession being out of the question, all that is required is not actual delivery of possession, but a change in the character of possession. If the donor continues to exercise his right over the wakf property and makes no change in the character of his possession, the wakf will not take effect. [p. 759, col. 1.]

A change in the character of possession is essentially a matter of evidence and can only be decided on the evidence in each case. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Art. 91 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a suit to cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for. It has no application to a suit for possession and a declaration that an instrument under which the defendant claims is void. [p. 749, col. 2.]

Where no objection is taken in the Trial Court to the admissibility of a document it must be assumed that any objection as to the mode of proof of the document adopted by the party producing it has also been waived. [p. 754, col. 2.]

The question of the mode of proof of a document is a question of procedure and is capable of being waived. [p. 754, col. 2.]

It is unsafe to hold that a document is a forgery on the personal inspection of the document by the Court. [p. 755, col. 1.]

A Commissioner appointed by the Court to examine witnesses has complete power to stop proceedings and to take the direction of the Court whenever it appears to him that the Pleader cross-examining a witness is abusing his position and exceeding the limits of propriety. [p. 765, col. 2.]

A Court in appointing a Commissioner should, in each case, give him instructions so as to make it clear to him that he is not so powerless as it is imagined and that he should exercise his power and stop the proceedings for the purpose of taking the direction of the Court whenever he should think that it is necessary to do so. JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The object of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal, was to obtain a declaration that certain wakfnamas executed by Musammat Amatunnissa dated the 15th February 1882 and the 7th December 1897, respectively, and a certain deed of management dated the 17th July 1907 are "invalid, void and ineffectual" and that they "have never been acted upon, and are purely nominal." The properties in dispute admittedly belonged to Musammat Amatunnissa and it is the case of plaintiff No. 1 that as the sole heiress of Musammat Asmatunnissa she succeeded to the properties on the death of Musammat Amatunnissa which took place on the 17th July 1907. She alleges that certain "persons (whom she names in the plaint) got up" these deeds with the object of depriving the plaintiff of her inheritance and that, in doing so, they took advantage of the fact that Musammat Asmatunnissa was an illiterate parda-nashin lady, but that the endowment was nominal one, and that the wakfnamas were never acted upon, and that the possession of Bibi Asmatunnissa as proprietress over the properties continued till her death, and that, in the circumstances, plaintiff No. 1 became entitled to succeed to the properties as the sole heiress of Bibi Asmatunnissa. Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 are the assignees for value of an 8-annas interest of the plaintiff No. 1 in the properties in dispute and a question arose in the Court below whether the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were bona fide purchasers as they alleged to be or whether their alleged purchase was made "for the purpose of spoliation and with a view to foment unjust and improper litigation and whether, in the circumstances, their purchase was "void as being opposed to public policy." That question has been answered by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiffs and no question has been raised before us as to the correctness of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point.

It will be convenient to dispose of a point which was argued with complete success on behalf of the respondents in the Court below. One of the issues framed by the Court below on the pleadings of the parties ran as follows:—Are the plaintiffs entitled to sue for any relief without seeking to set aside the deeds of endowment dated the 15th February 1882 and 7th December 1897 and the deed of appointment of mut-walli dated the 17th July 1907 and is their claim barred by three years limitation? The learned Subordinate Judge has answered the question raised in this issue in favour of the defendants. In other words, he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation under Art. 91 of the Limitation Act. The learned Counsel for the respondents has not attempted to support the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point, and, in my opinion, there cannot be the slightest doubt that Art. 91 has no application to the facts of this case. Art. 91 applies to a suit to cancel or set aside an instrument not otherwise provided for. It has no application to a suit for possession and a declaration that an instrument, under which the defendant claims, is void. In the present suit the plaintiffs do not seek to have the instruments executed by Bibi Asmatunnissa set aside. Their case is that those instruments are void and that the Court should declare that they are void. I quite agree that if the instrument is voidable and not void ab initio, and is executed by the plaintiff or by his predecessor, the plaintiff cannot elude the operation of Art. 91 by suing as for a declaration; but in determining whether the plaintiff is attempting to elude the operation of Art. 91, it is necessary to consider the plaintiff's case as to the instruments. Now, there can be no doubt that, according to the plaintiffs, these instruments are not voidable, but void ab initio. They make the definite case that the instruments were nominal and were not acted upon during the lifetime of Musammat Asmatunnissa as the proprietress over the properties continued until her death. In my opinion, it is impossible to hold that Art. 91 applies to the facts of this case.

I now come to the question whether the plaintiff No. 1 has established her title to the properties in dispute assuming that her case as to the wakfnamas is true. The following pedigree will explain the case of the plaintiff as to the relationship between her and Musammat Asmatunnissa:—

It will be noticed that she claims to be the daughter of Nawabunnissa who, according to her, was the daughter of Fazalunnissa and a sister of Musammat Asmatunnissa. If she is right in her contention, that she is the daughter of Nawabunnissa and that Nawabunnissa was the sister of Asmatunnissa then it must follow that, in the events which have happened, she is the sole heiress of Musammat Asmatunnissa. The case of the defendants on the question of relationship is set out in paragraphs 5 and 7 of their written statement. Paragraph 5 runs as follows:—

‘That this fact is not at all true that the plaintiff No. 1 is the daughter of Musammat Asmatunnissa’s sister. The said plaintiff is never the heiress of Musammat Asmatunnissa.’

In paragraph 7 the defendants make the definite case that “Musammat Asmatunnissa had no sister of her own named Musammat Nawabunnissa.” In my opinion there is no denial in the written statement that the plaintiff No. 1 is the daughter of Musammat Nawabunnissa. It is, of course, denied that the plaintiff is the heiress of Musammat Asmatunnissa but that denial is based upon the case of the defendants that ‘Musammat Asmatunnissa had no sister of her own named Musammat Nawabunnissa.’ It is a denial by implication; and if the facts upon which the implication is sought to be raised are found against the defendants, the implication cannot be raised. In their evidence, however, the defendants have contested the claim of the plaintiff that she is the daughter of Musammat Nawabunnissa. Their case, in their evidence is that Musammat Nawabunnissa was not the daughter of Fazalunnissa but a daughter of Ameerunnissa and that the plaintiff is the daughter of one Asrat Ali, not by Musammat Nawabunnissa but by her co-wife Bibi Aman. It is admitted by the defendants that Musammat Nawabunnissa was a wife of Asrat Ali. It is also admitted that the plaintiff is the daughter of Asrat Ali; but it is contended that the plaintiff is the daughter of Asrat Ali not by Musammat Nawabunnissa but by Bibi Aman.

In my opinion, the defendants in their written statement have not attempted to answer the point of substance as to the relationship between plaintiff No. 1 and Bibi Asmatunnissa alleged in the plaint, but have denied the relationship evasively. If it were known to them that Nawabunnissa was not the daughter of Fazalunnissa but the daughter of Ameerunnissa, they should have said so definitely in their written statement. If it were known to them that the plaintiff was the daughter of Asrat Ali by Bibi Aman and not by Musammat Nawabunnissa, they should have said so definitely in the written statement. Not having said so, it was not open to them to adduce evidence to the effect that the plaintiff was the daughter of Asrat Ali by Bibi Aman. As it is admitted that Nawabunnissa was the daughter of Ameerunnissa, it must follow that the plaintiff is the heiress of Asmatunnissa, provided we assume that the plaintiff is the daughter of Nawabunnissa. It makes no difference so far as the heiresship is concerned whether the plaintiff is the sister’s daughter or a cousin’s daughter. In either case she is entitled to succeed to the properties of Asmatunnissa assuming that she is the daughter of Nawabunnissa and assuming that her case as to the wakfnama is true. But as the parties have gone into evidence, I shall deal with that evidence and shall base my decision on the evidence and not on the pleadings.

I may say at once that the oral evidence in the case is weak and that, if I had to decide the case on the oral evidence and ignore the pleadings and the documents, I should find it difficult to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. The plaintiff has examined herself and two witnesses Hosseini Begam and Bibi Jasiman, on commission. She has also examined in Court witnesses Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 13, 14, 16, 22, 23, 27 and 30 on this point. Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick accepts the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that witnesses Nos. 1, 2, 6, 14, 16, 22, 23 and 27 are not reliable. He contends, however, that the ladies examined on commission have given good evidence and that the evidence of P. W. Nos. 3, 13 and 30 should have been accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge. So far as P. W. No. 3 is concerned, I agree with the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that he is not a good witness and that he is thoroughly unreliable. There only remains the evidence of the ladies examined on commission and the evidence of P. W. No. 13 and P. W. No. 30. They undoubtedly support the pedigree upon which the plaintiff relies. The only question is whether we ought to accept their evidence.

With regard to the evidence of the plaintiff, the learned Subordinate Judge says that she is not accurate about the pedigree and that with regard to the number of wives married by her father Asrat Ali there is grave contradiction between her, on one hand, and Jasiman and her step-brother P. W. No. 13, on the other hand. The learned Subordinate Judge further says that she is not always correct about the number of children her father had by his respective wives. It appears that Asrat Ali, her father, married no less than seven wives and had numerous children certainly by one of those wives. But it seems to me that the criticism loses all its force when it is remembered that it is admitted by the defendants that the plaintiff was the daughter of Asrat Ali. There is no object in deceiving the Court as to the number of wives her father married nor as to the number of children her father had by each of his wives. It is more reasonable to take the view that the plaintiff was not aware of all the matrimonial enterprises of her father. It cannot, in my opinion, be urged that, because she did not know how many wives her father had, she could not be expected to know the name of her mother. The evidence of the plaintiff in my opinion, is good evidence, though I agree that it will not be safe to act upon that evidence unless it has received corroboration. The first witness examined on behalf of the plaintiffs on commission is Husseni Begum. She is the widow of Mamtaj Hussain who was a son of Asrat Ali. She completely supports the plaintiff's case as to the pedigree on which the plaintiff relies. Her evidence, however, is open to the criticism that she cannot give the name of her husband's mother. It may be reasonably argued that her evidence on the pedigree ought to be received with caution since she cannot give the name of her husband's mother. In my opinion, it is quite impossible to rely upon her evidence on the question of pedigree. The next witness examined on behalf of the plaintiff on commission is Bibi Jasiman. She is not a relation; but her mother, after she became a widow, married Asrat Ali and was one of the numerous wives of Asrat Ali. She carefully gives the names of the wives of Asrat Ali and seems to have done well under a very severe cross-examination. She says that, at the time of her mother's marriage, Nawabunnissa was the only wife of Asrat Ali who was living with Asrat Ali, and that the plaintiff was four or five years younger than her. If the plaintiff was born subsequent to the marriage of her mother with Asrat Ali, it is probable that she should know the name of the plaintiff's mother. It is quite true that the witness is in poor circumstances but that is hardly a reason why her evidence should be rejected. P. W. No. 13 is Lafat Hussain, one of the sons of Asrat Ali by Ulfatunnissa Begam. The learned Subordinate Judge rejects his evidence on two grounds, first, on the ground that he has a grudge against the defendants because they prosecuted him for removing a memorial stone from the tomb of Nawabunnissa, and, secondly, on the ground that he admits that he has an old pedigree which he has not produced in Court. In my opinion neither ground is good ground for rejecting his testimony, although each constitutes a good ground for scrutinising his evidence with care. It is admitted that he was acquitted in the criminal case which was lodged against him and, as regards the non-production of the pedigree, all that I need say is that he was not asked to produce the pedigree and no criticism can be levelled against him for not producing it. So far as P. W.

BIBI KANIZ ZAINAB V. MOBARAK HOSSAIN.

No. 30 is concerned, I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that he is not a reliable witness and that his testimony should be rejected. The oral evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs is not very strong and would be wholly insufficient if it stood by itself and if there was no documentary evidence to support her case.

Before coming to the documents, it will be just as well to dispose of the argument of the learned Subordinate Judge that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants is superior to that adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs. The defendants have examined eight witnesses on this point, D.Ws. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 7, 9, 11, 12 and 16. The learned Subordinate Judge has rejected the testimony of D.Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 and it is unnecessary for me to deal with their evidence. D.W. No. 3 is not a competent witness and is in no way related to the family of Asrat Ali. On the other hand, his daughter's son is married to the daughter of the defendant Mobarak Ali and he admits that he lives with his daughter. In my opinion, he is not a competent witness and no reliance can be placed on his evidence. Nor is D.W. No. 7 a competent witness. The learned Subordinate Judge says that, though he is not in good circumstances, he is respectable. He admits, however, that he has no personal knowledge of the fact that the plaintiff is the daughter of Bibi Aman, but that he heard it from his mother 20 or 22 years ago. He adds that there was no particular reason for his mother telling him that the plaintiff was the daughter of Bibi Aman and he says that she gave him that information incidentally in the course of a conversation 20 or 22 years ago. His evidence, in my opinion, ought to be rejected. In the first place, he is not a competent witness. In the second place, his evidence is hearsay and should have been rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge for the same reason for which he rejected the testimony of many of the plaintiff's witnesses, including the testimony of Husseni Begum. In the third place, he does not appear to be a respectable witness. He admits in his cross-examination that he made a bymokassa of his properties in his wife's favour at a time when he had heavy debts to discharge and that in the litigation which ensued, the Court held that the bymokassa was a fraudulent and a collusive deed. The next witness is D.W. No. 9 who as the son-in-law of Asrat Ali is undoubtedly a competent witness. But he supports the case of the plaintiff on one point, namely, that Nawabunnissa was the daughter of Fazalunnissa and not of Ameerunnissa. In examination-in-chief he says that he heard from his mother-in-law that the plaintiff was the daughter of Bibi Aman but in cross-examination he admits that Nawabunnissa had a daughter whose name he could not remember and he also admits that he cannot say whether the plaintiff is the daughter of Nawabunnissa or of Bibi Aman. The evidence of this witness completely supports the plaintiff on one point and very nearly supports her as to her case that she is the daughter of Nawabunnissa. The learned Subordinate Judge says that he was trying to please both parties and on that ground he rejected his testimony. It is important to remember that he is the only competent witness who has been examined on behalf of the defendants. D.W. No. 11 is defendant No. 4 in the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge says that he is a competent witness, but there is nothing in his evidence which shows that there is any relationship between him and Asrat Ali. He is the son of Asmatunnissa's husband's brother and has nothing whatever to do with the family of Asrat Ali. D.W. No. 12 is defendant No. 6. He was a servant under Asmatunnissa and he says that his duty was to distribute pan and tobacco to the visitors. He admits that he has no connection with Asmatunnissa and his evidence does not show that he had any relationship whatever with Asrat Ali. Notwithstanding this, the learned Subordinate Judge says that he is a competent witness. But whether he is a competent witness or not, his evidence does not touch the plaintiff. He says, "It is not true that the plaintiff is the daughter of Asmatunnissa's sister; If she was so, we would have known that." That hardly is sufficient to destroy the case of the plaintiff. The last witness examined on behalf of the defendants is D.W. No. 16 who is a brother of defendant No. 1. It appears that in a criminal case against Enayet Ali, the husband of the plaintiff, he gave evidence in his favour and he stated in the course of his evidence that the plaintiff was the daughter of Asmatunnissa's sister. His previous deposition is, therefore, completely in favour of the plaintiff. In his evidence in this case he says that he does not know "exactly" whether the plaintiff is the daughter of Asmatunnissa's sister and then, getting bolder, he says that she is not in fact the daughter of Asmatunnissa's sister. On the whole, the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants is worthless, the only competent witness having practically supported the case of the plaintiff, and D. W. No. 16 certainly in a previous case having stated that the plaintiff was the daughter of Asmatunnissa's sister. I am unable to support the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants is superior to that adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs, although, as I have said before, the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is not by itself very strong.

I now come to the documentary evidence which, in my opinion, establishes the plaintiff's case beyond reasonable doubt. The plaintiff relies upon three documents Exhibits 1, 2 and 3. Exhibit 1 is a registered hibba of 1851 executed by Bibi Sonia in favour of Nawabunnissa. By this document Musanmat Sonia purported to make a gift of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas share out of 6 annas of Mouza Rampore Debor and the northern half of a large pucca house facing east with the tiled thatched houses attached thereto to Bibi Nawabunnissa her "daughter's eldest daughter." There can be no doubt at all as to the genuineness of this document and it follows from this document that Nawabunnissa was the eldest daughter of Bibi Sonia's daughter. The document establishes beyond doubt that Nawabunnissa is the grand-daughter of Sonia but it does not, in my opinion, establish that she is the daughter of Fazalunnissa. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that as it is not suggested that Ameerunnissa had more than one daughter and as it is admitted that Fazalunnissa had more than one daughter the description of Nawabunnissa as Bibi Sonia's daughter's eldest daughter is consistent only with the case that Bibi Nawabunnissa was a daughter of Fazalunnissa and not the daughter of Ameerunnissa. The argument, in my opinion, is a fallacious one. If we accept the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants, Nawabunnissa was the only daughter of Ameerunnissa. But if we reject that evidence, then we have no evidence at all to establish that Ameerunnissa had no daughter at all. I am, therefore, unable to find on this document that Nawabunnissa was a daughter of Fazalunnissa, but the document, taken with the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff and the admission made by D. W. No. 9, establishes, in my opinion, that Nawabunnissa was the daughter of Fazalunnissa and, therefore, a sister of Asmatunnissa. The next document is Exhibit 3, a kabala, dated the 22nd November 1851 executed by Asrat Ali in favour of Nawabunnissa and others. The only importance of this document is that it shows that Bibi Aman was dead at the date when this document was executed. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the assertion that Bibi Aman was dead at the date of the execution of this document "makes it a physical impossibility of the plaintiff having been born of her, aged now, as she is, about 64 years." The document, therefore, is valuable as discrediting the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiff is the daughter of Bibi Aman and not the daughter of Nawabunnissa. I will presently consider the case whether the document is a genuine one and whether it has been properly admitted in evidence. The next document is Exhibit 2, a deed of gift executed by Nawabunnissa in favour of the plaintiff and her brother Saukhat Hussain. It will be remembered that by Exhibit 1 Bibi Sonia made a gift of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas share out of 16 annas of Mouza Rampore to Nawabunnissa and that by Exhibit 3 Asrat Ali made a gift of certain properties to Nawabunnissa. By the deed of gift which Nawabunnissa is alleged to have executed on the 12th July 1855 she purported to convey to her daughter, the plaintiff, and to her son Saukhat Hussain all the properties which she received by Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 3. The document, if genuine, establishes beyond doubt that the plaintiff is the daughter of Nawabunnissa. The first question that arises for our consideration is, whether these documents were properly admitted in evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge. They are undoubtedly ancient documents and were admitted as such by the Court below. The plaintiff produced these documents in the course of her evidence on commission. Her evidence is that she got these documents from Mantaz Hussain, her step-brother, and that they were in her custody until she made them over to her husband for being filed in Court. We have to consider whether the plaintiff has proved proper custody of these documents. Now, Exhibit 3 was a document executed by Asrat Ali in favour of his wife Nawabunnissa and certain other persons and Exhibit 2 was a document executed by Nawabunnissa in favour of the plaintiff. It is not unreasonable to suppose that these documents would remain with Asrat Ali and that on his death they would pass to Mantaz, his son. The plaintiff swears that Mantaz Hussain made over these documents to her and that they were all along in her custody until she made them over to her husband, Enayet Ali, who in his turn made them over to the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 for being filed in Court. This was her evidence on commission, and on the documents being tendered, they were objected to on the grounds, first, that the witness being illiterate could not possibly identify the documents, and, secondly, that continuous custody of the documents to the time of their being filed in Court, was not proved. Now, the Commissioner for taking evidence had, of course, no power to decide on the admissibility of the documents and it was necessary, therefore, for the defendants to object to the admissibility of the documents in Court if they had any objection to their being taken in evidence. The record, however, shows that these documents were marked by the learned Subordinate Judge without any objection. It is now urged before us that Enayet Ali should have been called to prove that he received these identical documents from the plaintiff and that he made them over to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. The argument is not without force; but it is to be remembered that the defendants did not object to the documents being marked as Exhibits in Court. Had they put forward their objection in Court it would have been open to the plaintiff to call Enayet Ali as a witness. We are informed that Enayet Ali is now dead and it is impossible for the plaintiff to call him now. In my opinion, the objection being to the mode of proof and not to the relevancy of the documents, it is impossible for us to reject the documents at this stage on the ground that the plaintiff did not examine Enayet Ali as a witness on her behalf. The question of the mode of proof is a question of procedure and is capable of being waived by a party. Since the question of the admissibility of these documents was not raised before the learned Subordinate Judge by the defendants, we must assume that they waived their objection to the mode of proof adopted by the plaintiff. I hold that it is not open to the defendants now to raise the question of the proper proof of these documents.

The next question is, whether these documents are genuine. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that they are suspicious and that they ought not to be relied upon. I will deal with all the grounds urged by the learned Subordinate Judge for holding that they are suspicious documents. I will first deal with Exhibit 3 which is the earlier document. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the document is not a registered one, but it must be remembered that it was executed on the 22nd November 1851 when it was not obligatory on the parties to register their documents. The document bears a stamp of 1851 and the endorsement of the stamp-vendor is as follows:—"Sold this stamp to Saiyid Asrat Ali, Pleader of the Court, for writing a deed of sale at Rs. 4." It would be difficult for the plaintiff to procure a stamp of 1851, and the document as a whole has the appearance of being a very old document. It would be plainly impossible for us to hold that a document must necessarily be a suspicious document because it does not happen to be a registered document. To take such a view would be to hold that a document of 1851 should have been registered although the law did not require those documents to be registered. The argument is a speculative one and I cannot attach any value to it. The next ground urged by the learned Subordinate Judge is that it is not shown why Asrat Ali should have sold this property to Nawabunnissa and others. It is somewhat unreasonable to call upon the plaintiff in 1916 for proof as to the necessity of a transaction which took place in 1851. It is then urged by the learned Subordinate Judge that the signature of Asrat Ali in Exhibit 3 does not tally with his signature in Exhibit 4, which is accepted by him as a genuine document. I have myself examined the two signatures and I am not prepared to base my conclusion as to the genuineness of the document on my personal observation of the signatures. It is always unsafe to hold that a document is a forgery on the personal inspection of the document by the Court. No expert witnesses were examined on the point and no witnesses were called by the defendants to prove that the signature purporting to be the signature of Asrat Ali in Exhibit 3 was not in fact the signature of Asrat Ali.

The last ground urged by the learned Subordinate Judge is that Exhibit 3 bears the seal of Asrat Ali showing "with what care, solicitude and precaution this document has been got about." The procedure adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge was as follows: he looked at Exhibit 1, which, according to him, is genuine and he found that it did not bear the seal of the executant. He then looked at Exhibit 3 and found that it did bear the seal of the executant; and the conclusion at which he arrived is that if a genuine document does not bear the seal of the executant, a document which does bear the seal of the executant must be a suspicious document. I am not prepared to subscribe to the mode of reasoning adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge. In regard to Exhibit 2 the first point which the Subordinate Judge makes is that it is not a registered document. I have already dealt with that argument and it is only necessary to add that to take the view which the learned Subordinate Judge has taken is to say that a document is compulsorily registrable although the law did not require that it should be registered. The learned Subordinate Judge then examined the stamp-paper and he thought that there was something suspicious and that the endorsement of the stamp-vendor showed that it was sold by him to one Raghu Jha for the purpose of a tamassock. I may say that the stamp on Exhibit 2 is of the year 1856 and it is difficult to imagine how the plaintiff could procure a stamp of 1856. As to the argument of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is enough to say that Bibi Nawabunnissa, the executant of Exhibit 2, was a purda-nashin lady and it was plainly impossible for her to walk up to the stamp-vendor and to procure the stamp. She had to employ somebody to purchase the stamp for her and that person might as likely have been Raghu Jha as some body else. The learned Subordinate Judge, upon the evidence of D. W. No. 12, has come to the conclusion that Raghu Jha was a client of Imam Ali, the father of Enayet Ali, plaintiff's husband, and upon this he has built the theory that "it is nothing unusual that an old unused stamp-paper in the name of the aforesaid Raghu Jha remained in the Sherista of Enayet Ali and his father and has been utilised by the former for the present purpose." The argument is a speculative one and I am not prepared to assent to it. It is impossible at this date to have the evidence as to who Raghu Jha was and what connection there was between Raghu Jha and Nawabunnissa, the executant of Exhibit 2. As I have said before, Nawabunnissa was a purda-nashin lady of rank and position and it was necessary for her to employ an agent to procure the stamp. It is suggested that she might have bought the stamp through her husband Asrat Ali. Asrat Ali himself was a Vakil of standing and position and if one could indulge in speculation, one might say that probably Asrat Ali employed Raghu Jha to procure the stamp for his wife. I do not, however, rest my decision on any conjectures. The document appears to be a genuine document and it is difficult to imagine how the plaintiff could possibly have procured the stamp which was undoubtedly sold to Raghu Jha on the 5th July 1856. The last argument of the learned Subordinate Judge is as follows:— "Nawabunnissa got the major portion of the properties only in 1851 and it has not been explained why with such precipitancy she executed this deed in favour of her minor daughter." I quite agree that there is no explanation why Nawabunnissa executed this document in favour of her children but, in my opinion, the argument is a speculative one. It is quite unreasonable to expect the plaintiff to give any evidence on this point.

The learned Subordinate Judge then considered the surrounding circumstances and he came to the conclusion that these documents could not be considered to be genuine documents. The first point considered by the learned Subordinate Judge in this connection is that the plaintiff never tried to have possession of the properties which Nawabunnissa is alleged to have given to her by Exhibit 2. The plaintiff has undoubtedly admitted in her evidence that she never had possession of the properties covered by Exhibit 2 and that they were all along in the possession of Fazalunnissa and after her death in the possession of Azizunnissa and Asmatunnissa. It is established beyond doubt that Azizunnissa and Asmatunnissa were recorded in the Land Registration Department as the owners of the properties dealt with by Exhibit 3.

The argument is a weighty one; and if there was nothing also in the case it would be impossible to give effect to a document which, admittedly, has not been acted upon. But there is this to be said against the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, that Nawabunnissa herself was not in possession of these properties. Exhibit 1 is accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge to be a genuine document and under Exhibit 1, 4½ annas share out of 16 annas of Mouza Rampore (the property dealt with by Exhibit 2) passed from Bibi Sonia to Bibi Nawabunnissa. But it is admitted that Bibi Nawabunnissa herself was never in possession of the properties. Therefore, it is impossible to hold that a document must be a forgery because it is not corroborated by evidence of ancient or modern enjoyment or by other equivalent or explanatory proof.

Something admittedly happened which gave the possession of these properties to Fazalunnissa. What actually happened we do not know, nor is it possible to expect the plaintiff to give any satisfactory explanation of the fact that, notwithstanding the deed of gift executed by Bibi Sonia in favour of Nawabunnissa, Fazalunnissa remained in possession of the properties. All that I need say is this that, although Nawabunnissa was not in possession of the properties, it is admitted by the learned Subordinate Judge that Exhibit 1 is a genuine document. That being so, there is no reason to hold that Exhibit 2 is not a genuine document, because the document has not received corroboration from acts naturally referable to the document.

The learned Subordinate Judge, in the next place, attaches some importance to the fact that the memorial stone tablet was removed from the tomb of Nawabunnissa and that the year of her death was erased from it. There is no question that this stone tablet was in fact removed during the pendency of this suit in the Court below and that the tablet was ultimately discovered in a house in which the plaintiff and her husband Enayet Ali used to live. Enayet Ali was prosecuted at the instance of the defendants but he was acquitted by the Criminal Court and the Magistrate dealing with the case has given good reasons for disbelieving the case that Enayet Ali could ever have been a party to the removal of the stone tablet. The surrounding circumstances establish beyond doubt that Enayet Ali could not have been a party to the removal of the memorial stone tablet. That tablet shows that Nawabunnissa died in 1859. This supports the case of the plaintiff, and it was to the interest of the plaintiff to preserve this important evidence and not to destroy it. It appears that in a kobala which the plaintiff executed in favour of Tilakdhari Lal she stated that her mother Bibi Nawabunnissa died on the 5th July 1852. That assertion was wholly destructive of the plaintiff's case for it would follow that Exhibit 2 could not have been executed by Nawabunnissa, for it must be remembered that Exhibit 2 was executed on the 12th July 1856. The admission made by the plaintiff in the kobala executed by her in favour of Tilakdhari was, therefore, injurious to her case. It was necessary for her to preserve such evidence as she might procure which would show that her admission made in her kobala in favour of Tilakdhari was clearly wrong. Now, the tablet shows that Nawabunnissa died in 1859. It was, therefore, important for the plaintiff not to destroy that evidence which was most helpful to her in her case. In my opinion, it is quite impossible to hold that the plaintiff or her husband Enayet Ali had any hand in the removal of the memorial stone tablet from the tomb of Nawabunnissa. Although it is not necessary to go any further than this, it is probable that it was removed at the instance of the defendant who made an attempt to erase the year of the death of Nawabunnissa which was on the memorial tomb. Having done that they threw the tablet in a portion of the house of Enayet Ali which was not used by him and at a time when he was actually away from his house.

In my opinion, Exhibits 2 and 3 are genuine documents and, together with Exhibit 1 and the admission by D. W. No. 9, they establish that Nawabunnissa was the daughter of Fazalunnissa and that the plaintiff was the daughter of Nawabunnissa. The only document upon which the defendants rely is Exhibit 1. This is a wakalat-nama dated the 23rd June 1840, executed by Fazalunnissa in favour of her Vakil Altaf Hussain for herself and as guardian of her minor children Azizunnissa and Asmatunnissa empowering her Vakil to withdraw a sum of Rs. 556 from Court. It appears that this sum of money was lying in Court to credit of Fazalunnissa's husband and it was necessary for Fazalunnissa's heirs to withdraw that sum from Court. It appears that the document was never filed in Court and was not acted upon; but, in my opinion, there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of this document. But I am unable to draw the conclusion that because the name of Nawabunnissa does not appear in the document, therefore, Nawabunnissa could not have been a daughter of Fazalunnissa. All that one can say from this document is, that Azimunnissa and Asmatunnissa are the daughters of Fazalunnissa. It is quite impossible to go any further than that and to say that because the name of Nawabunnissa is not mentioned in this document, therefore, she could not have been the daughter of Fazalunnissa. It may be that Nawabunnissa had attained her majority and as she had already married Asrat Ali, Fazalunnissa could not represent her in the matter of the withdrawal of the sum of money from Court. It is contended on behalf of the defendants that if a separate petition was put in on behalf of Nawabunnissa Fazalunnissa could not have authorised her Pleader to withdraw the sum of Rs. 556 which was lying in Court. The matter rests on speculation and I am unable to come to a conclusion one way or the other why the name of Nawabunnissa does not appear in this document. Taking the evidence, oral and documentary, as a whole, I am of opinion that the plaintiff has established her case that she is the daughter of Nawabunnissa, and that Nawabunnissa was the daughter of Fazalunnissa. The defendant's denial of the pedigree set up by the plaintiff in her plaint, is, as I have already said, an evasive one and one would be inclined to hold upon the pleadings that there was no denial of the allegation that the plaintiff is the daughter of Nawabunnissa. On the question whether Nawabunnissa is the daughter of Fazalunnissa, there cannot be, in my opinion, the slightest doubt that she was the daughter of Fazalunnissa. The plaintiff is, as I have already said, supported by one of the defendant's witnesses who is a competent witness, on the point. As to the other point, namely, whether the plaintiff is the daughter of Nawabunnissa, the evidence, taken as a whole, is in her favour. In my opinion the plaintiff has established that she is entitled to the properties left by Bibi Asmatunnissa if she can establish her case as to the wakfnamas executed by Bibi Asmatunnissa.

I now come to the question whether the wakfnamas executed by Musammât Asmatunnissa are valid and operative documents. The first wakfnama was executed on the 15th February 1882. It appears that there was a mosque and an Imambara already in existence which had been constructed by her father-in-law. By the wakfnama of the 15th February 1882, she dedicated the properties specified in the wakfnama for maintaining the mosque and Imambara which were already in existence, for the support of fakirs and travellers and for "the annual Fatuha and Urs" of herself and her husband. She declared that she was making "wakf absolutely of the properties mentioned below in the name of God without any condition valid or invalid" and that from that day neither she nor her heirs and representatives would have "any personal connection with or any rights in future to the endowed property." She appointed herself the mutwalli of the endowed properties for life and fixed her salary at Rs. 125 per month. She provided that the income of the wakf property, after the payment of Government revenue, other Government demands and collection expenses, should be "applied to the expenses of the mosque and Imambaras" and directed that the account of the income and the expenses should be kept in the Khankah and should be signed and sealed daily by the mutwalli for the mosque for the time being. She appointed the two surviving brothers of her husband to succeed her as the mutwalli of the endowment, one as the mutwalli of the mosque and the other as the mutwalli of the Imambara, and gave them power to appoint their successors from amongst their male issue and provided that, in default of such appointment, their male issue should have the power to choose the mutwallis from amongst themselves. Lastly, she directed that, out of the income of the wakf property, Shaikh Imam Ali, senior, and Shaikh Imam Ali, junior, should each receive Rs. 10 per month generation after generation without any condition of service.

By the second wakfnama, which she executed on the 7th December 1897 and which she described as the supplementary deed of wakf, she dedicated all her remaining properties to the purposes mentioned in the first wakfnama and gave up her salary of Rs. 125 per month, but stipulated that all her expenses should be sent to her wherever she might direct her manager to send the same. By this document, she appointed Shaikh Imam Ali, senior, as the manager of the endowment on a salary of Rs. 5 per month and gave him extensive powers of management, as she contemplated visiting Mecca and other sacred places. She provided that Imam Ali should continue to be the manager of the endowment after her death and modified the terms of the earlier wakfnama, the effect of which was to place the mutwallis, after her death, more or less, under the control of the manager.

The last deed executed by Musammât Asmatunnissa on the 17th July 1907, is hardly a deed of wakf; it is in reality a deed laying down the scheme of management of wakf properties after her death. It appears that the mutwallis nominated by her to succeed her on her death were both dead, and by this document, she nominated Mobarak Hussain, defendant No. 1, to succeed her as the mutwalli of the mosque, and Bibi Sagheri Begum, defendant No. 2, to succeed her as the mutwalli of the Imambara. Mobarak Hussain is the son of Latiff Hussain whom she had nominated to succeed her as the mutwalli of the mosque. Bibi Sagheri

Begum is the daughter's daughter of Walayat Hussain whom she had nominated to succeed her as the mutwalli of the Imambara. As Imam Ali, on account of his old age, had become incapable of looking after the wakf properties, she removed him from his office as manager, and appointed Karamat Hussain, defendant No. 4, as the manager of the wakf on salary of Rs. 10 per month. She also appointed defendant No. 3 Syed Nawab, the husband of Sagheri Begum, and Rajab Ali, defendant No. 6, as sub-managers, Syed Nawab on a salary of Rs. 10 per month and Rajab Ali on a salary of Rs. 4 per month. She specified the salaries payable to the servants of the wakf estate and directed that the salaries specified by her should be paid to them and to their heirs generation after generation provided they performed their duties. There is a schedule at the foot of the deed which gives "the details of salary payable to the servants attached to the wakf estate." The "servants" mentioned are Mobarak Hussain (son of her husband's brother Lutf Hussain), Sagheri Begum, (grand-daughter of her husband's brother Walayat Hussain), Bibi Azizunnissa (her sister), Karamat Hussain, (son of her husband's brother Walayat Hussain), Syed Nawab (husband of Sagheri Begum), Rajab Ali (her servant), Manuk (son of her husband's brother Walayat Hussain) and Munshi Imam Ali (her Muktear and confidential adviser).

Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick, on behalf of the appellants, has argued before us, first, that the wakfs are invalid and inoperative inasmuch as they were never acted upon and Bibi Asmatunnissa never parted with her possession as full proprietress; secondly, that the wakfs are illusory and were not intended to be acted upon and that the whole object was to divert the source of succession under the Muhammadan Law and to keep the properties in her husband's family, and thirdly, that the documents were not read and explained to Bibi Asmatunnissa and that she did not have any independent advice in connection with the execution of these documents. The first point urged before us by Mr. Mullick raises the question whether the wakf is a valid wakf, the second point, whether the wakf is a real wakf, and the third point, whether the Court would enforce it having regard to the fact that Bibi Asmatunnissa was an illiterate purda-nashin lady wholly incapable of understanding the nature of the instruments which she executed.

I will first consider the question whether the wakf is a valid and an operative wakf. The parties are Shias, and, according to Mr. Ameer Ali, there are four essential requisites on which depends the validity of the wakf: (1) that it must be perpetual, (2) it must not be contingent, (3) that possession must be given of the thing dedicated, or, more properly, the properties should cease to be the properties of the donor, and (4) that the right of the donor should be entirely divested therefrom. It is, however, recognized in Shia Law that it is lawful for the wakif to constitute himself or herself the mutwalli, and that, in such a case a formal change of possession is out of the question, and that all that is required is, not actual delivery of possession, but change in the character of possession. "It is in this sense," says Mr. Ameer Ali, "that the Mafatih declares that, if the wakif continue to exercise his right over the wakf property and make no change in the character of his possession, the wakf will not take effect" (Ameer Ali's Mummandan Law, 4th Edition, Vol. I, 499).

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that, in order to defeat their legal title, the defendants must establish the validity of the wakf and that, as a necessary consequence, they must establish that there was a change in the character of possession of Bibi Asmatunnissa, who constituted herself the first mutwalli under the wakf. It is argued that, not only is there no evidence that Bibi Asmatunnissa changed the character of her possession, but that the evidence is conclusive that she continued to hold possession as full proprietress and not as a mutwalli. Mr. Sultan Ahmad on behalf of the respondents, agrees that, in order to complete the wakf, there must be change in the character of possession; but he maintains that the wakfnama must itself decide whether there is a change in the character of possession. According to him, the issue must be decided on a construction of the wakfnama, and not by reference to extrinsic evidence; and he argues further that, if we are at liberty to go into evidence, that evidence would support his case that, subsequent to the wakfnama, Bibi Asmatunnissa held possession, not as proprietress, but as a mutwalli.

As reference has been made to the English cases, it is necessary to consider how far the English cases are likely to help us in the solution of the problem. Now, in England, transmutation of possession is not an essential pre-requisite to the constitution of a trust. Provided that the trust was, in the first instance, perfectly created, the trust will be supported, whether there was transmutation of possession or not. But, in order to determine whether the trust was, in the first instance, perfectly created, the Court has to consider whether the settlor contemplated some further act for the purpose of giving it completion. If, for instance, the settlor contemplated making over possession of the trust property to a trustee for the purpose of completing the transaction, the trust will not be regarded as having been perfectly created until possession is actually made over to the proposed trustee. But, if the settlor proposed to convert himself into a trustee, then the trust is perfectly created and will be enforced as soon as the settlor has executed an express declaration of trust, intended to be final and binding on him.

It will be noticed that the Shia Law differs from the English Law on the question of the completion of the trust, though they agree in this that where the trust was in the first instance perfectly created, the Court will enforce it and will not enter into the question whether the trust was acted upon. In England, transmutation of possession is not, whereas in Shia Law it is, an essential pre-requisite to the creation of a trust. In England, if the settlor proposes to convert himself into a trustee, then the trust is perfectly created as soon as the settlor has executed an express declaration of trust, intended to be final and binding on him. In Shia Law, the wakif must still show that he has changed the character of his possession. I am of opinion, therefore, that the English cases cannot help us in the solution of the problem whether the wakf was, in the present case, perfectly created.

Nor do I agree with the argument that the document must itself decide whether there was a change in the character of possession. In my opinion, transmutation of possession, or, (which is the same thing) change in the character of possession is essentially a matter of evidence, and can only be decided on the evidence in the case. The argument assumed that whenever a wakif constitutes himself a mutwalli of the endowment, there is, by virtue of such constitution, a transmutation of possession for there is, or can be, no other indication in the wakfnama that there is a change in the character of possession. To take such a view is to ignore the distinction between change of ownership and change of possession, both of which must have taken place before a wakf can be said to be perfectly created. All that the wakfnama in the present case does show is that the wakif has divested herself of all proprietary interest in the property endowed and constituted herself a mutwalli of the endowment. Such a declaration satisfies requisite No. 4 given in Mr. Ameer Ali's book. There is still requisite No. 3 to be satisfied before the wakf is complete; and there is no indication in the wakfnama that it has been satisfied, unless we regard her appointment as a mutwalli as leading to the inference that there was a transmutation of possession. Even assuming that Mr. Sultan Ahmad is right in his contention that the document itself must decide the question whether there has been a transmutation of possession, I do not think that the document throws any clear light on the point; and we must, therefore, go into the evidence to see whether, after the execution of the wakfnama, Bibi Asmatunnissa held possession as the mutwalli of the endowment.

Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick strongly relies upon the fact that Bibi Asmatunnissa did not, at any time, after the execution of the wakfnama, apply for mutation of her name in the Land Registration Department as the mutwalli of the endowment. In support of his contention, Mr. Mullick refers us to Exhibit 15 series which establish that in respect of the properties which are now in dispute, she stood recorded in the Land Registration Department as the proprietress up to the time of her death. In order to set the argument advanced before us, it is necessary for us to consider some of the provisions of the Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876). It will be useful to remember, first, that the Act makes a distinction between a proprietor and a manager. "Proprietor" means a person in possession "of an estate as owner thereof." The term "manager" includes every person in charge of an estate on behalf of a religious or charitable foundation. See section 3 (8) and section 3 (6). It follows, therefore, that after the execution of the wakfnama, if the transaction was at all perfected, Bibi Asmatunnissa ceased to be a "proprietor" and became vested with the character of "manager" within the meaning of the terms as used in the Land Registration Act. Section 42 provides that "every person assuming charge after such commencement," that is to say, after the commencement of the Land Registration Act, "of any estate or revenue-free property, or of any interest therein . . . as manager, shall within six months from the date of such . . . assumption of charge, make application in the manner hereinafter provided to the Collector of the District on the general register of which such estate or property is borne, . . . for registration of his name and of the character and extent of his interest as such . . . manager." The provision is mandatory, and it was, in my opinion, the duty of Bibi Asmatunnissa to apply for registration of her name as mutwalli of the endowment, if, indeed, she had changed the character of her possession. Section 65 provides the penalty for omitting to comply with the Act and declares that a person omitting to make such application within the prescribed time, shall be liable to such fine as the Collector may think fit to impose, not exceeding one hundred Rupees for such omission. Section 78 provides that no person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue-free property in respect of which he is required by the Act to cause his name to be registered, unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under the Act.

The learned Counsel for the respondents does not contest the proposition that it was the duty of the mutwalli; to have her name registered in the Land Registration Department as such mutwalli; but he contends that the endowment cannot lose its title to the properties in question, because the mutwalli failed to have her name registered as such mutwalli, and that where the Act provides a penalty for such omission on the part of the mutwalli, it would be a strong thing to say that there is no title in the endowment, because there was such an omission on the part of the mutwalli. The argument, in my opinion, begs the whole question which is in debate before us. If it be assumed, for the purpose of the decision, that there was transmutation of possession, and that the wakf was perfected, then the issue is decided, and the case is at an end. But, in order to determine the issue, it is relevant to enquire into the transaction whether there were acts and transactions consistent with the case of the defendants that there was a change in the character of possession of Bibi Asmatunnissa.

I ought to mention that, with reference to one property, Bibi Asmatunnissa was registered as mutwalli of the endowment. On the 17th March 1888, Walayat Hussain sold 1-anna 5½-pies out of the entire 16-annas Mouza Murtuzza Chak to Bibi Asmatunnissa; and on such purchase being made Bibi Asmatunnissa was registered in the Land Registration Department as mutwalli of the endowment not only in respect of the purchased share of the Mouza, but also in respect of the other shares which she had in the Mouza. But with reference to this transaction, there is this to be said, that we have not the application before us, and we do not know who actually made the application to the Collector. On the other hand, Walayat Hussain, the vendor of the property, was the husband's brother of Musammal Asmatunnissa and was nominated by her to succeed her as the mutwalli of the imambara and was, therefore, deeply interested in the question of the wakfnama. I am unable to look upon the single instance of transmutation of name as establishing that there was transmutation of possession.

The appellants next rely upon the finally published Records of Right showing that Bibi Asmatunnissa was recorded, in respect of the disputed properties, as a proprietress and not as a mutwalli.

The Cadastral Survey under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act was concluded in 1907, and the Records of Right were finally published on the 17th September 1907. Exhibit 16 series are the finally published Records of Right, and they completely support the argument of Mr. Mullick, Mr. Sultan Ahmad, on behalf of the respondents, accepts the facts upon which the argument is founded, but disputes the validity of the argument. He refers us to the definition of 'proprietor' in section 3 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as meaning "a person owning, whether in trust or for his own benefit, an estate or part of an estate" and he contends that, though a mutwalli, Bibi Asmatunnissa was a proprietress within the meaning of the term as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that she could not be recorded as anything but a proprietress in the finally published Record of Rights. The argument, as founded upon the Bengal Tenancy Act, is entitled to weight but we have to read Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act together with the rules made by the Local Government under section 189 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the purpose of regulating the procedure to be followed by Revenue Officers in the discharge of any duty imposed upon them by or under the Act and prescribing the forms to be used by them. Rule 48 in Part II, of the Survey and Settlement Manual, 1900, provides, that "the proprietary khewat shall show the character and extent of proprietary interests." In my opinion, there is no doubt whatever that she would have been recorded as a mutwalli of the endowment if it were known to the Survey Authorities that she was in possession of the properties as a trustee; and not for her own benefit. The proceedings in connection with the preparation of the Record of Rights are conducted with great publicity and with notice to the persons whose interests are intended to be affected by the entry in the Record of Rights. If, indeed, the trust had been perfected at any time during the Cadastral Survey operations, it was the duty of Bibi Asmatunnissa to acquaint the Survey Authorities with the fact that she was in possession of this estate, not for her own benefit, but as a trustee, so that the character of her proprietary interest could be shown in the proprietary khewat.

The next series of documents upon which the appellants rely are the rent-receipts (Exhibit 6 series) and the pottah (Exhibit 10 series) granted by Bibi Asmatunnissa

BIBI KANTE ZAINAB V. MOBARAK HOSSAIN.

In her capacity as proprietress and Zemindar. Mr. Sultan Ahmad's argument in reply is again founded upon the definition of the term "proprietor" in the Bengal Tenancy Act, and he contends that her description of herself as proprietress does not decide the question whether or not she was holding possession as a mutwakli. The argument is not without force; but it is a significant fact that not one document has been produced executed by Bibi Asmatunnissa and bearing her seal in which she describes herself as a mutwali although many documents have been produced by the defendants executed by third parties in favour of Bibi Asmatunnissa in which she is described as a mutwalli. I refer to this for the purpose of showing that, though under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and for the purpose of the Bengal Tenancy Act a proprietor includes a trustee, there is a distinction in fact between the two, a distinction which is observed in actual practice and in acts and transactions affecting property. The definition in the Bengal Tenancy Act establishes no more than this that, wherever the term "proprietor" is used in the Bengal Tenancy Act, it may mean, according to the context, either a person owning an estate for his own benefit, or a person owning an estate as a trustee. But it was not the object of the Bengal Tenancy Act to sweep away the distinction between a proprietor and a trustee and the documents executed by Bibi Asmatunnissa bearing her seal in which she describes herself as proprietress have a special significance when we are considering the question whether there was transfer of possession from herself as owner to herself as mutwalli.

In this connection, it will be useful to consider one of the pattas executed by Bibi Asmatunnissa. This patta is Exhibit A, dated the 27th November 1898, in favour of Shaikh Mahbub. This document was produced by the defendants and was intended to show that the patta was granted by Bibi Asmatunnissa in her capacity as a mutwalli. When the document was actually tendered in evidence, it was discovered that the word 'mutwalli' had been struck out in the original, and in its place the word 'malika' had been substituted. It was suggested by the defendants that the document had been tampered with while in the custody of the Court. The plaintiffs thereupon called for a certified copy of the document and the certified copy showed that Bibi Asmatunnissa described herself as a proprietress and not as a mutwalli. I think that the original document is of great value in determining the question whether the wakf was perfected. What obviously happened was, that the document describing her as a mutwalli was placed before her for execution and she objected to being described as a mutwalli. Thereupon, the word 'mutwalli' was struck out and the word 'proprietress' was substituted in its place. On no other hypothesis is it possible to explain the fact that in the original the word 'mutwalli' is struck out and the word 'proprietress' substituted.

Finally, Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick draws our attention to the fact that the account-books of the estate have been deliberately suppressed by the defendants. They produced the account-books of 1882 1885, 1899, 1907 and 1908 and suggested to the learned Subordinate Judge that the account-books other than those produced by them were either lost or destroyed. The learned Subordinate Judge very properly declined to accept the explanation which was offered by the defendants and in regard to the account-books which were actually filed by the defendants, the learned Subordinate Judge says as follows:—"The appearance of these books, the freshness of the ink and papers convince one of their unreliable nature." The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on this point is not challenged before us by the respondents; and we must accordingly assume that the account-books have been deliberately suppressed by the respondents. Now, the proper presumption arising from the suppression of these account-books is that, if produced, they would be unfavourable to the defendants who withheld them, Mr. Sultan Ahmad contends before us that all that we can presume from the suppression of the account-books is that the accounts have not been properly kept and that there have been breaches of trust on the part of the mutwalli. I am unable to accept this contention as well-founded. The question whether there were breaches of trust on the part of the mutwalli was not in issue in the case, and we cannot assume that the books of account were suppressed in order to conceal the breaches of the trust of the mutwalli. What was in issue was whether there was transmutation of possession in fact, and whether the wakfnamas were acted upon. The account-books would show whether there was a transmutation of possession in fact, that is to say, whether the accounts stood in the name of the mutwalli or of the proprietress. They would show whether the income of the estate was credited to the wakf or to the proprietress and they would also show whether a salary of Rs. 125 a month was being paid to the mutwalli or whether the whole income was being credited to Bibi Asmatunnissa as proprietress of the estate. In my opinion, the suppression of the account-books is almost decisive of the question. The plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants in their plaint that they would contend that "the possession of Musammil Asmatunnissa as proprietress continued over the moveable and immoveable properties till her death." The defendants had complete notice of the case of the plaintiffs, and it was their clear duty to produce those account-books which undoubtedly would have been important bearing on the question at issue.

It was contended by Mr. Sultan Ahmad that the suppression of the account-books is after all not of much importance since there is clear admission made by the witness examined on behalf of the plaintiffs that the wakfnama was acted upon. There is no doubt, as the plaintiff's witnesses have admitted, that "majlis has all along been held in the Imambara from the first to the 12th day of Muharram every year," that "Mehdi procession is taken out after majlis from the courtyard of the Imambara on the 7th day of the Muharram" that the procession goes round the town in pomp and thereafter returns to the Murtaza Masjid" that "the gentries of the town all along took part and still take part in the said majlis and procession "that the ladies of the gentries of the town also come to Asmatunnissa's house to pay respect to the Mehdi when it is taken inside the house" that "on the 7th day malida is distributed to the persons who attend there either outside or inside the house," that "sarbat and jelapee were and still are distributed during the ten days" that "on the 12th day Phul- pan is observed" that "Urs ceremony of Kazi Muhammad Hussain is observed in the said Imambara," that "on such occasion Koran Sheriff is recited and Fateha ceremony is gone through," that "bread and meat are cooked and distributed to the poor on the Urs ceremony day," that "those who attend the ceremony are also offered bread and meat." But the question is not whether there were acts which any pious Muhammadan lady would perform, but whether the wakf was at all constituted. If, on a consideration of the evidence, the conclusion is reached that the wakf was perfected, it would be wholly irrelevant to consider whether the wakf was acted upon, for the evidence tending to show that the wakf was not acted upon would only be evidence of breach of trust on the part of the mutwalli. The evidence upon which the respondents rely does not in any way establish that the wakf was completed. The acts to which the plaintiff's witnesses speak and upon which Mr. Sultan Ahmad relies as establishing that the wakf was not only perfected, but was actually acted upon are such as any pious Muhammadan lady of the Shia sect in good circumstances would do of her own accord; and the evidence is conclusive that all these different ceremonies used to take place regularly before the first wakfnama was executed. The account-books would be valuable evidence on the point, and I cannot pass by the suppression of these account-books as lightly as the learned Subordinate Judge has done.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad relies upon certain transactions as showing that Asmatunnissa in certain transactions acted as the mutwalli of the endowment. Of the numerous transactions upon which Mr. Sultan Ahmad relies, the only series that press me are the suits which Asmatunnissa brought as mutwalli of the endowment as against a tenant. The certified copies of the decrees which have been produced are Exhibit V series and they show that Musammil Asmatunnissa as mutwalli of the endowment recovered certain rent-decrees against certain tenants. These are the only documents which support the case of the defendants. The other documents upon which Mr. Sultan Ahmad relies do not really touch the question at issue. They undoubtedly show that various persons treated her as a mut- wall of the endowment, but Asmatunnissa was not a party to these documents and it is impossible to regard them as assertions made by her as to her title as mutwalli of the endowment. These documents are Exhibit Q, a kobala in her favour dated the 20th December 1883; Exhibit K, a kobala in her favour dated the 17th March 1888; Exhibit H, a kobala in her favour in 1891 and Exhibit J series, certain kabuliyats executed by tenants in her favour as mutwalli of the endowment. They are no doubt evidence in the case, but they are not sufficient, in my opinion, to turn the scale in favour of the defendants.

In coming to the conclusion that the wakf was not perfected, I have been impressed by the facts, first, that Asmatunnissa did not apply for registration of her name in the Land Registration Department as mutwalli of the endowment; secondly, that she did invite the Survey Authorities to record her as the mutwalli of the endowment; thirdly, that she did not collect the rent due to her as the mutwalli of the endowment; and fourthly, that the defendants have suppressed the account-books which would be the most valuable evidence to show in what capacity she held possession of the properties in dispute. In Hamid Ali v. Mujawar Husain Khan (1) one of the questions which the Allahabad High Court had to consider was whether, notwithstanding his paper declaration to that effect, the settlor did really obtain that seisin as mutwalli which the Shia Law requires, Burkitt, J., in answering the question in the negative, made the following pregnant observations:—"It may also be strongly doubted whether there was in this case that strict seisin by the mutwalli which the Shia Law requires. The settlor did, no doubt, draw up the paper wakfnamah in which he says that thenceforth he holds the property as mutwalli. But he did nothing more except to register the paper. He in no way changed the outward appearance of the title by which he remained in possession. If he had been sincere in his desire to divest himself of his proprietary title, he would have at once applied to the Revenue Authorities to have his name no longer recorded in the public registers as owner of the dedicated property, and instead to have a new entry made recording him as mutwalli. This he did not do" and the learned Judge concluded as follows:—"On the above facts I am unable to say that the settlor, notwithstanding his paper declaration to that effect, did really obtain that seisin as mutwalli which the Shia Law requires." In my opinion, the plaintiffs have established that Asmatunnissa did not change the character of her possession and that, accordingly, the wakfnama was not perfected. That being so, the subject-matter of the wakf was her inheritance to which plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to succeed under the Muhammadan Law.

My finding on this point is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal; but as the case is likely to be carried to the Judicial Committee, it is just as well that I should express my opinion on the two other points which have been argued before us by Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick. Mr. Mullick contends before us that the wakfs are illusory and were not intended to be acted upon and that the whole object was to divert the course of succession under the Muhammadan Law and to keep the properties in Bibi Asmatunnissa's husband's family. In my opinion, the question has not been raised in the form in which it has been put by Mr. Mullick before us. It has, indeed, been suggested in the plaint that possession all along remained with Asmatunnissa and that the wakfs were never acted upon; but when we are dealing with the question whether the wakfs were illusory, the question is not whether the wakfs were or were not acted upon, but whether it was intended that they should or should not be acted upon. It is not suggested anywhere in the plaint that it was not intended by Asmatunnissa that the wakfs should be acted upon. We are then left to decide the question on the wakfnamas as they stand. Now, it cannot be contended for a single moment that the wakfnamas as they stand do not constitute a dedication of the properties to charitable or religious uses. That being so, it is impossible to hold, on a construction of the wakfnamas, that the wakfs are illusory and that they were not intended to be acted upon.

KHOTA RAM V. NAWAZ.

The last point urged is that the documents were not read and explained to Bibi Asmatunnissa and that she did not have any independent advice in connection with the execution of these documents. The learned Subordinate Judge has given good reasons for deciding this issue in favour of the defendants and I am not prepared to hold that his conclusion is erroneous. I do not propose to discuss all the evidence bearing on this point, it is sufficient for me to refer to a document of great value bearing on this point. It appears that Asmatunnissa was examined on her behalf in a suit which was instituted by Shaikh Kudrat Ali against her. Her deposition in that case is Exhibit S and it establishes, in my opinion, beyond doubt or controversy, that Asmatunnissa was aware of the fact that she had executed three wakfnamas one after another. It was contended by Mr. Mullick that Exhibit S was not properly admitted in evidence. In my opinion, it was properly admitted under section 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. In the course of her evidence she said as follows:—"I have executed three wakfnamas. In the first wakfnama the sum of Rs. 10 was fixed as the pay of Imam Ali and after his death to his sons if they be competent to do the work." There is no doubt, in my opinion, that she was well aware of the fact that she had executed these wakfnamas. She even remembered that by the first wakfnama the sum of Rs. 10 was fixed as the pay of Imam Ali which is undoubtedly correct. Her evidence read as a whole shows that she is a shrewd and clever woman and it is improbable that she should have signed these documents without understanding what they were.

Although my finding on the second and third points urged by Mr. Mullick are against him, still as, in my view, the wakf was not perfected, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession of the properties in dispute. I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree passed by the Court below and give the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the properties set out in Schedule I of the plaint. The plaintiffs are also entitled to a decree for mesne profits and for costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

In conclusion, I should like to draw the attention of the Trial Court to a matter which, in my opinion, constitutes a reproach on the administration of justice in this country. The plaintiff, an aged lady of 62, was examined on commission, and her cross-examination lasted for 31 days, and covers 63 printed pages in the paper-book. The cross-examination of the other witnesses examined on commission is correspondingly long. There is an idea that Pleaders cross-examining witnesses on commission may take a liberty which would not for a moment be permitted in Court. But, in my opinion, the Courts can and ought to exercise some sort of control in these matters. The Commissioner appointed by the Court has complete power to stop proceedings and to take the direction of the Court whenever it appears to him that the Pleader cross-examining a witness is abusing his position and exceeding the limits of propriety; and, in my opinion, the Court, in appointing a Commissioner, should in each case give him instructions so as to make it clear to him that he is not so powerless as it is imagined, and that he should exercise his power and stop the proceedings for the purpose of taking the direction of the Court whenever he should think that it is necessary to do so.

On a mortgagor making default in payment of interest the mortgagee sued for and obtained possession of the mortgaged property in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed. The mortgagor subsequently applied for redemption of the mortgage under the provisions of the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act. The Collector directed redemption on payment of the principal amount alone. The mortgagee thereupon brought a suit for a declaration of the mortgage amount, including interest:

Held, that the portion of the claim relating to the amount of interest which had fallen due at the date when the mortgagee sued for possession was not barred by the provisions contained in O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 768, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, dated the 8th October 1917.

Baktshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.
Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This first appeal is the result of a suit under section 12, Punjab Act II of 1913. The mortgagors, in a certain transaction to be described presently, applied for redemption to the Collector and obtained a decision that the mortgage could be redeemed on payment to the mortgagee, Khota Ram, of Rs. 570. Khota Ram has sued for a declaration that there is a further charge on the land mortgaged of Rs. 5,015 and that there can be no redemption without payment of this amount. There was a prayer in the alternative for possession, if it be found that he (the mortgagee) is not in possession, but the fact of the mortgagee's possession is now conceded.

The mortgage was entered into on the 26th July 1895 by registered-deed for an area of 214 kanals 7 marlas. The mortgage price was Rs. 560 and the conditions were that the mortgagors should remain in possession and should pay interest yearly in the form of a certain quantity of grain, on default of any year's interest the mortgagee was to be empowered to take possession and thenceforth payment of interest should cease. The term of mortgage was four years, after which the mortgagors were to redeem on payment of the mortgage-money in the month of Har. Then follow in the deed two sentences which are important. The first is this: "Compound interest shall be charged on the unpaid amount of interest at 25 per cent. per annum, and the same shall be paid by the mortgagors to the mortgagee along with the aforesaid mortgage money." The other is the following which comes a little lower down:—"The aforesaid mortgaged lands and the persons of the mortgagors shall both be liable for payment of this debt."

On the 27th June 1898 a further advance of Rs. 10 was made to Charagh, one of the mortgagors, by Khota Ram and a document was drawn up reciting that interest was payable on this amount at Rs. 1-9 per cent. per mensem, that principal and interest were payable on demand, that the debt should be considered as an additional charge on the lands mortgaged, that if those lands were redeemed, payment of the said principal and interest would be made along with the mortgage-money due under the previous deed and that other lands and the persons of the debtors would be liable for the debt.

In 1902 the mortgagee, Khota Ram, sued for possession on the ground that the interest for that year had not been paid but he further stated that previous instalments had not been paid in full. He was given a decree for possession and the Court expressly refused to go into the question of what was due for arrears of interest, remarking that the plaintiff could seek his proper remedy in respect of anything outstanding. A concession was given to the mortgagors that should they pay the 1902 and 1903 instalments in Jeth Sambat 1960 (May 1903) possession should not be delivered to the plaintiff. No payments, however, were made and Khota Ram obtained possession on the 3rd April 1904. He now asks for a declaration that the value of unpaid grain instalments with compound interest at 25 per cent. up to the date of suit should be declared to be included in the mortgage charge. The calculation is set forth in the plaint and shows that the balance of grain due for each year from Sambats 1953 to 1961 has been taken in local weight measures of paths choths, choths and topas. Compound interest at 25 per cent. up to the date of suit has been calculated on each balance in terms of weight of grain. The total weight of grain due has thus been ascertained and a fixed rate of Rs. 3-8-8 per maund has been applied with the result of a sum of Rs. 4,981-4. The mortgagors have been credited with small payments in each of the five years, 1953 to 1957, but with nothing thereafter. Rs. 33-12 interest on the second advance of Rs. 10, brings the total up to Rs. 5,015.

Of the seven issues framed by the lower Court the first three relating to limitation, valuation of the suit and the possession of the plaintiff need not be considered, since these are not questions now in dispute. The remaining four were as follows:—

1. Is the suit barred under O. II, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code?

2. Is the rate of interest penal or excessive and not enforceable?

3. Have the defendants paid interest?

4. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?

The lower Court held on No. 1 that when the plaintiff sued for possession as mortgagee in 1902 he could have recovered the interest then due at the same time and should have done so. Quoting Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (1), Chhabil Das v.

Massu (2) and Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (3), the learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was barred from bringing a second suit for recovery of interest under O. II, r. 2. On issue No. 2 the lower Court recorded a brief decision that the rate of interest was unconscionable and that no debtor with his eyes open could agree to it. There was no specific finding on the other issues, and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has appealed.

In our opinion both the above findings by the learned Subordinate Judge are wrong. An obvious commentary on the first is, that the plaintiff is not bringing a suit for the recovery of interest. He is, to all intents and purposes, a defendant resisting the claim of the mortgagors to turn him out of possession on payment of a comparatively small sum. He has been forced to become a plaintiff in a declaratory suit by the action of the Revenue Officer under Punjab Act II of 1913, but what he says is, that he wants to remain in possession of the land, and that if he is evicted he must be paid a certain sum.

We have heard a lengthy argument from Mr. Jagan Nath for the respondents in support of the lower Court's finding on this issue. He has contended that all the annual defaults from the date of the mortgage up to the date of the suit in 1902 constituted one cause of action and that the plaintiff, having an inherent right to sue for interest not paid at that time, omitted, when he sued merely for possession, to sue for all the reliefs to which he was entitled. In support of the argument as to the inherent right to sue for interest Counsel has quoted Chhabil Das v. Massu (2). In that case, as in the present, the mortgage-bond provided that interest was to be paid to the mortgagee every year and that in default the mortgagee should have the right to take possession of the land. In 1897 the mortgagee sued the mortgagors and obtained a decree for the value of produce then due, but did not claim possession. In his subsequent suit for possession the Chief Court held that the fact that the mortgage-deed did not specifically give the mortgagee the right to sue for produce on default did not take away his inherent right to do so; that he should have sued for possession at the same time, and that an admission by the mortgagors of payment of produce between the dates of the decree and that of the second suit did not create a new cause of action. In the first place, it will be seen that this ruling was delivered on different facts and, in the second, it appears to be contrary to what was laid down in a Full Bench ruling reported as Parmeshri Das v. Fakeria (4), although it was not expressly mentioned as overruled. The Full Bench decision was that a mortgagee is not debarred under O. II, r. 2, from suing for possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of a stipulation conferring upon him the option to sue for interest or for possession in the event of a mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time, by the fact that on the occurrence of a previous default he sued only for interest and not for possession. This was the ruling in a case where there was a distinct provision in the mortgage-deed enabling the mortgagee to sue for interest on default as well as for possession. Here and in the case decided by Chhabil Das v. Massu (2) there was no such express condition, but the learned Judges who delivered Chhabil Das v. Massu (2) read such a condition into the deed in the guise of an inherent right. In any event, the fact that the first suit was for interest and not for possession clearly distinguishes the present case from Chhabil Das v. Massu (2). The cause of action for the 1902 case was the default of payment of interest for that year. The present suit is not one for payment of interest. It is a declaratory suit and the cause of action lies in the steps taken by the mortgagors to put an end to the mortgagee's possession. A direct authority for the view that the previous suit has no effect upon the present is Kimani v. Sultani Mal (5), where it was held, when a mortgagee sued for possession on default on payment of interest, that he was entitled to a decree for possession simpliciter and that the matter of the amount of the lien should be left to be decided on redemption. In this connection the other two rulings quoted by the lower Court Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (1) and Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (3) are not in point.

Coming to the second of the four issues detailed above, the effect of the Privy Council rulings, Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (6) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (7) is, that Courts, as a general rule are bound to give effect to what the parties are proved to have agreed to, even if lapse of time and accumulation of interest may have swelled the principal sum enormously beyond its original figure. The lower Court has not considered those rulings, and in the present case no specific undue influence on the part of the mortgagee was pleaded by the defendants. There was a general plea of undue influence only and no evidence of any sort of undue influence was produced. It has been argued further before us that the interest is not a charge on the mortgaged land, but it is expressly made so by the sentences in the deed quoted above, and Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (3), which is cited, is distinguishable since the terms of the deed in that case were quite different. High as the rate of 25 per cent. compound interest may be, we can find no reason for holding that the mortgagee is not entitled to it.

Counsel for the respondent-mortgagors admits that the onus was on the defendants to prove that any more had been paid to the mortgagee in respect of interest than what has been allowed for in the plaint and that no evidence has been produced on the question by his clients. He has suggested that it was difficult for them to prove anything after 20 years and that the mortgagee had special knowledge but we do not see why the knowledge of the creditor should be presumed to be more special than that of the debtor.

In regard to the last issue, another lengthy argument has been addressed to us to the effect that the plaintiff-mortgagee is not entitled to any arrears of interest on account of his acquiescence in non-payment which should be presumed from the fact that he did not sue to take possession earlier. This is a point which was never raised in the pleadings in the lower Court at all and, in any case, there is no force in it. The law of limitation allowed the mortgagee to sue for interest within 12 years of the first default and 12 years had not elapsed when he took possession. There can be no presumption that he gave up his claim to receive arrears of interest at redemption. The rulings quoted to support this proposition of the appellants need not be discussed since they are not applicable. They are Mahadaji v. Joti (8), Balwantrao Dowlatrao v. Narhar Gangaram Agnihotri (9), Jhunku Singh v. Chatkan Singh (10), Partab Bahadur Singh v. Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh (11) and Badan v. Murari Lal (12). The three latter are cases of the mortgagees accepting a diminished security and remaining apparently satisfied with it for some years, and all the cases deal with mortgages which were usufructuary from their commencement.

The second point raised in connection with this issue is, that the amount of the second bond with the interest due on it cannot be a charge on the land. Again, this was not pleaded in the lower Court and the principal sum Rs. 10 has been paid by the mortgagors as part of the redemption money fixed by the Revenue Officer. In our opinion, according to the terms of the bond, the parties intended it to be a charge on the land and the case is similar to that reported as Parabh Dial v. Kharku (13) where the money due on a similar bond was made so chargeable.

Finally remains to be decided what amount of interest the mortgagee should receive. His claim to Rs. 33-12 simple interest on Rs. 10 up to the date of application for redemption is, in our opinion, correct. For the rest he has refrained from claiming interest after the date on which he took possession but has claimed compound interest on what was in arrear on the date of his taking possession up to the date of the application for redemption. It seems to us, however, after a careful consideration of the terms of the mortgage-deed, that it was not the intention of the parties that compound interest should be charged after possession had been taken. Interest and compound interest both were to be paid in kind and could only be paid so long as the mortgagors had the land which yielded the kind. When the land was taken from them they ceased to have the means of paying either interest or compound interest. Therefore, in our opinion, calculation of compound interest must cease on the 3rd April 1904 when the mortgagee got possession.

In any case, we should not think it right to allow the plaintiff to value his interest in kind at the market rate of 1916 when he brought his suit. We proceed to indicate the lines on which the redemption money due to the mortgagee should be calculated, and it is necessary to remand the case to the lower Court for further evidence to be taken in order to enable us to pronounce a final order.

The quantity of grain outstanding for each year from 1953 to 1961 Sambat is accepted as stated in paragraph 3 of the plaint. The market rate for each year is to be ascertained and the balance of grain for each year reduced to money according to that market rate. On each of the sums so ascertained compound interest at 25 per cent. will be calculated from the date of default to the 3rd April 1904. To the resultant figures are to be added (1) Rs. 33, price of chaff, on which no compound interest is claimed, and (2) Rs. 33-12, the interest on the additional charge of Rs. 10. The total will be declared to be the sum on payment of which together with the principal of Rs. 570, the land can be redeemed by the mortgagor-defendants and the plaintiff will receive his proportionate costs in both Courts.

We refer the appeal to the lower Court under O. XLI, r. 25 for trial of the following issues and return of evidence and findings thereon within three months:—

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, here respondents, obtained a decree against the two defendants, 2nd defendant being the petitioner in this Court, for Rs 400 in the following circumstances:—Plaintiffs, it is not disputed, owed 1st defendant Rs. 400 and, it is proved, paid it to 2nd defendant, 1st defendant's agent, as such. Second defendant, however, did not account to the 1st defendant for the money, misappropriating it. First defendant then obtained a decree for it against the plaintiffs who did not appear or plead discharge. On these facts the lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit against the 1st defendant; but gave a decree against the 2nd defendant; and the question in this revision petition is, whether it was right in law in doing so.

It is clear, that if it was not, plaintiffs will have paid what they owed twice. But that result cannot affect the decision because it is entailed, not by anything in the legal relation between the parties before me, plaintiffs and 2nd defendant, but by the failure of the former to take advantage in the previous suit against them of the plea of discharge, which was open to them. It was no doubt suggested on their behalf during the hearing of this petition that they should now be allowed to make 1st defendant a party to it and claim a reversal of the lower Court's decree in his favour. But it would have been useless to allow this in the absence of any possibility that their contention would succeed. The case must be dealt with as between them and 2nd defendant alone on the issue whether, in the circumstances, they are entitled to recover from him in consequence of his failure to account to his principal.

Under section 233, Indian Contract Act, in cases where an agent is personally liable, a person dealing with him may hold either him or his principal or both of them liable. But it is not shown how, under any provision of law or in virtue of any principle, 2nd defendant was under any liability to plaintiffs in respect of the money received by him from them. This was the basis of the decision in Ellis v. Goulton (1). Lord Esher and Smith, L. J., dealing with and rejecting seriatim the various heads of liability which could conceivably be relied on; and so also, although the reasons are given more shortly, in Bamford v. Shuttlesworth (2) and Stephens v. Budcock (3). Against these authorities, plaintiffs have relied first, on the dictum of Blackburn, J., in Pollard v. Bank of England (4) and Taylor v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (5) in which that dictum is quoted with approval: "Where money has been paid under a mistake of fact to an agent, it may be recovered back from him unless he has in the meantime paid it to his principal or done something equivalent to payment to him, in which case the recourse... is against the principal only." But in the present case, as in Ellis v. Goulton (1) and the cases cited with it, there was no question of mistake, the absence of any being referred to explicitly in Stephens v. Budcock (3) and the two cases last referred to must be distinguished on that ground.

Plaintiffs, however, rely on the fact that these are not cases in which fraud or dishonesty on the part of the agent was relied on and have referred to two of the headings under which the liability of the agent to refund money paid to him is classified in Bowstead on Agency, Art. 125 (b) and (c), p. 421. But of these the first "when the money is obtained by duress or by means of any fraud or wrongful act to which the agent is party or privy" is not relevant. For it is not alleged that plaintiffs made their payment to 1st defendant otherwise than in the ordinary course, in discharge of what they owed his principal; and the lower Court was in fact inclined to find that he originally received the money honestly, failing to credit it correctly only through inadvertence. As regards the other head of liability referred to "When the money is paid under a mistake of fact or under duress or in consequence of some fraud or wrongful act and re-payment is demanded of the agent before he has in good faith paid the money over to or otherwise dealt to his detriment with the principal in the belief that the payment was a good and valid payment," it is sufficient that, as already observed, there is here no question of mistake of fact and there is none of duress or other misconduct on the part of the principal to which alone the learned author can be supposed to be referring, since he has already dealt with the cases of misconduct on the part of the agent. It is then immaterial that a demand may be taken to have been made in the present case on the former before he paid to the latter since the other conditions postulated are not fulfilled.

The plaintiff's reference to this authority in fact calls for notice mainly because the second citation from it purports to be founded on the old case of Cary v. Webster (6). That case actually decided only that a clerk receiving money for his principal and paying it over to him although without making any entry in his account is not liable to the person who made the payment and the portion now relevant is only an accompanying obiter dictum that if the clerk had not made the payment over, he or his principal would have been liable at the plaintiff's option. No reason for this opinion is given and nothing later in the same sense has been shown and it is, therefore, unnecessary to regard the decision, in spite of the high authority of Lord Camden who gave it, as extending in any degree the two headings of liability based on the misconduct of either agent or principal above referred to. That failing, I follow the decision in Ellis v. Goulton (1) and the two cases mentioned in it. In the absence of such misconduct in connection with the receipt of the money, of which refund is claimed, the basis of those decisions, the absence of privity between the agent and the person who paid him, would have been available equally, whatever the circumstances in which the former retained it. Shortly, 2nd defendant received it as his principal's money and Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th January 1914, varying that of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 19th May 1913.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for recovery of damages on account of a breach of contract on the part of the defendants. The defendants indented for 20 cases of oriental beads and 8 cases of needles. Out of the former, they took delivery of 10 cases only and out of the latter only of 6 cases. Thereupon, the plaintiffs re-sold the goods which resulted in a loss. Therefore, they sued the defendants for damages incurred by them. The two Courts below have dealt with the two cases separately because the facts relating to the contract for the purchase of beads are slightly different from those relating to the contract for the needles. The main defence in the suit relating to the beads was that the goods were not in accordance with the order as the packing and the number of beads in each string were not according to order. It has been found by both the Courts that the goods were not packed according to the order. In the indent it was clearly noted that the beads were to be packed in long bundles, but when they arrived they were found to be in round bundles. There were other defences put forward also, such as the cancelment of the indent by mutual agreement between the plaintiff's agent and the defendant's and that the agent had promised to make an allowance on account of the less number of beads in each string. As regards the authority of the agent of the plaintiff the Trial Court was inclined to favour the view that he had no power to make any allowance and that the plaintiff was not bound by any promises but the Court having found that the packing was not done according to the order it materially affected the goods and the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for short proceeds on the re-sale. As regards the needles the Court found that the defendant was liable and granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 552-10-8.

Both parties appealed. The lower Appellate Court has taken a different view and has granted a decree for Rs. 164-5 in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the re-sale of the beads also and has upheld the decree for Rs. 552-10-5 in respect of the needles.

ABDUL HAKIM-MUHAMMAD SADIK v. JOHO JOUTZEN.

The defendants have, therefore, presented two second appeals to this Court. The first contention put forward by Mr. Balwant Rai is that as the property in the goods had not passed to the purchasers the case did not come within the provisions of section 107 of the Indian Contract Act and the plaintiffs had no right of re-sale. In support of his contention the learned Vakil has relied upon the case of Yule & Co. v. Mahomed Hossain (1). The decision in this case was dissented from by the same Court in the case of Moll Schutte & Co. v. Luchmi Chand (2). It was held in the latter case that where a right of re-sale is given by the contract between the parties it is not necessary that the property in the goods should pass to the purchaser to enable the seller to re-sell the goods and claim the difference between the price of the goods as originally contracted for and the price fetched at the re-sale. In the present case the right of re-sale is given by the contract itself. Therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to re-sell the goods and claim the difference. The suit, therefore, was maintainable. The learned Vakil has also relied upon the decision in the case of Angulia & Co. v. Sassoon & Co. (3) the facts of that case were entirely different. The sugar contracted to be sold was in bulk and the learned Judges held that there might be a case where neither the provisions of section 107 of the Indian Contract Act applied, nor the provisions in the indent. Here, the provision as to the re-sale clearly applies and the rule laid down in Moll Schutte & Co. v. Luchmi Chand (2) clearly governs the case.

The next contention put forward by Mr. Balwant Rai is that as the packing was not according to the order his clients were entitled to reject the goods. The question to be decided is whether the packing was so defective as to affect the goods, see Remfry on Sale of Goods in British India, p. 492. Reference is made there to a case where in a contract of sale of rice it was agreed that the rice would be packed in double bags. Having regard to the facts of that case it was held that the want of packing in double bags necessarily affected the quality and description of the goods. In the present case it has been clearly found by the Courts below that the beads were not of different quality from that ordered in the indent. The mere fact that they were packed in round cases instead of long cases would not justify a finding that the quality and description of the goods had in any way suffered. It has been clearly found by the Courts below that there is no difference between the beads received from those ordered by the defendants. Moreover, having regard to the fourth clause in the indent, it is hardly open to the defendants to raise this contention. That clause runs as follows:—

"I shall not be entitled to refuse to pay for goods or to refuse to accept any draft in respect of them for which the representing samples have not been submitted to me. Partial damage or short quantity or measure or inferiority or difference in quality or design or colour shall not be a ground of objection to pay for the goods or to accept the drafts or to take delivery of the goods."

In this provision the difference in packing is not excepted. If any of the contingencies mentioned in clause (4) had arisen it was open to the defendants to take the advantage of the clause in the indent providing for a reference to arbitration. The defendants ought to have taken delivery and then ought to have referred the matter to arbitrators and ought to have claimed compensation. The lower Appellate Court, in my opinion, was right in holding that the defendants were not entitled to resist the suit upon this ground.

The third point argued by Mr. Balwant Rai is that, upon the facts admitted, the goods had arrived in July 1908 and that, therefore, the plaintiffs had not exercised their right of re-sale within a reasonable time and are not entitled to maintain the suit. In support of his contention he has relied upon the following passage to be found at page 402 of Remfry on Sale of Goods in British India:—

(1) 24 C. 124; 1 C. W. N. 71; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 748.

(2) 25 C. 505; 2 C. W. N. 283; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 335 (F. B.).

(3) 13 Ind. Cas. 705; 39 C. 568; 16 C. W. N. 593.

KOSALAI RAMA PILLAI V. PULOSTHIAM PILLAI.

"Section 446. The seller electing to exercise this right is not only bound to wait a reasonable time after giving notice of his intention before actually re-selling, but he is bound to exercise the right within a reasonable time after the date of the breach, otherwise the price obtained on such re-sale if it has been unreasonably delayed until the market has fallen, will not be a true criterion of the damage."

This rule is based upon the decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Prag Narain v. Mul Chand (4). At page 540 of the report the learned Judges made the following observation :—

"In Addison's Law of Contract, 9th Edition, p. 526, the rule on the subject is thus stated :—'If the goods have been re-sold by the vendor within a reasonable time after the breach of contract by the purchaser, the measure of the damages will be the difference between the price agreed to be given and the price realized on the re-sale, with the costs and expenses of the re-sale, but if there-sale has been unreasonably delayed until the market has fallen, the price realized on such re-sale will not afford a true criterion of the damage.' These are authorities for holding that if the seller elects to re-sell, he must do so within a reasonable time from the date on which the contract was finally repudiated by the buyer. Any other conclusion might cause undue hardship to the buyer. A seller may, with the deliberate intention of causing loss to the buyer, delay the re-sale until the market has fallen and then re-sell the property, and thereby cause to the buyer a loss which he might not have sustained had the re-sale taken place within a reasonable time from the date of the breach of contract."

Having regard to the rule laid down in this case, it is necessary to ascertain certain facts before deciding the appeal finally.

I accordingly refer to the lower Appellate Court the following issues under O. XXI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code :—

(1) On what date was the contract finally repudiated by the defendants?

(4) 19 A. 535; A. W. N. (1897) 150; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 346.

(2) What was the price of the beads and needles prevailing in the market on that date, and what would be the amount due to the plaintiffs calculated at the rate prevailing on that date?

(3) Was the delay in selling the goods in the present case reasonable?

The Court below will allow the parties to produce such further evidence as they may like to tender in support of their cases. On receipt of findings ten days will be allowed to the parties to take objections to the findings.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25 (2)—Subsequent promise to subscribe for expenses of festival already incurred, whether enforceable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Decree contrary to law—Revision.

A subsequent promise by the defendant to subscribe for expenses already incurred by the plaintiff in conducting a festival is purely voluntary and for no consideration. Section 25 (2) of the Contract Act does not apply to such a case. Payment under such a promise is not enforceable as payment of money due under a contract, and a Village Munsif under section 13 of the Madras Village Courts Act has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit upon it. [p. 775, col. 1.]

Petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 9th March 1921, of the Court of the District Munsif, Tenkasi, in Original Petition Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of 1921, respectively, presented against the decrees, dated the 27th December 1921, in Civil Suits Nos. 18 to 22 of 1920 on the file of the Court of the Village Munsif, Sivagiri.

Mr. S. Ramasami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. P. N. Appusami Iyer and P. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I am quite clear that in these cases before the Village Munsif there was no contract on which a suit could lie. The plaintiffs only allege that according to a village custom subscriptions are raised from persons of the caste of plaintiff and defendants for conducting a festival. It is not alleged that it was in consequence of any prior agreement by the defendants, plaintiff incurred the obligations, nor, so far as appears from the records, is there any proof thereof. The principle quoted by respondents in Kedarnath Bhattacharji v. Gorie Mahomed (1) has, therefore, no application. All that is relied upon is a subsequent promise by petitioners to subscribe for the expenses already incurred by plaintiff and it is also neither alleged nor proved that there was any promise by petitioners to compensate plaintiff for something which plaintiff had already voluntarily done for the petitioners, hence section 25 (2) of the Indian Contract Act will not avail.

(2) So far as appears on these plaintiffs and the judgment of the Village Munsif, the promise by petitioners to pay was purely voluntary for no legal consideration and payment is not, therefore, enforceable in law as payment of money due under a contract. Hence the Village Munsif, under section 23 of the Village Courts Act, has no jurisdiction to entertain the plaintiffs and his decrees are contrary to law.

(3) Obviously, when decrees of Subordinate Courts are contrary to law, this Court should interfere. I, therefore, reverse and set aside the order of the District Munsif dismissing the petitioner's petitions before him and set aside the decrees of the Village Munsif in these suits. Each petitioner will get his costs here and in the lower Court and share the Vakils' fee fixed at Rs. 50 (equal to Rs. 10 for each case).

(4) This order will not bar plaintiff from framing proper plaintiffs on his alleged cause of action and presenting them in the proper Court.

Custom v. personal law—Test—Kalals of Kot Kalalan, Sialkot District.

One of the most important tests to be applied in determining whether a particular caste is or is not governed by agricultural custom, is to ascertain whether or not they form a compact village community, or, at least, a compact section of the village community. If they do so, the presumption is strongly in favour of the applicability of custom. [p. 776, col. 1.]

This presumption in favour of custom has been applied even in cases of Brahmins and must be still stronger when applied to a tribe whose social and religious status is much inferior, for instance, the Kalals. [p. 776, col. 1.]

Once this presumption has been established the onus is shifted on to the party who relies upon personal law. [p. 777, col. 1.]

The Kalals of Kot Kalalan in the Sialkot District are governed by the Customary Law in matters of succession.

(Case-law discussed.)

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 21st July 1919, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Sialkot, dated the 13th July 1918.

Dr. G. C. Narang, for the Appellants.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad and Lala Nihal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case have been fully set out in the judgment of the Court of first instance and have been succinctly summarised by the learned District Judge. The only question for our decision is whether upon these facts the proper inference to draw is that, in matters of succession, the parties are governed by Hindu Law or by the law of custom.

The First Court has held in favour of custom and the learned District Judge, on appeal, has decided in favour of the personal law.

A number of cases have been cited to us by Counsel on both sides but as each of these cases was decided upon its own particular facts the resulting decisions cannot be of much assistance to us except in so far as they can be shown to have laid down any general principle for our guidance. One clear principle to be extracted from the authorities is that one of the most important tests to be applied in determining whether a particular caste is or is not governed by agricultural custom is to ascertain whether or not they form a compact village community, or, at least, a compact section of the village community. If they do so, the presumption is strongly in favour of the applicability of custom. This presumption in favour of custom has been applied even in cases of Brahmins and must be still stronger when applied to a tribe whose religious and social status is much inferior, as in the present case.

The evidence before us shows that though these Kalals may not form a compact village community, they do at least form a very compact section of the village community. They migrated to this village from another village in the Sialkot District, called Ramdhewa, 40 years before the 1865 Settlement and obtained 2-3rds of the village lands from the Jat proprietors and the village was thereafter named Kot Kalalan after them. At the present time they own more than 2-3rds of the cultivated area, cultivating some of it themselves and the rest through tenants or servants.

In addition to this presumptive evidence a good deal of direct evidence of custom has been produced on behalf of the appellants which cannot be ignored. An instance has been cited of the adoption of a sister's son being cancelled because of objections by collaterals. Ultimately, the matter was compromised by the adopter giving an undertaking that only his self-acquired property should go to the adopted child.

A number of instances have also been cited of collaterals inheriting as against daughters in the absence of sons.

On the other hand, the respondents have not been able to produce a single instance of a daughter succeeding to property from which it may, necessarily be assumed that no such case has occurred. Such evidence, standing by itself, might not be of very much importance, but taken with the whole family history of the parties it is entitled to some weight.

The learned District Judge appears to have based his decision principally on the authority of Diwan Singh v. Paro (1). The facts of which he considers bear a close resemblance to the present case. Both the Courts below there held that the parties were not governed by custom and this finding was upheld on appeal. In that case, however, it was definitely found that the members of the family not only depended for their livelihood on non-agricultural pursuits, but only two or three Kalal families owned any agricultural land, and the Kalals constituted a very small portion of the population of the village, whereas in the present case it has been shown that three out of four pattis of the village are owned solely by the Kalals who have, moreover, two Lambardars of their own.

It is quite obvious that the Court in Diwan Singh's case (1) could not possibly have come to the conclusion upon the facts of that case that the Kalals there formed a compact section of the village community.

We find ourselves unable to agree with the learned District Judge that the facts in the case under consideration are more closely akin to those in Diwan Singh's case (1) than to the facts in the case reported in Kirpi v. Solekh Singh (2). There the parties were Kalals of Ambala, residing in Ambala City, the land in question being situated in a village called Patti Kalalan. Three-fourths of the village was owned by Kalals who had their own Lambardars. The testator was a peon in one of the Courts and it appeared that many of the Kalals who lived in Ambala were employed in service or "literary pursuits." Kalals, however, owned or cultivated land in this and other villages in Ambala District, and the Kalals in question came from an agricultural village of Fatehpur in the Karnal District.

Upon these facts mainly the Court held that, qua agricultural lands at any rate, the parties must be held to be bound by the agricultural custom of the district.

So far as the facts of these two cases are concerned, the latter certainly bears a closer resemblance to the one before us than does the former. However, as we have already said, cases which are decided merely upon their own particular facts and which do not lay down general principles, are of very little value as authorities. In two cases relied upon by Counsel for the appellants, namely, Bishen Das v. Ram Dhan (3) and Jai Ram v. Sardar Singh (4) the Court applied the test already referred to, that is, that where the caste concerned forms a compact section of the village community there is a strong presumption in favour of custom. Once that presumption has been established, the onus is shifted on to the party who relies upon personal law. Such onus has not been discharged by the respondents.

A number of cases have been cited by Counsel for the respondents, viz., Sardul Singh v. Karam Singh (5), Mangtu v. Chuni Lal (6), Umar-ud-din v. Janto (7), Maya v. Gurdit Singh (8), Tulsi Ram v. Nathu (9), Labh Singh v. Gurcharan Singh (10) and Harnam Singh v. Devi Chand (11). Some of these referred to Brahmins, some to Muhammadans, and some to Khatri, but none of them have any bearing upon the facts of the present case. Most of them deal with the principles governing the onus of proof, about which, however, there is very little controversy.

After carefully considering all the facts of the present case we are satisfied that the parties are governed by custom and not by Hindu Law.

We must, accordingly, accept this appeal, and reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court we restore that of the Subordinate Judge. The respondents must pay the costs throughout.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 45-A, 64, 76 (a)—Hundi, loss of—Non-presentment, effect of—Duplicate, when can be demanded.

The loss of a bill or note does not dispense with presentment under section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Where a hundi payable at sight is lost, it cannot be said that it is lost before it is overdue within the meaning of section 45-A of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The holder of such a hundi is not, therefore, as of right entitled to demand a duplicate from the drawer under that section. [p. 778, col. 1.]

The right to obtain a duplicate in case of loss is, however, a part of the mercantile laws of countries and a duplicate may be demanded on equitable principles where a bill is lost whether before or after maturity. [p. 778, col. 1.]

Where owing to the refusal of the drawer of a hundi to supply a duplicate none is presented to the drawee, no presentment for payment is necessary as against the drawee under section 76 (a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act. [p. 778, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 29th August 1921, affirming that of the Munsif First Class, Mianwali, dated the 23rd May 1921.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for Defendant No. 1,

Mr. Nanak Chand, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 994-80 based upon a hundi. The hundi was payable at sight and was drawn by the firm, defendant No. 3, upon a Bombay firm not a party to the suit. It was drawn in favour of defendant No. 2, who endorsed it in favour of defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 firm in its turn sold it to the plaintiff, plaintiff stated that the hundi had been lost. According to the plaintiff's allegation the hundi was sent to their Commission Agents in Amritsar in January 1919 and in May 1920 when the latter came to settle up accounts, it was ascertained that the hundi was never received by them. As against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the learned District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that as the hundi had been lost there had been no presentment thereof for payment in accordance with the provisions of section 64 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. As regards defendant No. 3 he dismissed the suit as it had not been shown that the drawer, i.e. defendant No. 3 could not suffer damage from the want of such presentment. Plaintiffs stated that when it was discovered that the hundi had been lost he asked defendant No. 3 to supply a duplicate, which, however, defendant No. 3 refused. In the Negotiable Instruments Act by Bhashyam and Adgia, 2nd Edition, at page 284 it is stated that "neither bankruptcy nor death of the party dispenses with presentment under section 64 and that even the loss of the bill or the note does not excuse non-presentment." I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the learned District Judge has rightly held that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are not liable. Mr. M. S. Bhagat on behalf of the appellant says that no plea was raised in the Trial Court about non-presentment and that, therefore, such a plea should not be allowed at the present stage. It appears, however, from the pleas of defendant No. 1 that he urged that the drawee should have been asked by the plaintiff for the payment of the amount due, in other words, he meant that there should have been presentment to the drawee. Moreover, from the judgment of the learned District Judge it appears that the point which is a legal one, was fully argued before him.

As regards defendants No. 3, the drawer of the hundi, it appears to me that as the hundi was payable at sight the holder was not as of right entitled to demand a duplicate under section 45 (A) of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Moreover, as it was payable at sight it cannot be said that it was lost before it was overdue. Messrs. Bhashyam and Adgia in the Work referred to above at page 214 state the following rule,

Power to obtain duplicate in case of loss is a part of the mercantile laws of countries and ample scope is given to it by Court of Equity in England both on bills lost before and after maturity and on notes as well." The learned authors go on to say that "the section is not so wide as the proposition of law laid down in the above passage; for it is confined in its operation to bills only, and that, too, before they arrive at maturity; moreover, the remedy given by the section to the loser is against the drawer alone. But the Indian Courts administering rules of equity, justice, and good conscience will adopt the above rule as being not only in consonance with the spirit of the section but also as being the rule applied to similar cases in England." Defendant No. 3 never appeared in the Trial Court. There was, therefore, no plea by him that the plaintiff was not entitled according to mercantile usage to demand a duplicate of the lost hundi. I have no doubt that he was so entitled and as defendant No. 3 refused to supply him with one it was impossible for the plaintiff to make any presentment to the drawee. Therefore, I am of opinion that, under section 76 (a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act, no presentment for payment was necessary as against defendant No. 3 because, owing to his own refusal to supply a duplicate, none was presented to the drawee.

I, therefore, accept the appeal on equitable grounds so far as defendant No. 3 is concerned and give the plaintiff a decree for the sum claimed with costs against him in all the Courts. As against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Railways—Carriage of goods—Risk-note exempting Railway from liability except in certain cases—Burden of proof.

Where goods are consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under a Risk-note under which the Company is not to be held liable for the loss of any article consigned to it unless the loss is due to the Company's wilful neglect or theft by or the wilful neglect of its servants, and the goods are not delivered and the consignor sues the Company for damages, the Railway Company cannot escape liability by merely admitting the loss; they must lead evidence to show that the goods were lost. After the loss is proved it is for the claimant to prove the exceptional circumstances mentioned in the Risk-note making the Railway Company liable for damages, such as wilful neglect on the part of the Railway servants or theft by them. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th July 1922, affirming that of the Additional Munsif, Second Class, Delhi, dated the 16th July 1921.

Lala Sardha Ram Kapur, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 25th July 1922 upholding a decision of the Munsif granting plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 600 damages for the non-delivery of a certain consignment against the defendant, Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co. Certain goods were consigned to the Madras Railway Station of the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway Co., for delivery to the plaintiff's firm at Delhi on the line of the appellant Company. The goods had to be carried over two railway lines, namely, the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway line and the Great Indian Peninsular Railway line. The goods not having been delivered the plaintiffs filed the suit giving rise to this appeal for their value. Both the Railway Companies were impleaded as defendants to this suit. They admitted receipt of the consignment but pleaded that they were exempt from liability by reason of a Risk-note executed by the consignors under which they could not be held liable for any loss of articles consigned to the plaintiffs from any cause unless the loss was due to the Company's wilful neglect or theft by or the wilful neglect of its servants. They denied that there had been any such wilful neglect or theft. It was further contended on behalf of the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway Co. that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as they had received no notice under section 77 of Indian Railways Act.

The Trial Court held that the onus of proving that the goods had been lost was upon the defendant Companies which they had failed to discharge, and that they were consequently not entitled to claim exemption of the provision contained in the Risk-note under which the goods had been entrusted to them. As to notice also, the finding was in favour of the plaintiffs and the suit was accordingly decreed. On appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the suit against the Madras and Southern Marhatta Railway Co. on the ground that no notice under section 77 of the Indian Railways Act had been given to that Company. As against the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co. the learned District Judge was of opinion that the evidence as to the loss of the consignment was unsatisfactory, and he accordingly remanded the case under O. XLI, r. 25, of the Civil Procedure Code for further enquiry upon this point. It appears that the plea put forward by the defendant Company was that the wagon containing the goods in question had caught fire and that the consignment had been burnt at the Sanchi Railway Station on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway on the 13th May 1919. Certain witnesses were produced by the Railway Company before the Munsif to prove the loss alleged, but their evidence was found most unreliable and the learned Munsif held that loss of the goods in dispute had not been established. The learned District Judge concurred with this finding and, holding that loss of the goods had not been proved, confirmed the decree of the Court of first instance.

The Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co., has now come up in second appeal to this Court, and two contentions have been raised on its behalf by Mr. Sardha Ram. Firstly, it is contended that the suit was bad for want of a notice under section 77 of the Indian Railways Act. A reference to the written statement of the Company makes it clear that no such plea was ever put forward and that want of notice was never pleaded by them. On the contrary, paragraph 4 of the plaint in which the plaintiffs had asserted that a notice had been given was never denied and the only issue upon which the parties went to trial was whether exemption under the Risk-note could or could not be claimed by this Company. In these circumstances, I am unable to allow the defendant Company to raise a ground of defence in this appeal.

Next, it is contended that in the case of non-delivery loss ought to have been presumed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed on the ground that he failed to prove that the same was due to the wilful neglect of the Company or of its servants. With this contention I am unable to agree. There is ample authority for holding that in such cases the Railway Company must give proof of the actual loss of the goods and that it is not sufficient that they have not been delivered. After the loss is proved it is for the claimant to prove the exceptional circumstances mentioned in the Risk-note making the Railway Company liable for damages such as wilful neglect on the part of the Railway servants or theft by them: Ghelabhai Punsu v. East Indian Railway Company (1) cited for the respondents, it has been laid down that in such cases the Railway Company cannot escape liability by merely admitting the loss but that they must lead evidence to show that the goods were lost. The same principle has been enunciated in the cases reported as Agent, G. I. P. Railway v. Karaylal (2) B. B. & C. I. Railway v. Ranchhodlal Chhotlal & Co. (3), Jamnadar Baldevdass Firm v. Burma Railways Company (4), Daudbhai v. G. I. P. Railway Company (5), and Mohansingh Chawan v. Henry Conder, General Traffic Manager, G. I. P. Railway Company (6). The Irish case of Curran v. Midland Great Western Company of Ireland (7) is also in point. In that case two pigs consigned by the plaintiff were short delivered and the Railway Company sought to escape liability under the Risk-note drawn up in terms similar to the present Risk-note H. The suit was decreed on the ground that although the Company admitted the loss, they did not lead any evidence as to how the pigs came to be lost. Mr. Sardha Ram, however, relies upon the Full Bench ruling of this Court reported as Hill, Sawyers and Company v. Secretary of State (8) in which it has been held that the word "loss" in Chapter VII of the Indian Railways Act includes loss to the owner of goods made over to a Railway Administration which have been mis-delivered and so have been lost to the person entitled thereto, and contends, on the analogy of this ruling, that as the goods consigned were not delivered to the plaintiffs, they were lost and that the onus of proving the exceptional circumstances mentioned in the Risk-note was, therefore, shifted on to the claimant. In my opinion the authority relied upon is clearly distinguishable and does not materially assist the appellant. In the first place, that was a case of mis-delivery, and I do not think that non-delivery or conversion stands on the same footing as mis-delivery. In the second place, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, that was not a case in which protection was claimed under a Risk-note but under certain sections of the Act itself. No authority has been cited before me in which the word "loss," in a Risk-note has been held to include a loss by non-delivery or conversion, and I cannot, therefore, presume by the mere fact of non-delivery that the goods have been lost.

Finally, Mr. Sardha Ram argues that the finding of the learned District Judge that the goods have not been lost is not justified by the evidence on the record. This he is certainly not entitled to do. The learned District Judge has fully considered the evidence and has come to the conclusion that the loss has not been established. This is clearly a finding of fact and not liable to attack in second appeal. I must, consequently, hold that loss of the goods not having been proved, the defendant Company is not entitled to the exemption claimed and that the suit has been rightly decreed. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 30(a), 105, 113—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 131—Occupancy tenants entered as fixed rate tenants in Record of Rights—Enhancement of rent, suit for—Limitation—Settlement of rent under s. 105, whether bar to suit for enhancement.

It is not necessary to sue for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that defendants are *raiya*ts at fixed rates is wrong before instituting a proceeding for enhancement of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 783, col. 2.]

Amiruddin v. Saidur Rahman, 35 Ind. Cas. 433; 1 P. L. J. 73 and Ram Gulam v. Bishnu Pargash Narain Singh, 11 C. W. N. 48, distinguished. Brij Behari Singh v. Sheo Sankar Jha, 39 Ind. Cas. 85; 2 P. L. J. 124; 1 P. L. W. 434; (1917) Pat. 108, followed.

Malharjun v. Narhari, 25 B. 337; 5 C. W. N. 10; 2 Bom. L. R. 927; 27 I. A. 216; 10 M. L. J.

Therefore, a suit for enhancement brought more than six years after the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights in which the defendants are entered as *raiya*ts at fixed rates is not barred by limitation. [p. 783, col. 2.]

A claim to enhance rent is a recurring cause of action and is governed by Art. 131 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, limitation running from the date of refusal. [p. 784, col. 1.]

Where a fair and equitable rent has once been settled in a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is a bar to any subsequent proceeding for the enhancement of rent before the expiry of the period mentioned in section 113 of the Act, except on the grounds mentioned in that section. Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of Arrah, dated the 20th September 1920, modifying a decision of the Additional Munsif, Second Court, Buxar, dated the 18th September 1919.

Mr. Lachmi Narayan Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Parmeswar Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal. The appeal is from a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Court of Arrah, dated the 20th September 1920, modifying a decision of the Additional Munsif of the Second Court of Buxar given on the 18th of September in the previous year.

The circumstances which gave rise to the litigation are simple enough but they raise some points of law which are not altogether free from difficulty. The plaintiff and certain other persons were mokararidars of a mouza called Khariacha in Parganna Bhojpur, Touzi No. 1307, in the proprietary interest of the Maharaja of Dumraon. The defendants, according to the Record of Rights are entered as sarahmoyian tenants, that is to say, tenants at a fixed rental. If this entry is correct it would not be possible for the plaintiffs to obtain an enhancement of rent. The plaintiffs in this suit, however, claimed that the defendants were not in fact sarahmoyian tenants, but were merely kaimi kaskars, that is to say, ordinary occupancy tenants. In the suit the plaintiffs claimed, firstly, that it might be determined that the defendants are kasht-kars of the property and that they are not permanent tenure-holders of istamarri mukararidars and that the entries in the khewais and khatians were wrong. The plaintiffs, secondly, claimed that on the declaration of the facts as mentioned in the preceding paragraph they should be granted an enhancement of rent at the rate of 0-5-0 per rupee under the provisions of section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act or in the alternative that if the defendants were by the Court held to be tenure-holders then the plaintiffs ask for a similar decree for enhancement under the provisions of section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Lastly, they asked for recovery of arrears of rent. With this last claim this appeal has no concern.

Now, upon this matter coming before the Munsif that officer settled certain issues for determination. They are as follows:—

1. Do the lands in suit form the kaemi jote of the defendants or are they held at fixed rents?
2. Are the plaintiffs entitled to enhancement of rent under section 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act?
3. Is the plea of payment true?
4. What is the rental of the land in suit?
5. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

With issue No. 3 this appeal is not concerned. As to issue No. 1 the Munsif found that the lands in suit did form the kaemi jote of the defendants and that in fact the entries in the Record of Rights were wrong. I may say at once that the Subordinate Judge came to the same finding in this respect as did the Munsif and it is not now contended before me that those findings are wrong. With regard to the second issue, various considerations arose. In the first place, there had been the question as to whether it was possible for the plaintiffs to succeed in their claim for the declaration which they sought. The Munsif says that it is clear that the period of limitation for a declaratory decree in respect of entries in a Record of Rights is six years from the date of the final publication; that the final publication in respect of the lands in suit was made on the 18th of October

1911 and the suit only filed on the 22nd October 1918 and that, therefore, the plaintiff's claim for a declaration as to the status of the defendants must fail as being barred by time. The Subordinate Judge is of the same opinion and it is not now contended before me by the learned Vakil who appeared for the respondents that these decisions were not correct. The first point, however, which gives rise to difficulty is as to whether it was possible for the plaintiff, although he was unable to obtain a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights was erroneous, still to bring a suit for enhancement of rent. The Munsif seems to consider that the plaintiff's claim for enhancement of rent is, like the declaration as to the status of the defendants, also barred by time. The Subordinate Judge deals with the matter somewhat differently. He says "I don't think that the fact that he cannot get those declarations" (that is, the declarations relating to the incorrect character of the entries in the Record of Rights) "precludes him from getting the other reliefs, even if he is successful in proving that the Survey Record of Rights is not correct. If it had been necessary for the plaintiff, as a condition precedent to have enhancement, to obtain a declaration that the Survey entry was erroneous, then of course he would have been bound to have that declaration at the outset. It has been held over and over again that an entry in a Record of Rights neither creates nor extinguishes rights, but that it is merely a rebuttable piece of evidence and, that being so, I do not see why the plaintiff should in the present case be required to have at first the entry declared wrong before he can succeed in his claim to enforce his right to enhancement. I am accordingly not prepared to hold that, because the plaintiff cannot have the declaration asked for, he is precluded from having enhancement of rent if he is otherwise found entitled to have that relief." Now the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellants here drew my attention to the case of Amiruddin v. Saidur Rahman (1) which he regards as being a decision in support of his proposition that, where it is impossible for a plaintiff to obtain a declaration as to the status of himself or of any other person as entered in a Record of Rights owing to a bar created by the Limitation Act he is unable to bring a suit for a relief which is based upon the erroneous character of such entry. In the case quoted the plaintiff, in the Record of Rights published on the 14th November 1905, was shown as a tenant liable to pay rent to the defendant. On the 7th October 1912 the plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant for a declaration that he was a lakheraj tenant and that he was not liable to pay any rent to the defendant. The period of limitation for a declaratory decree in respect of entries in a Record of Rights was held to be six years from the date of the final publication. It was decided in that case that the suit was substantially, one under the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, section IIIA, because the declaration which the plaintiff prayed for would have the effect, if granted, of correcting the Record of Rights; and it was decided that the suit was barred by limitation and that the plaintiff could not succeed in his desire to obtain any order from the Court that he would not be liable to pay rent to the defendant. Mr. Justice Mullick in the course of his decision says:—"The only point urged before me is whether the suit is barred by limitation or not. The learned Vakil for the appellant relies upon Ram Gulam v. Bishnu Pargash Narain Singh (2) and says that the Record of Rights is at best only evidence creating a presumption of title and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to sue to set aside that presumption; that the suit is not one that has any reference to the Record of Rights but that it is a suit which he is entitled to bring under the general law and that his cause of action properly dates from the last rent decree (which I may add was on the 1st August, 1912). It is obvious that the suit is a declaratory suit. The learned Vakil for the appellant does not admit, but it is quite clear, that the suit is one substantially under section IIIA of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff carefully refrains from making any reference to the Record of Rights because he knows that the period of limitation for getting declaratory relief in respect of entries in a Record of Rights is six years from the date of the publication." The suit was, therefore, held to be barred. But the learned Vakil, who appears for the respondent here, has drawn my attention to the case of Brij Behari Singh v. Sheo Sankar Jha (3). This decision, which is also a decision of Mr. Justice Mullick sitting with Mr. Justice Atkinson, appears to be an authority which is directly in point in the case now before me. In that case it was held that it was not necessary to sue for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that the defendants were *raiya*ts at fixed rates is wrong before instituting a proceeding for enhancement of rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Mr. Justice Mullick in the course of his decision remarks:—"With regard to the first holding, the plaintiffs, (who were the landlords), allege that the entry in the Record of Rights showing the defendants as *raiya*ts at fixed rates is wrong, and that the rent is liable to enhancement in order to accord with the prevailing rates of surrounding lands with similar advantages and on account of the rise in the price of food grains within ten years preceding the institution of the suit in 1911. The Subordinate Judge found that the entry was wrong, but that the plaintiffs having failed to sue for a declaration of its erroneous character within six years after the date of the publication, the present suit for enhancement was barred by limitation under Article 120 of the Limitation Act." The learned Subordinate Judge is, in my opinion, wrong in holding that the suit is barred by six years' limitation. It is true that in the plaint the first prayer that the plaintiffs make is that it may be declared that the defendants have only an occupancy right in the lands and that they are not jotedars at fixed rates of rent and they date the cause of action in this respect from the 5th December 1899, i.e., the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights. Now, if the suit had been one for a mere declaration, it would have been, in my opinion, one contemplated by the latter part of section IIIA of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is the Act applicable to the case. This was the view which was taken in Amiruddin v. Saidur Rahman (1) where it was held that if a suit is substantially such a declaratory suit as is contemplated in the proviso to section IIIA of the Bengal Tenancy Act, then the plaintiff cannot, by adding a prayer for confirmation of possession, escape the six years' rule. The point from which limitation is to run is the date of the publication of the adverse entry in the Record of Rights... unless there has been any subsequent invasion of the plaintiff's right, in which case it starts from the later date. If it had been necessary for the plaintiff, as a condition precedent to enhancement, to declare the entry to the erroneous, then I think he would have been bound by the ratio decidendi in Malkarjun v. Narhari (4) and Jagadamba Chaudhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy Chaudhri (5). In the former case the plaintiff's claim involved the setting aside of an execution sale and in the latter of an adoption. In both title had passed to the defendants; but an entry in a Record of Rights neither creates nor extinguishes rights, it is merely a rebuttable piece of evidence. I see no reason why the plaintiff should in the present case have the entry declared wrong before they can succeed in their suit to enforce their right to enhancement. Whatever presumptive value attaches to the entry has been sufficiently rebutted by the entry itself, which shows that it was based on an admittedly erroneous construction of the kabuliat of 1881.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 433; 1 P. L. J. 73.

The next question is whether the suit for enhancement is in time. The answer must be in the affirmative, for Art. 131 of the Limitation Act governs the case. A claim to enhance is a recurring cause of action and limitation runs from the date of refusal. Here the plaintiff's right to enhance the rent is based not on contract but on Statute.

I do not think that it would be possible to find a decision in which the circumstances could be more closely parallel to those in this case. Here the plaintiff's claim for enhancement was based upon the increase in the selling prices of staple food crops. Here, too, the defendants were entered in the Record of Rights as tenants at a fixed rate of rent; here, too, the plaintiffs were desirous of showing that that entry was wrong and that as a matter of fact the defendants were ordinary kaemi tenants; here, too, the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have found that the plaintiffs' contention that the defendants really were kaemi tenants and not tenants at fixed rent was correct. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that I am bound to follow the decision in the case of Brij Behari Singh v. Sheo Sankar Jha (3) and come to the conclusion that the opinion expressed by the Subordinate Judge in regard to this point is correct.

The second point which has been urged before me by the learned Vakil who appears for the appellants presents considerably more difficulty. It is common ground that in the year 1913 there were certain proceedings taken under the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act with regard to the property in connection with which this suit is brought. Settlement was then taking place. The point which is now said to be a bar in respect of the present claim made by the plaintiff for enhancement of rent is the operation of section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 105, sub-section (1) reads as follows:—

"When, in any case in which a Settlement of land revenue is not being made or is not about to be made either the landlord or the tenant applies, within two months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the Record of Rights under section 103 A, sub-section (2), for a settlement of rent, the Revenue Officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant."

Whilst section 113, sub-section (1) reads:

"When the rent of a tenure or holding is settled under this Chapter, it shall not, except on the ground of a landlord's improvement or of a subsequent alteration in the area of the tenure or holding, be enhanced, in the case of a tenure or an occupancy holding or the holding of an under-raiyat having occupancy rights, for fifteen years, and, in the case of a non-occupancy holding or the holding of an under-raiyat not having occupancy rights for five years; and no such rent shall be reduced within the periods aforesaid save on the ground of alteration in the area of the holding, or on the ground specified in section 38, clause (a)."

Now it is again common ground here that in these proceedings taken in accordance with the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the primary, and indeed at that time the only, ostensible object which the plaintiffs had, was to obtain additional rent in respect of a certain area of land which they alleged existed in excess of the area which was recorded in the Survey proceedings. I think it is of great importance to look at the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer in this matter in order to ascertain exactly what there took place. The Assistant Settlement Officer in his decision says: "In this case the plaintiff wants fair rent to be settled for the excess land in the possession of the defendants, under section 52 (a), Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendants contest the claim of the plaintiff. The following issues are framed for decision:—

"(1) Do the defendants really hold any land in excess of that for which they pay rent?

"(2) Whether the holdings of the defendants were previously determined by measurement, if so, by what standard?

"(3) Has the plaintiff been able to raise the presumption in his favour under section 52 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act?

"(4) What allowance should be given to meet the difference resulting from the system of measurement?"

I may point out that we are not really concerned here greatly with these four issues, for it is admitted that there was no excess area and there is no suggestion now that there was not. The 5th and 6th issues are, however, of great importance.

The 5th reads: "What should be the fair and equitable rate of rent for the assessment on the excess area?" and the 6th reads: "What should be the fair and equitable rent for the defendants' holdings?"

With regard, however, to issue No. 1 it is perhaps desirable to point out what the Assistant Settlement Officer says in connection therewith. He writes:—"There is no evidence to find that any particular plot is held in excess. I have found that the jamabandi area is based upon measurement. Hence the excess of Survey area after deduction of 10 per cent. over the jamabandi area is the excess area in the possession of the defendant." With regard to issue No. 5, he writes: "There is no evidence to indicate the particular plot held in excess, hence the fair rate of rent for assessment of excess area is the average rate of rent under section 52 (5), Bengal Tenancy Act." As to issue No. 6 he writes:—"The present rent of the defendant, after being added with the rent on excess land as found in issues Nos. 1 and 5, is fair and equitable. The rent settled will be noted in the annexed schedule and will take effect from the beginning of the next agricultural year 1321 Fashl."

Now it may be at once observed that in addition to the finding that there was an excess area and in addition to the finding that that area was not capable of being defined as a separate piece of land but merely as an area in respect of which there had been a mistake in the original measurement, the Assistant Settlement Officer fixes the rent on the excess at the same rate as that at which the other land had been originally fixed many years before and, further than that, declares that the new total rental now payable in respect of the whole re-measured area is a fair and equitable one.

It is urged before me by the learned Counsel, who appears for the respondent, that it would not seem that the mind of the Assistant Settlement Officer had really been directed to the question as to whether the rate of rent which was at that date, namely, 1913, being paid was a fair and equitable one within the meaning of the provisions of section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But I must confess that, in view of the explicit language which is used by the Assistant Settlement Officer, it would be very difficult to say that that was the case. In addition to this, I think it necessary to point out that had the plaintiffs at that time thought that the original rental which had been arranged many years before was not a fair and equitable one, they could, and, no doubt, would, under the provisions of section 105, have endeavoured to place before the Assistant Settlement Officer their views as to what they considered at the date of the Settlement the fair and equitable rent for the holding. Now the Munsif in dealing with this question comes to the conclusion that the provisions of sec tion 113, Bengal Tenancy Act, bar the plaintiff's claim in this suit for enhancement of rent. He says: "The claim for enhancement of rent, it is urged, is evidently barred under section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I think the contention is quite sound. It appears there was a case under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act regarding the rents of the lands in suit, and although the application under that section was filed on the ground of an increase in area under section 52 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it cannot be again said that fair rents were settled by the Survey Officer according to section 105 under the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now under section 113, as it now stands, when the rent of a tenure of an occupancy holding has been settled under this Chapter (X) it cannot be either enhanced or reduced for a period of fifteen years except on the grounds specified in the section. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff points out that, as a matter of fact, there was no question of enhancement under section 30B in the 105 proceedings and there could not possibly be, for this could not be the subject of a 105 proceeding before the question of status was determined under section 106 as the defendants had been recorded in Survey as istamrari moharridars, i. e., tenants at fixed rents. He, therefore, urges that as the question of enhancement under section 30 (b) was neither the subject-matter of the 105-proceedings nor could be, section 113 does not operate as a bar to the consideration of the relief that he claims now. I cannot, however, agree with these views, for section 113 does not impose any limitation to the section except those mentioned therein. It does not contemplate the increase of rents under section 52 (a) or of enhancement under section 30 (b). It simply says, 'when the rent of a tenure or holding is settled under this Chapter it shall not be altered for 15 years.' Now the rent was certainly settled by the Survey Officer in the proceedings under section 105. I fail to see, therefore, how the plaintiff can now pray for enhancement of rents before the 15 years have elapsed. I am of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff's prayer for enhancement must fail".

Now the Subordinate Judge has taken an entirely opposite view. He writes, "Nor am I prepared to hold that the plaintiff's claim for enhancement is barred under section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This objection in bar of the plaintiff's claim for enhancement is based on the fact that, at his instance, there were proceedings taken under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that in the course of the same proceedings the rent payable by the defendants was settled and the plaintiff was declared entitled to have additional rent of Rs. 4-7-0. It is argued, therefore, that there was a settlement of rent of the holding under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that, accordingly, under the provisions of section 113 of the said Act the rent thus settled shall not except on the ground specifically mentioned in the section, which admittedly does not arise in the present case, be enhanced for 15 years. The copy, Exhibit 7, of the Assistant Settlement Officer's order in the aforesaid case goes to show that the plaintiff's prayer therein was for additional rent in respect of excess lands held by the defendants and no other grounds for enhancement were either advanced or considered by the aforesaid Officer. That being so, I do not think that the provisions of section 113 came into play as the claim for enhancement on the ground now put forward was not considered in the aforesaid case." He then cites the case which has been mentioned to me by the learned Vakil for the appellants Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Ahmad Hussain (6). In that case it was held that in order to attract the operation of section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which contemplates creating a bar to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts under certain circumstances, it is essential to establish that the civil suit had for its subject a matter which had already formed the subject of an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that case it was held that the introduction of section 105 (a) had not altered the scope of the section 109 which had to be construed on the same lines as before the introduction of that subsection. Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Cuming who heard this case remark in the course of their judgment:—"Section 109 provides that, subject to the provisions of section 109 A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken, under sections 105 to 108 both inclusive." They then at a later stage in their judgment say:—"If we were to accept the construction put forward by the appellant, we should have to read into section 109 words which are not to be found there, we cannot hold, on the analogy of the doctrine of constructive res judicata, that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court has been constructively excluded even when a point has been neither raised nor decided under section 105 read with section 105 A." They held, therefore, that as the matters which had previously been decided did not form the subject of determination in the civil suit which had been brought in the case which was then before them, the provisions of section 109 could not be brought into aid, I am bound to say that I think there is a substantial distinction between the position of that case and the position which obtains in this case. Here, whatever may have been the actual ground upon which the plaintiffs started their proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there cannot be the least doubt that the Assistant Settlement Officer definitely stated that, in his opinion, a fair and equitable rent for the holding was at such and such a figure. I cannot help feeling very strongly that if the plaintiffs are unable now to bring this suit for enhancement they have only themselves entirely to blame. It was, I should have thought, open to them in 1913 in the proceedings, settlement then going on, which they brought under section 105 to have put forward what they then thought to be a fair and equitable rent for assessment by the Settlement Officer especially if the status of defendants was not then defined. They did nothing of the sort and now, after the lapse of comparatively a few years, they have come forward asking for a new assessment. The Subordinate Judge, however, was of the opinion that the principle in the case which I have just quoted appeared to be applicable to the present one although, as he pointed out, the facts were different. He also refers to the case of Prasanno Kumar v. Rachimuddin Howladar (7). In that case it was held that an entry in the Record of Rights settling the rent in accordance with the provisions of section 104 to 104 F unless altered by means of a suit brought as contemplated by section 104 H is conclusive and that no suit is maintainable for enhancement of rent on the ground of excess area in spite of their having been a stipulation to that effect in the kabuliat executed by the tenant prior to the Settlement proceedings; and that section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not a bar to the maintainability of the suit of such character and had no application in such circumstances. I must confess, after carefully reading this case, I am unable to see how it seriously bears upon the question for disposal before me. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, seems to think that that case bore some analogy to the present one and acting, as he says, upon the two cases which I have quoted above, he came to the conclusion, with some doubt, that the decision under section 105 did not amount to a settlement of rent as contemplated by section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that, consequently, it was no bar to the plaintiff's suit. I am of the contrary opinion. I think that, taking the circumstances into consideration, the language of the Assistant Settlement Officer and the fact that it seems to have been the fault of the plaintiffs themselves if they find themselves now barred by the express provisions of section 113 from bringing, other than within the period specified, a suit for enhancement, such bar is entirely due to their own laches. Under these circumstances, I must hold that their suit is thus barred.

SHEO PRATAP DUREY V. SHEGOLAM.

In my view, therefore, the appeal must be allowed. The judgment of the Munsif will be restored so far as it has been modified by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in respect of the plaintiff's claim for enhancement of rent. The appellants will be entitled to their costs of this appeal and in both Courts below.

An application to set aside an execution sale on the ground of material irregularity and fraud fails under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code and an order made thereon is appealable under O. JUDGMENT.—The People's Bank obtained a money decree against one Jagan Nath on the 30th May 1910. In execution of that decree one shop belonging to the judgment-debtor was attached and sold on the 16th September 1910. The present application was made on the 14th November 1911, seeking to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity and fraud. This application was allowed by the first Court on the 23rd November 1920. Thereupon an appeal was preferred against the order setting aside the sale. The lower Appellate Court has set aside the order of the first Court and has dismissed the application of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor has, therefore, come up in second appeal to this Court. A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the order appealed against was passed under clause (j) of O. XLIII, r. 1, and as such is not open to appeal. In support of this contention reliance is placed on sub-section (2) of section 104 of the Civil Procedure Code. Sub-section (2) of section 104 provides that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under the section. It cannot be denied that the appeal to the Court below was preferred in accordance with the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (j), inasmuch as the order was passed under O. XXI, r. 92. In my opinion there is force in this contention. It is supported by a recent ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Prasad Singh v. Premma Kuar (1). It is also supported by the ruling in the case of Bhadreswar Goloi v. Bishnu Charan Sen (2). Mr. Nanak Chand, the Counsel for the opposite side, has contended that the order appealed against comes within the provisions of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and should be treated as a decree. In support of this contention he has cited certain rulings under the old Code of Civil Procedure with reference to section 244 of the Code and has contended that, inasmuch as the sale was impugned on the ground of fraud, the order must be taken to be an order under section 47 and not under O. XXI, r. 92. The learned Counsel's argument entirely ignores the fact that a change has been effected in the present Code of Civil Procedure and liberty has been given for impugning a sale on the ground of fraud also to an aggrieved party. Under the old Code of Civil Procedure a party was not entitled to question a sale on the ground of fraud under the provisions of section 311 of the old Code. The application made in this case was in substance an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Code. I have not the slightest hesitation in holding that the order passed was an order and not a decree within the meaning of section (2) of the Code. The present appeal is, therefore, barred by sub-section (2) of section 104 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Finding as to res judicata based on mistake of fact, whether binding—Construction of document—Grant—Wakf—Inam Commissioner, decision of, whether binding on Court.

When a Court decides that a certain matter is res judicata between the parties to the suit, that matter cannot be re-opened in a subsequent suit between the same parties, even though the decision was based on a mistake of fact. [p. 794, col. 1.]

Certain properties were held to be wakf properties in a suit. In a subsequent suit, the plaintiff in which was not a party to the prior suit, it was held that the question whether the properties were wakf was res judicata by virtue of the decision in the prior suit, the Court overlooking the fact that the plaintiff was not a party to the prior suit. The question as to the wakf nature of the properties again arose in a third suit between persons who were parties to the second suit:

Held, that the decision in the second suit that the question of the wakf nature of the properties was res judicata by virtue of the decision in the first suit, although based on a mistake of fact, was binding on the parties to the third suit. [p. 794, col. 2.]

Per Devadoss, J.—A grant of a village recited that a certain religious person was engaged in looking after a certain Durgah and that “there were not sufficient means for the said person to carry on all the religious objects of the institution and that the village was granted by way of aid to the maintenance of the servants, students and other men deserving of help at the aforesaid religious man’s hands. The grant further stated that the village was to be treated as civil liability so that from year to year the income thereof may be utilised for the maintenance of the servants and the requisites of the Durgah. There was an endorsement on the document to the effect that the village had been fixed as aids for the maintenance of the aforesaid religious man and for the expenses of the Durgah and that the same was to be left in the enjoyment of the said person with effect from a certain date:

Held, that the grant was not a personal one burdened with a trust in favour of certain charities but that the properties were “wakf” properties inalienable by the grantee. [p. 792, col. 1.]

In construing *firman*s and grants, great weight ought to be attached to the actual words used in the grant and not to an endorsement which is brief and simple and may not fully express the intention of the grantor. [p. 791, col. 2.]

In interpreting deeds and contracts, the intention of the parties to the document should be gathered only from the recitals in the documents to which they are parties and not from what they said or did before the document was executed. [p. 791, col. 2.]

The decision of an Inam Commissioner as regards the nature of a grant is not conclusive. It is for the Court to decide the nature of the grant though the Inam Commissioner’s decision may help the Court in arriving at a finding as to the practice of an institution. [p. 792, col. 2.]

It is not a safe principle to interpret one document by referring to recitals in another. But where a Court has given a definite meaning to certain expressions, that meaning should be applied to those expressions in other cases. [p. 792, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—I agree, but I prefer not to express any opinion as to the meaning of the deed of grant (Exhibit VI), but would base my decision on the two points (1) res judicata, (2) failure to prove necessity. The decision of this Court in Appeal No. 169 of 1911 is undoubtedly based upon a m take of fact, but is nonetheless binding upon plaintiff for that reason. He cannot now contend that the properties are not wakf; that being so, he must prove necessity for the alienation. Having failed to do this, his appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs of the first respondent.

Plaintiff's right to retain possession of the property, if he is really in possession, does not arise in this suit for money and need not be discussed.

Devadoss, J.—This appeal is against the decree of the District Judge of Vizagapatam dismissing the plaintiff's suit on a mortgage-bond dated 8th December 1900 on the ground that the hypotheca are wakf or trust properties and, therefore, could not be alienated, and that there was no necessity to mortgage the wakf properties.

It is contended for the plaintiff (appellant) before us, (1) that the properties are not wakf properties, but are only burdened with a trust in favour of certain charities; (2) that there was necessity for the mortgage, and (3) that the plaintiff has prescribed for a mortgagee's possession and he could not, therefore, be evicted without the amount due on the mortgage being paid.

The question whether the properties are wakf properties or not depends upon the construction of Exhibit VI which is a grant by the Nawab of Chicacole in the Hijra year 1121. The material portions of the document, are,—Hajee Mir Mahammad Sadique, servant of the Holy Hairs of the Holy Prophet, engaged himself in praying the Creator of Day and Night and always caused the humble fare reach some of the pious men, devotees, righteous and poor men after performing Fatiha (blessings) on the victorious soul of the leader of all Prophets. He decorates, lights and performs the anniversary of the mausoleum every year and low and high people gain prosperity by acquiring a portion of what was left of food and drink, presented and offered to the holy men * * * and as there is no sufficient means for these laudable expenses in this world of causes, accordingly considering all * * * which relates to the person of the King of the world and * * * the entire village of Buradi Kunjram belonging to the said Sircar assessed at even hundred and twenty rupees with effect from the commencement of the 1125 Fasil, as per endorsement, was granted by way of expenses of farsh (carpetting, matting, etc.,) and lighting at the anniversary and maintenance of servants, students and other men deserving help at the hands of the Refuge of Nobility. It is necessary that they should leave it in the enjoyment of the aforesaid person and treat it as above mentioned civil liability so that from year to year utilising the income thereof for the expenses of maintenance of servants and requisites of the Dargah where angels pray, etc." On this document there is the following endorsement: "The endorsement is to this effect that the entire village of Burdi Kunjram belonging to the Chicacole Sircar assessed at seven hundred and twenty (720) has been fixed by way of aids to maintenance of Haji Mir Mahammad Sadique, servant of the Holy Relics and for the expenses of the Dargah; it is necessary that the said village should be left in the enjoyment of the said person with effect from the beginning of 1125 Fasil. The signature on the petition is to this effect "Give sunnad. One village, assessed at 720", Mr. Ahmed Hassan, the Persian interpreter, has explained to us the object of the endorsement; when a petition for a grant was presented to the Nawab, and endorsement was made as to the order of the Nawab on the petition with a direction that a sunnad should issue and on the basis of this the farmans or grant was prepared and signed by the Nawab, Exhibit VI is a grant bearing the baiz (Royal Mark) of the Nawab.

It is contended by Mr. Madhavan Nair that this document was produced and admitted as evidence after both the plaintiff and the defendants had closed their case and that he was prejudiced thereby. The case was closed and the arguments were heard by the learned District Judge on 4th April 1919. He insisted on the production of the original grant which was done by the first defendant on 16th April 1919.

There is an endorsement on Exhibit VI that both the parties admitted the document. That endorsement is dated 21st April 1918. Judgment was delivered after the midsummer vacation on 7th July 1919,

JAGGA ROW BAHADUR GARU V. GORI BIBI.

Mr. Madhavan Nair strongly urges that he had no opportunity of either explaining the contents of the document or of adducing evidence to counteract the effect of them. Seeing what the endorsement on the document is, it cannot be said that the learned District Judge admitted it in evidence without giving the Vakils on both sides an opportunity of inspecting it and having their say on it. It cannot be said that this document was sprung upon the plaintiff; such a document was referred to in the evidence and, seeing what the contention of the first defendant was in this case, there is no reason to suppose that the plaintiff has been in any way prejudiced by the admission of the document after the arguments were heard. If the plaintiff's Vakil thought that he could meet the document in any way he would certainly have asked the Judge to give him an opportunity to do so. There is no affidavit before us to show that plaintiff's Vakil asked for time to have an opportunity of putting forward any contention in respect of the document and that was refused. Therefore, there is no substance in the objection against the reception of the document in evidence.

It is next urged that Exhibit VI does not create wakf but evidences a grant in favour of Mahammad Sadique with a direction to apply a portion of the income to certain charitable purposes, and, therefore, the property granted by the document is only burdened with a trust and is not a trust property inalienable by the grantee. The circumstances under which the grant was made have to be considered. There was a shrine or Dargah in which the Holy Relics of the Prophet were deposited and Mahammad Sadique being a religious man was engaged in offering prayers, performing fatihs, feeding the poor and probably in maintaining a school. The Nawab of Chicacole was approached to make a grant as Mahammad Sadique had no sufficient fund to meet all the expenses of the mosque. The endorsement shows that the Nawab wanted to grant the village in question by way of aid to the maintenance of Mahammad Sadique and for the expenses of the Dargah. Whatever might have been the intention of the Nawab as expressed in the endorsement, when the grant was actually made out, it was so framed as to make the grant a wakf.

In construing the farmans and grants, great weight ought to be attached to the actual words used in the grant rather than to an endorsement, which is brief and simple, and may not fully express the intention of the grantor. In interpreting deeds and contracts, the intention of parties to the document should be gathered only from the recitals in the document to which they are parties and not from what they said or did before the document was executed. The intention of the grantor is quite clear from the following words in the document:—"The entire village of Burdi Kunjram was granted by way of expenses of farsh and lighting at the anniversary and maintenance of servants and students and other men deserving help at the hands of the Refuge of Nobility," the Refuge of Nobility being Mahammad Sadique. What follows puts the intention beyond doubt, "It is necessary that they should leave it in the enjoyment of the aforesaid person and treat it as above mentioned as civil liability so that from year to year utilising the incomes thereof for the expense of the maintenance of servants and requisites of Dargah." Mr. Ahmed Hussain (the Persian Interpreter) explained that by civil liability was meant that it was not an ecclesiastical grant but wakf which, under certain circumstances, could be revoked. There is nothing in the operative portion of the document to show that it was intended as a grant to Mahammad Sadique with a pious wish that he should devote a portion of the income to the charity. No doubt, in that portion of the document relating to the reasons for making the grant the fact that he was not able to meet all the expenses is mentioned. But the operative portion does not make any mention of the needs of Mahammad Sadique.

It is urged that it could not have been the intention of the grantor to make the whole of the income wakf. The word "wakf" is not used in the document hence it could not be considered trust property. This argument overlooks the clear recitals in the document and the object of the grantor, which are that his state should endure for all time by the prayers that may be offered at the Dargah. Further, the income was to be devoted not only to the maintenance of the servants, but also of students and other men deserving help. It is said that it is usual in mosques and Durgah to have a school for teaching Arabic, and the expense in connection therewith cannot be estimated at any particular figure. The size of the school and the nature of the education imparted therein would depend upon the amount that could be spared for such purpose. Considering all the circumstances of the case, I think the learned District Judge is right in finding that the property covered by Exhibit VI is a wakf property and, therefore, inalienable. In Ramanadan Chettiar v. Vava-Levvai Marakayar (1). "the lands in question were comprised in a trust-deed dated the 28th July 1893 whereby they were settled substantially in trust to apply an indeterminate portion of the income for the due performance of customary fatihs for ancestors and to alms-giving, and to apply the residue of the income in perpetuity for the benefit of the defendant and their ancestors without power of alienation." Their Lordships observed at page 123. "The paramount purpose of the grantors was evidently to provide for all the needs of these charities up to the limit of the trust funds, the income received from the land. Those needs are the first burden upon that income. It is the residue, which may be a dwindling sum, that is given to the family. The contention that, because the share of the income going to the family is at present larger than that going to the charities, the effect of the deed is to give the property in substance to the family, and that, therefore, it is invalid as a deed of wakf is, their Lordships think, entirely unsound. And they hold that "having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the dominating purpose and intention of the grantors in executing this deed evidently was to provide adequately for these charities."

Mr. Venkatachari for the first respondent contended that the Inam title-deed, Exhibit I, described the property as trust property. In the first place, the decision of the Inam Commissioner as regards the nature of the grant is not conclusive. Secondly, it is for the Court, when the original grant is before it, to see what that document means. In this case the Inam Commissioner recommended that the inam may be continued on the present tenure. Exhibit I shows no doubt that in column 2 the inam is called Devadayam inam, but in column 10 it is said permanent so long as the service is performed. Then in column 21 it is found "to be confirmed and continued so long as the service is performed." It is not clear from this document whether the Commissioner treated it as service inam or as grant to the Dargah. But as I said above it is for the Court to see what the nature of the grant is, and though the Inam Commissioner's decision may help the Court in arriving at a finding as to the practice of an institution, yet it is not conclusive as to the meaning of the grant, and in this case, I have no hesitation in holding that the grant made by Exhibit VI was a wakf grant. He relied upon a number of cases to show how the grant is to be understood. It is not a safe principle to interpret one document by referring to the recitals in another document. But where the Court has given a definite meaning to certain expressions that meaning should be applied to such expressions in other cases. Neither the firman in Jewun Dass Sahoo v. Shah Kubeer-ud-din (2) nor the one in Muzhurool Huq v. Puhraj Ditarey Mohapattur (3) gives us any help as regards the meaning of Exhibit VI. In Jugatmoni Chowdrani v. Romjani Bibee (4) the requisites of a valid wakf are set out and in Sathianama Bharati v. Saravanabagi Ammal (5) the original grant provided that the grantee was "to improve the mutt, maintain the charity and be happy." It was found that, according to the usage of the institution, the specific trusts to which the income of the village was applicable consisted (1) in the distribution of sadavarthi (rice and condiments were supplied in lieu of cooked food) in the mutt to Gosayi and other pilgrims who pass through Montithope; (2) in the maintaining of pooja or worship in the temple called Sankara Bharati Swami Kovil; (3) in supporting a watershed or pandal at a place near the village called Ellandope, and (4) in providing maintenance to the descendants of the grantee. The learned Judges held: "The conclusion to which we come is that the village was granted as an endowment to the mutt and the charities connected with it, and that what might remain after the due execution of those trusts was intended to be applied to the maintenance of the grantee or his descendants." The next contention on behalf of the appellant is that there was necessity for the alienation and, therefore, the debt is binding on the trust. There is no evidence that there was any necessity for borrowing such a large sum. Exhibit A is a usufructuary mortgage-deed in favour of Sri Ankitam Atchayamma by Jainabibi in which there is a recital to the effect that Rs. 150 per annum was the sum payable for lighting and other expenses of the Dargah and Rs. 100 per annum for the festival of Urs. If that was all the amount that was needed for the up keep of the Dargah, it is not easy to conceive how such a large sum as Rs. 10,000 could have been required for the expenses of Dargah. There is no evidence that, owing to famines or other causes beyond the control of the Muthavalli, it was necessary to borrow for upkeep of the Dargah or for performing the annual festival. Though the District Judge has not discussed the evidence at great length, yet, in the absence of any evidence worth the name, it cannot be said that his finding as to the absence of necessity is wrong. It is for the plaintiff to make out necessity in a case like this, and the mere fact that there has been a debt outstanding for a long time is not a circumstance going to show that, when the debt was first incurred it must have been for a purpose which would bind the trust. From the conduct of the parties, who treated the wakf property, as family property it can be safely inferred that they borrowed for their own purposes and it was only in the year 1884 that Jainabibi was willing to acknowledge that the village in question was granted for offering services to the Asar Sheriff at Chicacole and for the expenses as aforesaid and for the festivals in the Dargah. In the earlier proceedings affecting the plaint village there is no mention any where that it was granted for the purpose of any service; vide Exhibits H. J. and X. I, therefore, hold that no necessity has been proved in this case.

It is next contended by Mr. Malhayan Nair that he has prescribed for a mortgagee's title, and he relies upon Sontyana Gopala Dasee v. Inaputalapula Rami (6). He urged that the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff were in possession from the year 1884 up to 1903, and though he relinquished possession for a short time, yet possession was given back to him by the mortgagees though he could not collect the rent and that his possession was good in law. Granting that his contention is correct, he could only acquire title by prescription against the trustee or Mutwalli, I fail to see how he could prescribe for a title against the trust. If the properties are trust properties, any person claiming from a trustee cannot acquire a prescriptive title against the trust. Exhibit A is a mortgage-deed dated 2nd December 1884 executed by Jainabi who was then the Mutwalli of the Dargah. Whether the document is valid or invalid, it would not give a right to any body claiming under that document to prescribe for a title against the trust. Granting, for argument's sake, that the plaintiff has been in possession for more than 12 years under an invalid mortgage-deed, and has prescribed for a title against the trustee, such prescriptive title will cease with the lifetime of the trustee. It is admitted that Jainabi died in 1902 and Kurban Ali died in 1908. Jainabi was admittedly the Mutwalli during her life time and any title by prescription acquired against her would not avail against her successor as was decided in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Swamigal Balusami Ayyar (7). However, the plaintiff who is not in possession seeks to recover the mortgage amount by sale of hypotheca and is not resisting a suit for possession and he cannot, therefore, insist upon being redeemed. Therefore, there is nothing in this contention on behalf of the appellant.

LAL, BEHARY BASAK v. AKHIL CHANDRA SANTRA.

There is one fatal objection to the claim of the plaintiff which has evidently been overlooked by the Court below. The plaintiff in Original Suit No. 42 of 1907 on the File of the District Court of Ganjam sued Qurban Ali and others for a share of the properties. The plaintiff herein was made the 10th defendant in that suit. The second defendant was Kulsam Bibi, the mother of the first defendant herein. In that suit Mr. Sadasiva Iyer, who was the then District Judge of Ganjam, found that the properties were wakf properties. Though he relied for his finding upon a previous judgment in Original Suit No. 22 of 1905 to which the plaintiff was not a party, yet he allowed him to let in evidence to show that it was the self-acquisition of the first defendant. On the evidence he found that it was wakf property. The third defendant appealed against the decree. The appellant Chand Bibi did not make Gori Bi the first defendant herein who was added as the 18th defendant on the death of her mother, Kulsam Bi, party to the appeal. The appeal was heard by Abdur Rahim and Srinivasa Iyengar, JJ., who held that in the previous suit of 1905 the properties in dispute had been found by the then District Judge of Ganjam to be wakf properties and that that judgment was binding upon the parties: Vide Exhibit IV. They evidently overlooked the fact that the 10th defendant (plaintiff herein) was not a party to the suit of 1905. The learned Vakil who appeared for him did not bring to the notice of the learned Judge the fact that his client was not a party to the suit of 1905. They decided that the question whether the properties in dispute were wakf or not was res judicata between the parties and, therefore, could not be re-opened. Though there is a mistake of fact as regards the parties to the litigation of 1905 yet the learned Judge decided that the matter was res judicata between the parties and, therefore, it is not competent for us to go behind their decision.

It is urged by Mr. Madhavan Nair that the plaintiff was given his costs in the High Court and, therefore, the judgment is not binding on him. The plaintiff was allowed his costs evidently on the ground that he was a Receiver in charge of the plaint properties, and it cannot be said that he was exonerated with costs and that the suit was dismissed as against him. On the other hand, it is quite clear from the judgment that the learned Judges considered that the parties before them were parties to the previous suit, and, therefore, the question was res judicata between them. On this ground alone the plaintiff ought to have been non-suited. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs of first respondent.

Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 8 (2)—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153, proviso, application under—Transfer to Additional Judge, whether competent.

Under section 8 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act an Additional Judge has jurisdiction to hear an application made under the proviso to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act transferred to him for disposal by the District Judge.

Gaudna Bibi v. Jabanulla Mandul, 2 C. W. N. 48 notes, distinguished.

Rule against an order of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, dated the 3rd January 1922.

Babus Hari Charan Ganguly and Monmohan Bose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Hiralal Chakravarty, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule relates to an order dated the 3rd January 1922 made by the Additional District Judge of Howrah whereby he dismissed the application of the petitioner presented to the District Judge of Hooghly under the proviso to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and transferred by the District Judge to him for hearing.

The Rule obtained by the petitioner calls upon the opposite party to show cause why the Additional District Judge's order should not be set aside for the reasons set forth in ground (a) of the petition.

JAVVADI SOORAYYA v. TAVVALA SURYA RAO NAIDU.

Ground (a) of the petition is to the effect "that the learned District Judge exercised his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity in transferring the case to the Additional District Judge and the latter exercised jurisdiction not vested in him in proceeding with the trial and dismissing the motion."

In support of the Rule reliance was placed on the case of Gaudna Bibi v. Jabanulla Mandul (1), (Civil Rule No. 1969 of 1900) reported as 5 C. W. N. Short Notes, 48. We have referred to the record of the case in this Court and we find that there the Additional Judge of Jessore had before him an appeal described in the title as a miscellaneous appeal. The learned Additional Judge dealt with the matter not as an appeal but as an application under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was held by this Court that he had no jurisdiction in those circumstances to deal with the case as an application under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present case the application of the opposite party tenant was properly made to the District Judge of Hooghly, who appears to have transferred it for disposal to the Additional District Judge of Howrah.

In so doing the District Judge no doubt acted under the general powers conferred on him by section 8 of the Civil Courts Act, XII of 1887.

Sub-section (2) of that section provides "Additional Judges . . . shall discharge any of the functions of a District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them, and, in the discharge of those functions, they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge."

We are of opinion that the case cited is distinguishable from the present case on the facts and that the provision in the Civil Courts Act to which we have referred is wide enough to enable an Additional Judge to hear an application under the proviso to section 153 of the Tenancy Act transferred to him for disposal by the District Judge. No doubt the jurisdiction conferred by the proviso is conferred on the District Judge but in our view the hearing of an application under the proviso is a function of a District Judge which, under the Civil Courts Act, he may assign to an Additional Judge.

If that be so, the order of the learned Additional Judge to which the Rule relates was not made without jurisdiction and this Rule must be discharged with costs (hearing fee one gold mohur).

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. P. Narayanamurthi and N. Rama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The order sought to be revised is an order of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore remanding certain suits for disposal by the District Munsif. The question whether the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try these suits, which were for rent and ejectment of tenants, depends on the question whether the Agraharam of Pentapad in the Zemindari of Nuzvid was an "estate" within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act. The Subordinate Judge has found that the grant in question was a grant of both melwaram and kudivaram. In this case the original grant is before us and is marked as Exhibit D. It purports to be a grant by Apparayanin Garu, Zemindar of Nuzvid, in the year 1744 of the Mauza village of Patha Pentaped to a Brahmin named Tirumalasingaracharyulu Ayyavarlam Garu.

Reliance is placed for the appellants on the fact that this is a grant to a Brahmin and that it is described as a Mauza village; also on the fact that in Exhibit IX, an abstract of revenue collections in the years 1777 to 1781, the existence of 300 inhabitants is mentioned, also that there was a division of produce between the Brahmin Agraharamdars, and the cultivators; also that in Exhibit O, which is a statement made by Agraharamdars before the Imam Commissioner, the Agraharamdars disclaimed any interest in the communal lands of the village; and lastly on the mention in Exhibit XVI (j) of 23 kadims among the population of the village.

As regards the existence of 300 inhabitants 33 years after the grant, the words of the Privy Council in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (1) are most apposite. They are these: "It is not proved, nor is there any evidence to suggest, that at the date of the grant there were any tenants in the village holding lands with any rights of occupancy by custom or otherwise." In other words, the grant of a whole village will not be presumed to be the grant only of melwaram interest unless it is shown that the kudivaram interest was already in the hands of some one else than the donee. The division of produce between the agraharamdars and the cultivators throws light on the system then prevalent of paying kist to the land owner, but is no indication whether the tenant had or had not occupancy rights. Mr. Wilson's definition in his Glossary of the word "Mauza" has been referred to in several decisions. It is "a village, understanding by that term one or more clusters of habitations, and all the lands belonging to their proprietary inhabitants." It is not clear whether the word "proprietary" is intended to refer to the habitations or to the lands.

In Upadrasta Venkata Sasthrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (2), Sadasiva Aiyar, J., interpreted Mauza village as meaning a village in which there were proprietors owning cultivable lands. The value to be attached to the learned Judge's definition has been considerably diminished by the remarks of the Judicial Committee in the appeal in Upadrasta Venkata Sasthrulu v. Divi Seetharamudu (3) when Sadasiva Aiyar, J.'s decision was reversed. That case was one of a grant of an inam called Billapadu agraharam in 1748 by the same Zemindar of Nuzvid who was the donor in the present case. The latest pronouncement regarding the meaning of expression "Mauza" is that of the learned Chief Justice in Subrahmanya Somayajulu v. Seethayya (4). He observed that on the material before him it was not possible to say that this word necessarily imported the meaning that there were occupancy railyats on the land. With this observation I respectfully agree, and I apply it to the same expression occurring in the present case.

The word "kadim" is defined by Mr. Wilson as "an old inhabitant of a village, one holding by hereditary descent." In the Glossary to the 5th report "kadim" is defined as a "headman." The word is uncommon so far as my experience goes. But it does not seem to convey anything as to the existence of occupancy rights. On the other hand, a large number of muchallikas (Exhibits A, Q, F, J, S, K, W, series) have been filed in these suits in which the tenants agree to vacate their holdings on the expiry of the term of their tenancy. There is no express admission that the tenants have no jiroyiti rights as there was in the muchallikas in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (1). But their undertakings to quit the lands at the end of their term implies absence of occupancy rights. There is also the further fact referred to by the Subordinate Judge that in some cases where lands have been acquired by the Government, compensation has been paid to the agrahramdars as shown in Exhibit O series, without any claim being made by the tenants to share in such compensation. For these reasons, I consider that the lower Court was right in deciding that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts has not been ousted by section 289 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

The civil revision petitions are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Limitation for second appeal, computation of—Delay in despatch of copy of lower Appellate Court's judgment or decree—Exclusion of time—Time taken to obtain copy of Trial Court's judgment, exclusion of.

In computing the period of limitation for a second appeal, the time taken in obtaining a copy of the decree as well as a copy of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court can be excluded under section 12 of the Limitation Act. And whether copies are not despatched until several days after they are ready, the appellant is entitled to the exclusion of those days. But the time taken in obtaining a copy of the Trial Court's judgment cannot be excluded under that section. Nor can such time be excluded under section 5 of the Act, where the copy of the Trial Court's judgment was, or could be, obtained before the expiry of the period of limitation.

Appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 27th March 1919.

Lala Niamai Rai, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Durga Das for the respondent raises a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal to this Court is barred by time. It appears that the judgment appealed against was passed on the 27th March 1919. The time for appeal, i.e., 90 days, expired on the 25th June 1919. The memorandum of appeal was filed on the 2nd July 1919 with a copy of the judgment appealed against and a copy of the order of the Trial Court but without a copy of the decree. It was thus improperly filed, and was returned by the office, being re-filed with a copy of the decree on the 12th July 1919, i.e., 107 days after the date of the lower Appellate Court's judgment. Mr. Niamat Rai for the appellant contends that under section 12 he is entitled to the time occupied in obtaining copies of these three documents. The time taken up in obtaining a copy of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was five days. He tells us that his client went to Gujranwala on 21st June 1919 and was told on that date that the records were at Lyallpur.

SAMI GURUKKAL v. THIRUPATHIA PILLAI.

Instead of proceeding to Lyallpur his client returned to Lahore and on the 24th June 1919 Mr. Niamat Rai forwarded an application per registered post to the Copying Department at Lyallpur for a copy of the decree. The said copy shows that the application was received at Lyallpur on the 2nd July and that it was ready on the 3rd July. It appears, however, that it was not despatched till the 7th of that month, and we consider, on the authorities, that the appellant is entitled to the time between the 2nd and 7th July, both days inclusive, or a period of six days. Adding these six days to the five days taken in obtaining a copy of the lower Appellate Court's judgment he is entitled to the benefit of 11 days. There still remain six days to be accounted for. The learned Vakil urges that the time taken in obtaining a copy of the Trial Court's judgment, (which in this case was six days,) should be allowed. It certainly cannot be allowed under section 12 of the Limitation Act, but he urges that section 5 can be invoked to his aid. We are, however, unable to see how this can be done. Had the appellant failed to obtain a copy of the Trial Court's judgment at the commencement and been compelled to obtain this copy towards the end of the period of limitation, we think that section 5 could be utilised. He had, however, obtained this copy early in June and we are unable to see any reason for holding that there was any sufficient cause for the delay in this case. We consider that the appellant has been grossly negligent. He could have proceeded to Lyallpur on the 22nd June and had he done so, the appeal could have been filed within the 90 days. Instead of that, he contented himself with instructing Counsel to apply by post, with the result that his application did not reach the Copying Department at Lyallpur till the end of July. We have duly considered Ashiq Hutsain v. Ali Bakhsh (1), Krishna v. Balia (2), Nur Muhammad v. Ram Das (3) and Iqbal Jehan Begam v. Muthura Prasad (4) authorities with which we are in accord.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs as barred by time.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 225 OF 1921.

November 14, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao.

P. SAMI GURUKKAL—PETITIONER—

versus

THIRUPATHIA PILLAI AND ANOTHER—
RESPONDENTS.

Construction of decree—Mortgage-decree—Subrogation—Priority set up negatived—Language of decree defective—Property, whether liable to be sold in execution.

A mortgage of a village was executed subject to the alienations of the kudiwaram interest in certain items of land therein. The mortgage was executed in order to pay off a decree on a prior mortgage. In a suit to enforce the mortgage, the mortgagee claimed priority, on the basis of subrogation, as against the alienees of the kudiwaram interest. One of such alienees who had purchased the kudiwaram interest in three items set up his prior right as to one of the items only and not as to the other two. The finding was against him, but the decree directed the sale only of the "right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor." On objection being taken in execution proceedings to the items being sold in execution under the decree;

Held, (1) that there having been a final adjudication in regard to the claim as to the item specifically set up by the alienee, and having regard to the form of the rest of the decree, the item was liable to be sold in execution notwithstanding the defective language of the decree;

Sri Gopal v. Pirithi Singh, 24 A. 429; 29 I. A. 118; 4 Bom. L. R. 827; 6 C. W. N. 889; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 293 (P. C.), followed.

Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein, 55 Ind. Cas. 959; 38 M. L. J. 424; 18 A. L. J. 401; (1920) M. W. N. 308; 11 L. W. 518; 22 Bom. L. R. 557; 47 I. A. 11; 47 C. 662; 28 M. L. T. 425; 25 C. W. N. 417 (P. C.), referred to.

(2) that in the absence of any adjudication negating the alienee's admitted right of priority in respect of the other two items, the decree must be construed strictly and the items must be held not to have been included in the decree.

Appeal against an order, dated the 17th January 1921, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Execution Appeal No. 2 of 1921, in Execution Petition No. 149 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 43 of 1911.

Mr. N. Sivarama Krishna Iyer, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objection that no appeal lies against an order directing proclamation of sale of properties not included in the decree, (Order XXI, r. 66).

SAMI GURUKKAL v. THIRUPATHA PILLAI.

An order settling terms of proclamation is merely an administrative order and not a decree that is appealable.

Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmania Ayyar (1); Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (2) and Punch Duar Thakur v. Mani Raut (3).

There is no ambiguity or difficulty in the decree and no question of interpretation of decree arises.

Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code provides an appeal against decrees, i.e., all orders which conclusively determine the rights of parties so far as the Court is concerned. The matter relates to execution, Gunniah Vencatachalapathy Aiyar v. Perumal Iyer (4) and Biru Mahala v. Shyama Churn (5), and the question in the case directly raises the interpretation of the decree.

[The preliminary objection was overruled as the case raises the question of the effect of the decree.]

ON THE MERITS:—The alienee-defendant was really an unnecessary party. Where the prior mortgagee or transferee is added as a party but the priority of the mortgage or transfer is admitted or not disputed, the prior mortgagee or transferee is not bound to intervene. He can sue upon his mortgage or transfer. Srinivasa Rao Saheb v. Yamunabhai Ammal (6); Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (7). If validity is admitted priority follows as a matter of course. Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein (8) relied on by the lower Court merely decided that it is the duty of the person who pleaded res judicata to satisfy the Court that the matter was and could have been in issue.

The mortgage does not include kudiwaram rights. The decree in the case is perfectly clear and unambiguous and only "the right and interest of the judgment-debtor" were directed to be sold. That was clearly subject to the title of the prior alienees. The kudiwaram right is not displaced. My paramount title has not been impugned even in the plaint. The properties are free of the subsequent mortgage claim in favour of plaintiff.

Mr. N. Sivarama Krishna Iyer:—It was the duty of the defendant to set up his right. If he fails to do so, he is barred from afterwards setting it up.

Srinivasa Rao Saheb v. Yamunabhai Ammal (6); Nattu Krishnama Chariar v. Annangara Chariar (9); Sethurama Iyer v. Ramachandra Iyer (10); Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (11) and Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein (8) is not in any wise inconsistent with Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (11).

The defendant set up his claim as to one item which was negatived. No paramount title was set up in respect of the other two. This omission operates as a bar. The defendant has, therefore, lost his right as to all the items. It is not open to the defendant to raise these objections in proceedings in execution at this stage.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question argued in this appeal relates to the effect to be given to the decree in Original Suit No. 43 of 1911 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore in so far as the 14th defendant, the appellant before us, is concerned. The plaintiff in the suit claimed under a deed of mortgage dated the 15th November 1907 executed by the first defendant's father, Suryanarayana Pandarathar in his favour in the following circumstances. One Sena Yena Nagappa Chetti obtained a mortgage-decree against the said Suryanarayana in Original Suit No. 54 of 1903 on the file of the Sub-Court, Tanjore. When the decree-holder brought the mortgaged property, the village of Kovilur, to sale, it was arranged that the judgment-debtor should deposit in Court a sum of Rs. 35,000 towards the said decree and he, for the purpose of raising funds, disposed of the kudiwaram right in various plots in the village and realised a sum of Rs. 20,000 and deposited the same in Court, and he borrowed the balance of Rs. 15,000 from the plaintiff executing in his favour the mortgage-deed referred to above. The 14th defendant was the alienee of the kudiwaram right of Items Nos. 123, 118 and 126 in the village of Kovilur. The right was conveyed by a deed bearing date the 13th November 1907, that is, two days previous to the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. The deed of mortgage recites the facts relating to the decree of Nagappa Chetty, the realization of Rs. 20,000 by sale to tenants of the kudiwaram right belonging to the Zemindar in several plots, and the deposit of the said amount in Court. The deed further mentions that the balance of Rs. 15,000 was borrowed from the plaintiff on the security of the village of Kovilur. In regard to the extent of the right conveyed to the mortgagee, the following passage in the document is very material:—"Not only shall the sale of kudikaniachi (occupancy rights) and the grant of permanent lease for the fixed assessment for melvaram already made by us until now in Kovilur village which is mortgaged under this document in order to discharge the said Nagappa Chettiar's debts be binding on you but any sale of kudikaniachi and the right of melvaram thirwa not less than those now fixed in the said village and the grant of permanent lease made by us in future for payment of this mortgage amount shall be binding on you." The rights of the mortgagee are, therefore, expressly made subject to the alienations of the kudiwaram right effected previous to the date of the mortgage, namely, 15th November 1907. The 14th defendant claims that both under the general law as well as under the special terms of the mortgage-deed, his rights in virtue of the alienations in his favour are paramount to the claim of the mortgagee in the suit. So far, the case presents no difficulty and the rights of the plaintiff would be undoubtedly subject to those of the 14th defendant and the claim of the plaintiff to priority would be clearly untenable. But some complication is introduced by the manner in which the pleadings were prepared and the trial was allowed to proceed.

Paragraph 4 of the plaint refers to the mortgage in favour of Sena Yena Nagappa Chettiar dated 7th May 1898, the decree obtained by him in Original Suit No. 54 of 1903 and the bringing to sale of the village of Kovilur in execution of the decree.

Paragraph 5 states that the first defendant's father applied to the plaintiff for a loan of Rs. 15,000 for payment to the decree-holder in Original Suit No. 54 of 1903 and that the plaintiff paid the amount into Court on 4th November 1907 on the understanding that a mortgage should be executed in his favour in respect of the village of Kovilur.

Paragraph 6 refers to the execution of the deed of mortgage and paragraph 7 contains the usual statement that, in spite of demands, no amount was re-paid towards the debt and that the amount claimed in the suit was due.

Paragraph 8 is important and may be re-produced:—

"As the whole of the consideration of the mortgage sued on was paid towards the decree in Original Suit No. 54 of 1903, the plaintiff is entitled to step into the shoes of the decree-holders and enforce his mortgage right even as against any encumbrancers that may have acquired any interest on the mortgaged properties subsequently."

Then, the plaintiff proceeds to say that the second defendant holds a prior charge in the suit properties for her maintenance, that the third defendant obtained a hypothecation bond, dated 26th April 1909, from the father of the first defendant agreeing inter alia to pay the debt due to the plaintiff, and that he, in spite of demands, failed to make any payment and is consequently personally liable to pay the same to the plaintiff.

The latter portion of paragraph 11 is again very material and it runs as follows: "The other defendants Nos. 4 to 8 are setting up some subsequently acquired rights over the mortgaged property that cannot prevail against the superior rights of this plaintiff and they have, therefore, been made party defendants herein."

SAMI GURUKKAL v. THIRUPATHA PILLAI.

The cause of action is stated to have arisen on 13th October 1908 and 13th October, 1909, the date fixed for payment of principal and interest, respectively.

The reliefs asked for in the suit are of the usual nature and comprise a prayer to direct the first defendant to pay the amount due, in default the property mortgaged to be sold subject to the maintenance charge of the second defendant, and to direct the third defendant to be personally liable for the suit amount.

It is now represented to us that most of the defendants Nos. 4 to 48 are some of the alienees to whom the kudiwaram right in various plots had been transferred previous to the date of the mortgage. In this respect the 14th defendant and many of the others included in this group denominated defendants Nos. 4 to 48 are in precisely the same position. Though the plaintiff, on the basis of subrogation, stated in the body of the plaint that the rights of the defendants, Nos. 4 to 48 should be postponed to his mortgage he did not in express terms claim any relief on that basis.

It is important to bear in mind that the plaintiff asked in the suit that the sale should be of the property mortgaged to him. The property is described in the schedule to the plaint and while the description does not contain any reference to the fact that under the mortgage-deed the rights alienated previously were expressly excluded from the mortgage security, there is the inconsistent addition at the foot of the description "the right, title and interest of the first defendant in these lands." The plaint is thus indeed very confusing and the matter is made worse by what subsequently followed.

The 14th defendant put in a written statement wherein he alleged that on 13th November 1907 the first defendant's father sold him the occupancy right in respect of two mahs of land (now identified with Item No. 123) for Rs. 250 and the said amount was paid for discharging a portion of the liability under Original Suit No. 54 of 1903. He further pleaded that he was an unnecessary party. The issue in regard to this matter is Issue No. II which runs as follows:

"Whether the document dated 13th November 1907 mentioned in paragraph 3 of 14th defendant's written statement is true, valid and binds the plaintiff." It is difficult to understand how this issue came to be framed. The alienation in favour of the 14th defendant was prior in date to the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff challenged the genuineness of the alienation in favour of the 14th defendant and claimed priority on the footing that the document dated 13th November 1907 was either not genuine or antedated, the issue would be perfectly intelligible. But the plaintiff did nothing of the kind. He set up a right of priority only on the footing that he had discharged the previous mortgage dated 7th May 1898 and that he was, therefore, subrogated to the rights of the previous mortgagee and he alleged that, by reason of the right of subrogation which he thus acquired, his claim had precedence over that of the 14th defendant. In that view it would be unnecessary to determine whether the alienation in favour of the 14th defendant was true. If the plaintiff proved that he stepped into the shoes of the previous mortgagee, he would establish his priority independent of the fact whether the document in favour of the 14th defendant was or was not genuine. The right of subrogation set up was patently false because the mortgage-deed itself excludes in express terms the right created in favour of the alienees previous to the date of the mortgage, and having regard to the pleadings, the issue framed did not arise at all. In the judgment, reference to this issue is contained in the following short paragraph: "11th and 12th issues: There is no evidence on these issues. I find them against 14th and 15th defendants." The decree drawn up directed the sale of the hypotheca mentioned in the plaint schedule hereunder described. The schedule to the decree contained the description as given in the plaint with the words "the right, title and interest of the defendant." The decree proceeds to say "subject to the rights of the 9th defendant under Exhibit 12, of the 10th defendant under Exhibits 4 and 5, of the 16th defendant under Exhibit 6, of the 32nd defendant under Exhibit 7, of the 35th defendant under Exhibit 8, of the 43rd and 44th defendants under Exhibits 10 and 11 and of the 49th and 50th defendants under Exhibit 9." It will be seen that the decree did not direct the sale of the properties subject to the right of the 14th defendant over the two mahs referred to in the written statement (Item No. 123).

The first question to be determined has reference to this Item No. 123. Is it to be supposed that it is included in the property directed to be sold under the decree or that it is not? The 14th defendant as a prior alienee was not a necessary party to the suit. But, nevertheless, he was impleaded as a party. Though the alienation in favour of the 14th defendant was not impeached in the plaint on the ground that it was either not genuine or the document was ante-dated, still there was an assertion in the plaint that by reason of the right to subrogation which he alleged, he was entitled to priority over the 14th defendant, and the issue, strangely enough, raised the question as to the genuineness and the validity of the sale in favour of the 14th defendant. The issue was found against him.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, strongly relied on Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein (8), but this hardly assists him because it proceeded upon the footing that the sahoos did not in the former suit seek to displace "Bakhtar Mull's position, therefore, it was that he was a prior mortgagee with a paramount claim outside the controversy of the suit unless his mortgage was impugned." Sri Gopal v. Pirithi Singh (7) is a more direct authority. In that case as in this, the paramount right based on subrogation was claimed. It was held that "the prior mortgagee who was impleaded and whose mortgage was impeached was under a duty to set up an earlier mortgage." The facts of the present case bear a very strong resemblance to those of Sri Gopal v. Pirithi Singh (7) quoted above. If the 14th defendant had failed to set up his right in the suit, he would be barred by res judicata from asserting those rights subsequently. He, however, did set up his rights and there was an adjudication against him. The decree that was passed in the suit did not save his rights and it must be taken that there was a final adjudication in regard to the claim set up by him. The difficulty, however, is in reconciling the judgment which contains a finding against the 14th defendant with the decree which directs the sale merely of the "right title and interest of the first defendant." But having regard to the claim, the defence, the issue framed and the decision embodied in the judgment and having also regard to the further fact that the decree expressly excludes from its operation, the rights claimed by certain other defendants, I am constrained to come to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the words in the decree "the right, title and interest of the first defendant", the interest of the 14th defendant in the two mahs referred to in the written statement (Item No. 123) is included in the property directed to be sold by the decree. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in having decided that the 14th defendant is not entitled to claim that Item No. 123 should be excluded from the proclamation of sale.

With regard, however, to Items Nos. 115 and 126, the case is different. No plea was put forward regarding them by the 14th defendant similar to the plea he raised in respect of Item No. 123. It seems strange that he did not set up his paramount title to these items because his claim to all the three plots arose from a transaction or transactions of the same date and was based on one and the same footing. But, however, the fact remains that he did not claim any right in the written statement to the two plots under consideration. In the circumstances, if, nevertheless, a decree had been passed directing the entire village of Kovilur to be sold, under the ruling quoted above Sri Gopal v. Pirithi Singh (7), the 14th defendant's rights would have become subject to the rights of the plaintiff and he could not contend that he was not bound by the decree. But, fortunately for him, the decree directed only the right, title and interest of the mortgagor to be sold, and inasmuch as there is no adjudication negating the 14th defendant's admitted right of priority in respect of these two items we must construe the decree strictly and hold that the interest of the 14th defendant in these two plots is not included in the property directed to be sold under the decree. The respondent's learned Vakil tried to show that the words "right, title and interest of the first defendant" should be read as having reference not to the date of the suit, nor to the date of the mortgage in the plaintiff's favour but to the date of the previous mortgage which the plaintiff claimed he had discharged. But he was obliged to admit that the judgment in the case does not support this contention. As a matter of fact, the judgment nowhere recognises the right to priority by reason of subrogation claimed by the plaintiff. There is no discussion regarding it in the judgment. Presumably there was no evidence given or argument directed in order to support the claim alleged in the plaint. No doubt the judgment saves in express words the rights of some of the defendants, alienations in whose favour were prior to the date of the mortgage. But this was not done as a result of any judicial determination of the question. These defendants were excluded from the operation of the decree merely because the plaintiff admitted in each case that the claim of the defendant might be treated as paramount. I find no indication whatever in the judgment that the right of priority claimed by the plaintiff was adjudicated upon, and it, therefore, follows that the words "the right, title and interest of the first defendant" must have reference only to the date of the mortgage—deed in favour of the plaintiff.

In the result, I hold that the kudiwaram rights acquired by the appellant in virtue of the sale in his favour in plots Nos. 118 and 126 are not covered by the decree and that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in having refused to give effect to these rights. The appeal in so far as it relates to Item No. 123 is dismissed, and in so far as it relates to Items Nos. 118 and 126 is allowed.

Spencer, J.—I agree. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs to the extent to which they have succeeded in appeal.

Mahant.—Denial of wakf nature of property, effect of.—Removal of Mahant.

The denial by a Mahant of the wakf nature of the property attached to the temple and the setting up of an adverse claim to it is sufficient to render him an unfit person to continue in the office of Mahant and liable to removal in a properly constituted proceeding. [p. 804, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Multan, dated the 12th December 1916.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Hargopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of two connected appeals. Ajudhia Das, who was formerly Mahant of two temples at Multan named Prehlad and Narsinghpuri, was removed from his office on January 23rd, 1913, by a panchayat appointed at a mass meeting of Hindus which was commenced on that date. Ajudhia Das instituted a suit on June 21st, 1913, against various Hindu gentlemen. In his plaint, as amended, he asked for a declaration to the effect that he is Mahant of both temples, for restoration to the office of Mahant, and for Rs. 1,000 as damages on account of offerings collected by the defendants.

A counter suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, was instituted on April 17th, 1914, by six Hindus, who had obtained the sanction of the Collector, in which they prayed for the removal of Ajudhia Das and asked that an account should be taken from him, that the management of the temples should be made over to the Narsingh panchayat and that a scheme for their future management should be settled by the Court.

AJUDHIA DAS v. LOKU MALIK.

Numerous pleas were raised in both suits, which it is not necessary to detail here. The main questions were whether the panchayat had power to remove Ajudhia Das from the office of Mahant in the event of his misconduct, and whether he had been guilty of such misconduct as would justify his removal either by the panchayat, or by the plaintiffs in the suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The lower Court has held that there is no rule of succession by inheritance as was alleged by Ajudhia Das, that the Mahants were appointed by the Hindu public, and that the office was controlled by a Panchayat known as the Narsingh Sabha elected by this public. It has further held that though this Narsingh Sabha was not competent to remove Ajudhia Das except by a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, Ajudhia Das can have no claim to re-instatement if the suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code is successful. Ajudhia Das has been found to have been guilty of misconduct. The suit brought by himself, has therefore, been dismissed, and in the other suit it has been ordered that he be removed from the office of Mahant, and a scheme for the management of the temples has been prepared.

Ajudhia Das has appealed in each case, and the only points which have been argued before us are those which have been indicated above. The misconduct attributed to the Mahant is of various kinds. It is alleged that he is a habitual charas smoker, that he has been on unduly intimate terms with various women, that he had been irregular and unpunctual in worship at the temples, that he has refused to allow pilgrims to be put up there, and that he has failed to keep any accounts. We have considered the evidence on these points, and we have come to the conclusion that Ajudhia Das's character is not as black as it has been depicted. There is certainly ample evidence to show that he is addicted to charas smoking, and we can see no reason to doubt the statement of Lala Mohan Lal, who is a member of the Municipal Committee of Multan, that Ajudhia Das has refused to allow fakirs to live in the temples. The evidence relating to the Mahant's relations with women, however, is of a very flimsy type, and is mainly based on hearsay. It appears that a woman was delivered of a child in the temple of Prehladpuri, and Ajudhia Das was suspected of being the father of the child; but since the woman is said to have come to the temple accompanied by a man, who was either her husband or her paramour, the suspicion entertained against Ajudhia Das may well have been without foundation. The Mahant has admittedly not kept any accounts, but since he is illiterate it would hardly be reasonable to expect him to do so.

We think that the acts of misconduct proved would not, in themselves, be sufficient to justify the removal of Ajudhia Das; but it has been pointed out on behalf of the respondents that Ajudhia Das, when examined in connection with the suit brought by him, denied the wakf nature of the property attached to the temples and set up an adverse claim to it. This alone, it is said, would suffice to render him an unfit person to continue in the office of Mahant, and Miyaji v. Sheikh Ahmed Sahib (1) and Chintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (2), are authorities which support this contention. We consider, therefore, that the circumstances are such as to justify the removal of Ajudhia Das in the suit instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

For the purpose of this appeal it is not really necessary to determine whether the panchayat lawfully deposed Ajudhia Das at the meeting held on January 23rd, 1913. If the suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, is successful Ajudhia Das cannot, in any case, be re-instated, and he is not entitled to any damages. We may, however, note that in our opinion the action of the panchayat was not justified. The documentary evidence certainly shows that for some time the management of the temples had been controlled by the Narsingh Sabha, with the concurrence of the Bairagis, and Ajudhia Das, in a statement made before the Naib Tehsildar (page 128 of the paper-book) admitted that he had been appointed in this manner. The Narsingh

Sabha would, therefore, have had the power to remove Ajudhia Das for serious misconduct, but as we have already held there is not sufficient proof that Ajudhia Das had rendered himself liable to removal on this account.

Both these appeals must fail, but it is agreed, on behalf of the respondents that Ajudhia Das who is old and debilitated should be allowed a sufficient sum for his maintenance out of the income derived from the temples, and we consider that Rs. 20 per mensem would be a suitable allowance. We think also that the third clause of the decree drawn up in the suit brought against Ajudhia Das should be omitted, since it would be futile to require accounts from him; and clause (5) contains some extraneous matter which should be expunged. In Appeal No. 771 of 1917, therefore, we modify the decree of the lower Court to the following extent:—

The third clause will be cancelled. In the fifth clause the words "I have. . . Mahant" will be expunged, and the decree will provide for the payment of a monthly allowance of Rs. 20 to Ajudhia Das out of the income derived from the temples from the date of the decree until his death. In other respects the appeal is dismissed and the respondents will be given their costs. Appeal No. 1955 of 1917 is dismissed with costs.

PONAKAVIRA REDDI—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 24, 26, 27—Adjudication on validity of secured debts—Insolvency Court, power of.

Under section 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, an Insolvency Court has a general power to inquire into the validity of a secured debt, independently of the provisions of sections 36 and 37 of the Act, those sections being merely rules of evidence or special rules of substantive law applicable to particular kinds of transfer by the insolvent.

Official Receiver, Tinnevely v. Sankaralinga Mudaliar, 62 Ind. Cas. 495; 44 M. 524; 40 M. L. J. 219; (1921) M. W. N. 236; 14 L. W. 505; In re Sparke, Ex parte, Cohen, (1872) 7 Ch. 20; 41 L. J. Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—Under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, the Court in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction has no power to decide questions relating to adverse claims by or against third parties. [p. 809, col. i.]

Petition under section 46, clause (1) of Act III of 1907 and section 75 of Act V of 1920, praying the High Court to revise, the order of the District Court, Nellore dated the 14th January 1921 in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal Suit No. 20 of 1919, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Kavali, dated 15th September 1919 in Insolvency Petition No. 5 of 1917.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—In concurring in the order which my learned brother proposes, I do not desire to follow him further than is necessary to support his conclusion.

The decision under appeal is in terms that the District Munsif erred in removing the name of 5th creditor, here respondent, from the list of creditors; and we have to consider whether he had power to do this, and, if so, whether we can accept the order made in the exercise of that power. By an irregular and confused course of procedure and pleading, to which my learned brother has referred, that order involved the conclusion, not only that 5th creditor's debt was not proveable in the insolvency, but also that the mortgage securing it was invalid. The objection thus allowed was taken as follows in a counter-petition of 1st creditor:—"The mortgage for Rs. 500 said to have been executed by petitioner (the insolvent) and his father in favour of 5th creditor was created for the benefit of the insolvent and with the intention of evading payments of the debts due to 1st creditor and others and nominally, but is not a true debt. Nothing is payable to the 5th creditor."

This, it is contended, means only that Exhibit A, the mortgage, offends against section 53, Transfer of Property Act, and that as it does not come within section 35 or 36 of Act III of 1907, which is applicable to this insolvency, there could be no adjudication on its validity by the District Munsif in Insolvency or otherwise than in a separate suit, because, shortly, the Insolvency Court cannot adjudicate on claims by or against third parties. The question thus raised is of some difficulty in connection with Act III of 1907 owing to the absence therefrom of any thing corresponding with section 4 of the present Act V of 1920. or section 105 of the English Act or the corresponding provisions of previous Statutes.

This contention, it is urged, can be met by reading the objection to Exhibit A as being that there was no debt and no transfer at all, but only a pretence, which could be disregarded and not that there was a transfer which offended against section 53, Transfer of Property Act, and had to be set aside; and, if the question were of property to be reduced to the possession of the Receiver on behalf of the creditors I should be prepared to adhere to my opinion expressed in Official Receiver, Tinnevely v. Sankaralinga Mudaliar (1) and hold that, so far as the objection to Exhibit A was of the former description and the question was of discovery within the purview of section 18 (1) and (3), the Insolvency Court was competent to decide it. But in fact the Exhibit A being a simple mortgage, there is no question of possession; and there is the further difficulty that the language already quoted from the first creditor's counter-petition is elastic enough to express objections of both the descriptions above referred to.

It is a better argument and one which, I agree, must prevail, that the question is of a claim, not by or against a third party or stranger to the proceedings, but by a creditor, a necessary party to them, which can be made and which the respondent in the present case has chosen to make in the insolvency and with which the Court under section 24 must deal after hearing other creditors' objections; and, as there is no restriction there or elsewhere on the ground on which objections may be made, the Court must adjudicate on them, whether they are that the transactions relied on resulted in no debt or that resulting in a debt, it should be annulled. This, of course, involves that a secured creditor is before the Court primarily to obtain inclusion of his debt in the schedule and only secondarily because the Receiver on behalf of the creditors is concerned to claim the interest in the insolvent's property, constituting the security, for their benefit. But the reply attempted is that, if the objection to the decision of the Insolvency Court binding a secured creditor can be met in this manner, it has still to be shown how that Court is empowered to reach a decision at all as to the validity of a transfer like Exhibit A in the present case, to which, owing to its date, sections 36 and 37 cannot be applied.

It can serve no useful purpose to repeat my learned brother's treatment of the English and Indian authorities on this question. For the English Courts were interpreting provisions in successive Acts with which nothing in the Indian Law applicable to the present case corresponds; and it is, therefore, inconclusive that in In re Sparke, Ex parte Cohen (2) the power of the Insolvency Court to adjudicate on a secured creditor's transfer was sustained, that decision having (as I understand it) been in no degree discredited by the subsequent very generally expressed statement in Ellis v. Silber (3) which my learned brother has referred to, of the principle to be followed. The Indian authorities also are indecisive because it does not appear that any is based on comprehensive arguments and some at least are consistent with the view that the Insolvency Court has power to enquire into the validity of all transfers, the question having been only whether it had in the particular case exercised a proper discretion in doing so or refusing to do so. In these circumstances, I can add nothing to my conclusion in the Official Receiver, Tinnevely v. Sankaralinga Mudaliar (1), already referred to, except that there the general power of the Court was exercisable under section 18 whilst here it is under section 24 and that, accordingly, the Court's power to enquire into the validity of a secured debt exists independently of sections 36 and 37 those sections being, as they were there referred to, only rules of evidence, or, as my learned brother puts it, special rules of substantive law applicable to particular kinds of transfer by the insolvent.

Taking this view, I concur in setting aside the lower Appellate Court's order and, as I agree with my learned brother's criticisms on the District Munsif's disposal, also in the remand he proposes. But I cannot part with the case without observing that much of the time taken over its disposal might have been saved, if the latter Court had made an attempt to appreciate and adhere to the proper course of insolvency procedure. It is unnecessary to refer again to the points noticed in my learned brother's judgment; but I add that, although the present appellant, the 19th creditor, was, as we have ascertained, appointed Receiver on 23rd July 1918, he has never been impleaded in these proceedings in that capacity and was allowed to take the very questionable course of selling the property, the subject of Exhibit A, whilst the validity of that document was still in dispute. It is unfortunate that, although according to the record what is described as a final dividend has been distributed, the proceeds of the sale have been retained in Court and are, we are told, sufficient to satisfy any claim which can be made under Exhibit A.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The District Munsif of Kavali in the exercise of his Insolvency Jurisdiction expunged the debt alleged to be due to Veera Reddi, the respondent before us, from the schedule of the insolvent's creditors.

About 4 years previous to the date of the adjudication, the insolvent had executed a deed of mortgage in favour of the respondent, and the order of the District Munsif was made on an objection raised by several of the other creditors to the validity of the transaction evidenced by the said instrument. On appeal, the District Judge held that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the deed of mortgage on the ground that section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, has no application in the case of transfers beyond two years of the adjudication. One of the creditors has filed this Civil Revision Petition questioning the correctness of the order of the District Judge.

The arguments covered a wide ground, and the question that was raised was whether the Insolvency Court has jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, to adjudicate upon claims of third parties as against the insolvent or his estate represented by the Receiver. I must state at once that, in my opinion, this question does not arise at all in the present case, and that the matter before us can be decided on a ground very different from the one stated.

On the general question argued, there has been a great divergence of judicial opinion. In Guntapalli Narasimhaya v. Malapatti Veeraraghavulu (4) a purchaser from Receiver who had been obstructed by a third party applied to the Insolvency Court, and it was held that the Court had no jurisdiction to decide questions of title. Abdur Rahim, J., makes the following observations: " * * * it would be going much too far to say that a Judge in insolvency in the mofussal has powers by a summary proceeding to decide questions of title with respect to property which is claimed by third persons." In Maddipati Peramma v. Gandrapu Krishnayya (5) the learned Judges held that an order passed by the Insolvency Court on the application of the purchaser from the Official Receiver directing a third party to deliver possession of the property purchased to the applicant, was without jurisdiction. Bakewell, J., expressed the view that the power conferred by section 18 (3) was not intended to provide for the determination of questions of title as between the insolvent and third parties:

whereas Krishnan, J., was of the opinion that the Insolvency Court has jurisdiction in a proper proceeding instituted by the Receiver to enquire into and decide on the merits of an adverse claim set up by a stranger. It must be observed, however, that the observations of Krishnan, J., were obiter.

In Official Receiver, Tinnevely v. Santharalinga Mudaliar (1) the question that arose was of a very different character. After the Receiver had been appointed for the estate of an insolvent the latter's properties were sold in auction by a District Munsif's Court in execution of a decree for money, passed by the latter Court prior to the order of adjudication. It was held that the Insolvency Court was competent on the application of the Receiver to annul the sale and direct delivery of possession to the Receiver. The sale was held after the date of adjudication, but the Receiver was not a party to the proceedings, and the ground of the decision seems to be that a dealing with the property which had vested in the Receiver without notice to him was unauthorised and that under section 18 (3) the Court was competent to direct delivery of possession of the property to the Receiver on his application.

On the general question of the power of the Insolvency Court to decide claims of or against a third party, the judgments contain some observations and the dictum, especially of Seshagiri Iyer, J., "I am of opinion that section 4 declares what has been the law all through," was strongly pressed upon us, but the observations were not necessary for the determination of the question before the Court and the decision cannot be said to be authority either way.

In Ramaswami Chettiar v. Ramaswami Iyengar (6) on facts similar to those that existed in Guntapalli Narasimhayya v. Malapati Veeraraghavulu (4) and Maddipati Peramma v. Gandhapu Krishnayya (5), it was held that the Insolvency Court had jurisdiction to deal with claims of third parties, but it was a decision under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920.

Turning to the cases decided by the Calcutta High Court, we have first Satya

Kumar Mukherjee v. Manager, Benares Bank, Limited (7). I understand the effect of this decision to be that the question of title can be decided only in a regular suit and not in insolvency. I may, however, state that there is a passage in the judgment which may lend support to the argument that the learned Judges did not decide that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction, but merely held that it had a discretion and that the proper exercise of the discretion would be to refer the parties to a regular suit. The passage to which I refer is this:

"If the question of title is seriously in dispute, we state for the information of the Judge that we think he should direct the Receiver to bring a suit to have the question determined."

In Nilmony Chowdhury v. Durga Charan Chander (8) the transfer having been admitted not to be within two years of adjudication, it was held that section 18 (3) did not authorise the removal of a person whom the insolvent could not remove without the aid of legal proceedings. Again, I must add that the observation in the judgment "if the veil is transparent the Court may order the delivery of the property to the Receiver," impairs the value of this decision and in this respect this case bears a strong resemblance to the case already referred to, Satya Kumar Mukherjee v. Manager, Benares Bank, Limited (7).

Joy Chandra Das v. Mahamed Amir (9) is more direct on the point. A creditor alleged that the insolvent's wife was merely a benamidar for the insolvent, and the question was whether the Insolvency Court had jurisdiction to summon the insolvent's wife to examine her and direct her to transfer to the Receiver the property which stood in her name if the property was proved to belong to the insolvent. It was held that the Insolvency Court had no power to adjudicate upon the title of the third party under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907.

To the same effect was the decision of another Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Amina. Khatun v. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury (10).

Gaura v. Nawab Mohammad Abdul Majid (11) is a decision of the Allahabad High Court, but it contains only a non-committal statement and it cannot be regarded as an authority on the subject.

Bansidhar v. Kharagjit (12) decided that the Insolvency Court had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon claims against third parties.

On a review of these decisions it seems to me that the preponderance of authority is in favour of holding that under Act III of 1907 the Court in the exercise of its Insolvency Jurisdiction cannot decide questions relating to adverse claims by or against third parties.

In my opinion, however, as I observed at the outset, the case before us can be decided with reference to altogether different considerations. Section 16 (5) of Act III of 1907 saves the rights of secured creditors but the Court has in certain circumstances to decide questions in relation to secured creditors in the course of its administration of the insolvent's property. Section 21 (c) is an instance in point. Section 24 deals with proof of debts and section 38 enumerates the debts which are proveable in insolvency. Secured debts are not excluded. Section 31 relates to proof of debts due to secured creditors. It will be seen from the sections to which I have adverted that a secured creditor may tender proof of his debt subject to certain conditions and limitations. Section 26 empowers the Court when a debt has been improperly entered in the schedule to expunge the debt in its entirety or reduce the amount of the debt. The power is expressed in general terms and no distinction is drawn between debts unsecured and debts secured. The Court has to prepare a schedule of creditors, which may be amended from time to time and this function cannot be properly or adequately performed unless the Court has equal power to deal with secured as well as unsecured debts. To a proceeding appropriate to this enquiry the parties are not a person subject to the Insolvency Court and a stranger. On the other hand, the secured creditor whose debt is attacked is as much subject to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court as any other creditor, the Receiver or the insolvent. The authorities to which reference has been made deal with claims as between the insolvent's estate and third parties, but the respondent before us is not a third party. On the contrary, he alleges himself to be a creditor and it is impossible to frame a proper schedule without determining the existence of his debt and the extent of it.

In Ellis v. Silber (3) the distinction I have indicated is clearly set forth in the following passage in the judgment of Lord Selbourne, L. C. The passage is at page 86 :—

"That which has to be done in bankruptcy is the administration in bankruptcy. The debtor and the creditors, as the parties to the administration in bankruptcy, are subject to that jurisdiction. The trustees or the assignees as the persons entrusted with that administration, are subject to that jurisdiction. The assets which come to their hands and the mode of administering them are subject to that jurisdiction; and there may be, and I believe are, some special classes of transactions which, under special clauses of the Acts of Parliament, may be specially dealt with as regards third parties. But the general proposition, that whenever the assignees or trustees in bankruptcy or the trustees under such deeds as these have a demand at law or in equity as against a stranger to the bankruptcy, then that demand is to be prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy, appears to me to be a proposition entirely without the warrant of any thing in the Acts of Parliament and wholly unsupported by any trace or vestige whatever of authority."

In this connection I may refer to Khushalram v. Bholar Mal (13). It was held that when a creditor of the insolvent challenged the validity of a debt set up by another creditor the Judge was bound to enquire into the truth of the allegation in insolvency and the parties should not be referred to a regular suit. The case would be exceedingly valuable as an authority but for the fact that the mortgage-deed which was questioned was within two years of the adjudication and the decision could, therefore, be founded on the express terms of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but the observation at page 253* "whether the application is to be regarded as one asking for the removal of the name of Bholar Mal from the schedule of creditors, as one falling under the provisions of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, the matter was one which required investigation" and certain other similar observations to the same effect at page 254* lend support to the view I am inclined to take.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Insolvency Court has jurisdiction to record a finding as to the existence of the debt alleged to be due to the respondent.

But then it is argued that sections 36 and 37 confer a limited jurisdiction upon the Insolvency Courts and that to hold that the Court possesses the power in question will be inconsistent with the assumption involved in the said provisions. In my opinion, these two sections enact special rules of substantive law to be followed by the Courts in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction. The law enunciated in the said sections is not a part of the general law and is to be applied only in cases which come up before the Tribunals exercising powers conferred by the Insolvency Act. A comparison of the terms of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act with the terms of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, will make the point clear. A settlement made by a person whose insolvency is beyond question, but who, owing to unforeseen circumstances, becomes an insolvent within two years of the date of the settlement cannot be set aside under the general law which is contained in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. But it can be annulled under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. I have said that sections 36 and 37 enact rules of substantive law for the Insolvency Courts. Looking at the sections from a slightly different point of view, they may, in my opinion, be described as laying down rules of evidence. Wherever a voluntary transfer or a preference of a creditor on the one hand and adjudication of the transferor or the debtor on the other hand, are brought into contiguity, the law peremptorily requires a certain inference to be made, enquiry is altogether excluded and the inference will not be allowed to be displaced by any contrary proof, however strong. The Insolvency Court shall presume that the transfer was made or preference shown by the insolvent with the intent to defeat his creditors. The presumption to be made is absolute or irrebuttable like the presumption contained in section 112 of the Indian Evidence Act as to the paternity of a child whose parents had access to each other.

In this view, sections 36 and 37 do not deal with the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court and if, on a reference to other sections of the Act, the Courts are found to possess certain powers, the jurisdiction is not affected by anything contained in the two sections above referred to.

Here I must turn to the unfortunate course the proceedings took before the District Munsif. The insolvency petition was presented by the debtor. His adjudication was opposed by several creditors and they filed what are described as counter-petitions. Some of the creditors objected that the amount due to the respondent (secured creditors) was considerably less than what was alleged by the insolvent to be due to him. Others took a different line and made an allegation which is very indistinct in character but which is practically tantamount to an attack on the genuineness of the mortgage transaction. Although one of the creditors had by then been appointed a Receiver, he in that capacity took no action to question the debt. The District Munsif, however, proceeded to enquire into the existence or otherwise of the debt upon the petition and the counter-petitions before him thus adopting a course which has been condemned in Guntu Appireddi v. Guntu Chinna Appireddi (14). In his judgment he states that the only point to be considered was whether the deed of mortgage was supported by consideration. He is alive to the fact that section 36 had no application because the transfer was made about four years previous to the date of adjudication. Still, having recorded a bare finding that the deed was not supported by consideration, he directed that the name of the respondent should be deleted from the list of the creditors. This course was obviously wrong. The mere fact that a transfer is voluntary will not justify the Insolvency Court in setting aside the transfer. The District Munsif has not found that the mortgage amounted to a fraudulent transfer under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. He has not found that the transaction was fictitious or was a mere pretence and there was no intention to transfer; that is to say, that there was in effect no transfer at all, in other words, that the transferee was a mere benamidar for the transferor.

It is argued before us that there is a distinction between a transfer intended to defeat creditors and "a sham transfer so intended," and reliance was placed on Swaminatha Aiyar v. Rukmani Ammal (15). I do not feel myself called upon to express my view of this ruling because in the present case it is immaterial whether the transfer is merely declared fictitious or an order is made annulling it. In either event, the effect will be to refuse recognition to the debt evidenced by the transfer. It was the duty of the District Munsif to have directed his attention to this aspect of the case and then only to have pronounced upon the validity or otherwise of the transaction in question. While disagreeing with the District Judge in his view that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the question, I cannot, however, owing to the irregular and defective trial before the District Munsif, restore the order of the latter. He must be directed to frame proper issues and after giving the parties an opportunity to let in evidence, adjudicate upon the question which has been raised.

Costs will be costs in the cause and will be provided for in the order to be made by the District Munsif.

Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 204, 225—Joint administration, whether desirable—Practice—Persons equally entitled—Selection how to be made.

Section 204 of the Succession Act does no more than state that those who are in equal degree of kindred to the deceased are all, from that point of view alone, equally entitled to be appointed administrators, but the section nowhere says that they are all entitled to be appointed jointly. Under section 225 of the Act the Court is given very wide powers, where it considers it necessary or convenient to appoint some person to administer the estate other than the person who in ordinary circumstances would be entitled to the grant. [p. 814, cols. 2.]

There is nothing in the Succession Act which makes it obligatory upon the Court to grant Letters of Administration to all the persons who may be entitled thereto merely by reason of their equal nearness of kinship to the deceased. [p. 814, col. 2.]

It is well settled that the Court should prefer a sole to a joint administration and even where several persons stand in the same degree of kinship to the deceased, it is the rule to select one only, the selection being made according to certain recognised principles. The interest of the estate which has to be administered and the interests of the parties entitled thereto must be primarily looked to and, other things being equal, a person with business experience and capacity will be preferred to one who has none. [p. 813, col. 2.]

Warwick v. Greville, (1809) 1 Phill. Ecc. 123; at p. 125; 161 E. R. 934, relied upon.

Again, where two persons are equally entitled by reason of consanguinity, preference will frequently be given to the one chosen by the majority of those entitled to distribution of the assets, although other considerations may be sufficient to overrule the wishes of the majority of those interested. [p. 813, col. 2.]

A son, as a rule, will be preferred to a daughter and where none of the usual tests can be applied the Court frequently appoints the applicant who is first in the field. [p. 813, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of Miss Clara Katherine Helen Stoney, otherwise Kathleen Stoney, from an order of the District Judge of Manbhum granting to the appellant jointly with her sister, Myrtle Stoney, Letters of Administration to the estate of their deceased father. The appellant, Kathleen contends that she alone ought to be appointed administratrix of the estate.

George Edwin Blackburn Stoney, the father of the parties, was a Guard in the employment of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company and died intestate on the 30th December 1920. He left a small estate valued at about Rs. 4,000, Rs. 1,480 of this represents the sum payable by the Railway Company to his nominees or representatives after his death from the Railway Provident Institution to which the deceased contributed during his lifetime. The balance consists of furniture and other moveables and small interest in immoveable property. It appears from the evidence that the deceased during his lifetime in December 1914, presumably in conformity with the rules of the Railway Provident Institution, signed a nomination form addressed to the Railway Company declaring his daughter Kathleen, the appellant, to be the person who, in the event of his death, would be entitled to receive the sum due to him from the Provident Fund. The nomination paper was produced in Court it having been obtained from the Railway Company direct by the District Judge himself. It was sent in a letter of the Railway Company to the District Judge. It was not strictly proved in evidence, if strict proof were required, but it was relied upon by the learned Judge and referred to and it has been suggested to-day, for the first time, that this document ought not to be accepted in evidence. There can to my mind be little to be gained by remitting the case for proper proof of this document and the learned Vakil for the respondent has not insisted upon the case going back for that purpose. I think he has exercised a very wise discretion.

On the 16th March 1921 the appellant, who appears to have resided with her father during his lifetime, at Chakradharpur filed an application before the District Judge of Manbhum for Letters of Administration of her father's estate. In her petition she alleged that she was the sole heir to her father and that her sister Myrtle, whose address she gives as Jamshedpur, was an illegitimate daughter. It also appears from her petition that Myrtle, the other sister, had made some attempt to get hold of the deceased's property shortly after his death, and there can be no doubt that the relations between these two sisters are considerably strained. After the appellant's application for Letters of Administration was filed, namely, on the 5th April 1921, the respondent Myrtle Stoney obtained an ex parte order from the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum for a Succession Certificate in respect to the assets of the deceased's estate. When the application for that Succession Certificate was made, has not been disclosed nor do I think it is material for the purpose of determining the matters in dispute in this case. The appellant was not served with notice of that application, and on the 30th April when she came to hear of it, she petitioned the District Judge of Manbhum to transfer the Succession Certificate case from the Court of the Deputy Commissioner to his own Court. The District Judge on the 2nd May consequently requested the Deputy Commissioner to withhold the certificate pending the disposal of the appellant's application for Letters of Administration. The Deputy Commissioner thereupon stayed further proceedings in that matter then before him and it does not appear that the Succession Certificate was actually issued. In fact, the order granting a certificate was afterwards set aside on appeal. By that time the respondent had appeared in the Letters of Administration case and applied for an adjournment which was granted.

In due course, the appellant's petition came on for hearing before the District Judge and on the 16th July judgment was delivered. The respondent produced in support of her legitimacy, which had been challenged, a baptismal certificate showing that she was baptized on the 5th June 1889 and she was therein stated to have been born on the 16th February 1889. Her parents' names are also given. The marriage certificate of her parents was also produced showing that they were married at Lahore on the 16th August 1885. The parents of both parties are, I understand, the same. The respondent also filed a petition dated the 18th June 1921 contending that she was entitled to a half share in her father's estate and praying that Letters of Administration should be granted jointly to herself and the appellant.

The learned District Judge found that the certificates of baptism and marriage, the authenticity of which was not challenged, sufficiently proved the legitimacy of the respondent. He, quite properly in my opinion, refused to decide whether the nomination form signed by the deceased constituted a gift in favour of the nominee or merely gave her power to collect the money due after his death from the Provident Fund for whomsoever might be entitled to it and what the effect of that document may be is a matter which cannot be determined in the present proceedings. The learned Judge considered, however, that the proper course was to make a grant in the name of the two sisters and ordered accordingly that Letters of Administration should be granted to both.

From this decision Miss Kathleen Stoney has appealed. It is contended on her behalf, in the first place, that the petition of the respondent of the 18th June is not an application made in conformity with section 246 of the Indian Succession Act which requires certain particulars to be stated in the application. The learned District Judge considered that the respondent's application under the Succession Certificate Act which was before him and her objection petition of the 18th June praying for joint administration were a sufficient compliance with the section. Moreover, there was already the petition of the appellant before the Court which gave the Court all the necessary particulars and the respondent was, I think, entitled to accept this and ask the Court to act upon it except in so far as she challenged the allegation as to her illegitimacy. In my opinion, the appeal upon this ground fails.

It was next contended that separate Letters of Administration should in any case be granted to the appellant in respect of the Rs. 1,480 payable from the Provident Fund and in support of this contention sections 227 and 228 of the Indian Succession Act were relied upon. Had the deceased made a Will as to this part of his property and died intestate as to the rest the case might have required that Letters of Administration should be granted to the person legally entitled except as to the property dealt with in the Will. That might arise if an executor appointed under the Will was not legally entitled to the administration of the rest of the estate but there are not, in my opinion, any circumstances arising here which require that an exception should be made within the meaning of these sections.

It was lastly contended that specific circumstances should be made out before granting joint Letters of Administration and even where the claimants are equal in degree of kindred to the deceased, only one should be appointed according to the established practice. This contention, is, in my opinion well founded. It is well established according to the English cases that the Court should prefer a sole to a joint administration and even where several persons stand in the same degree of kinship to the deceased, it is the rule to select one only, the selection being made according to certain recognised principles. The interest of the estate which has to be administered and the interests of the parties entitled thereto must be primarily looked to and, other things being equal, a person with business experience and capacity will be preferred to one who has none. [See Warwick v. Greville (1).] Again, where two persons are equally entitled by consanguinity preference will frequently be given to the one chosen by the majority of those entitled to distribution of the assets although other considerations may be sufficient to overrule the wishes of the majority of those interested. A son as a rule will be preferred to a daughter, and where none of the usual tests can be applied the Court frequently appoints the applicant who is first in the field. [See Cordeux v. Trasler (2).] Moreover, the Court never forces a joint administration upon unwilling parties [See Bell v. Timiswood (3).] In the goods of Newbold

(4), and it is obvious that where the applicants for administration are quarrelling between themselves and are antagonistic to each other the administration of the estate is likely to suffer. As they must act jointly one of them, if obstinate, could defeat the proper administration of the estate. This has also undoubtedly been held to be the practice in this country where administration has frequently been refused to more than one person even where the claimants by reason of kinship are equally entitled to it. In the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nittyo Kali Dabea v. Kedar Nauth (5) where two widows of a deceased Hindu gentleman applied for administration of his estate the High Court supported the decision of the District Judge refusing to grant a joint administration following as he said the practice of his Court. The learned Judges in that case when it came on appeal to the High Court said: "We are of opinion that the Judge is perfectly entitled to follow the practice of his Court, which is a usual and reasonable practice, that administration should be granted only to one person." That case was decided in 1879 and, although the Indian Succession Act of 1865 was at that time in force certain of the sections including section 204 did not apply to the case of Hindus, but I refer to this case, and there are others of a similar nature, to show that even in this country the practice has been only in very special circumstances to grant administration to more than one person.

The respondent relies upon the provisions of section 204 of the Succession Act which states that those who stand in equal degree of kindred to the deceased are equally entitled to administration. He argues from that, where you have got two or more persons, and in some cases it may be considerably more, who stand in equal degree of kinship the Court is bound to grant Letters of Administration to them jointly. In my opinion such an interpretation ought not to be given to the section. That section and some of the preceding sections, beginning with section 200, indicate who are the proper persons to be appointed administrator of the estate of a deceased person and lay down certain rules which shall guide the Court in selecting the people to whom Letters of Administration should be granted. It deals first of all with the case of a widow and then refers to certain exceptions in which the widow should not be appointed. Then it deals with the case in which there is no widow or the cases in which the Court sees cause to exclude the widow and in such cases the person to be appointed is the person or persons who would be beneficially entitled to the estate in accordance with the rules for the distribution of an intestate's estate. Then comes section 204 which states that those who stand in equal degree of kindred are equally entitled to administration. It then refers to the case of a husband surviving his wife. He has the same right of administration of the estate as the widow has in respect of the estate of her husband. Then it refers, in the absence of the persons already described, to the rights of creditors. Section 204, in my opinion, does no more than state that those who are in equal degree of kindred to the deceased are all, from that point of view alone, equally entitled to be appointed administrator, but the section nowhere says, that they are all entitled to be appointed jointly, and when one turns to section 225 of the Act it seems quite clear that the Court is given very wide powers, where it considers it necessary or convenient, to appoint some person to administer the estate other than the person who, in ordinary circumstances, would be entitled to the grant. There is, therefore, in my opinion, nothing in this Act which makes it obligatory upon the Court to grant Letters of Administration to all the persons who may be entitled thereto merely by reason of their equal nearness of kin to the deceased. In the present case the applicants have quarrelled between themselves. They are apparently living apart and it would be very difficult, in my opinion, for them to work together in harmony. The estate has to be administered, and, although it is a small one, there may be creditors whose claims have to be satisfied. We are asked by the respondent to appoint her jointly with her sister in order to protect her interests but it seems to me quite clear that her interests will be sufficiently protected by the operation of section 256 of the Succession Act which requires a bond to be executed by the person to whom a grant is made for the due administration of the estate, and if she should fail to provide such a bond then the other applicant has means within her power of applying herself for an appointment or preventing the appointment of the appellant. The only question to determine is which of the claimants should be appointed administratrix. The appellant was the first to apply for Letters of Administration. It is true that the respondent made an application for a Succession Certificate which she was not entitled under the law to obtain, but it is not in evidence whether that application was before or after the application for Letters of Administration made by her sister. At all events, so far as the application for Letters of Administration is concerned, the appellant was the first in the field. She was living with her father before he died and as long ago as 1914 it appears the deceased appointed her as the proper person to receive the sum due to him on his death from the Provident Fund. Although this document is not a Will, it is an indication of the deceased's wishes, and I think that the considerations which I have mentioned are sufficient to turn the scale in favour of the appellant for, in my opinion, there are in this case insuperable objections to granting a joint administration.

In the result, the order granting Letters of Administration to the appellant and the respondent jointly made by the learned District Judge will be set aside and in lieu thereof an order will be made directing Letters of Administration to be granted to the appellant Kathleen Stoney, otherwise Clara Katherine Helen Stoney. In so far as the costs of this appeal and of the proceedings in the Court below are concerned I think that the respondent, having regard to the fact that her legitimacy had been attacked was perfectly entitled to come before the Court and endeavour to prove her legitimacy, and once she did prove that, she has an equal chance at the outset with the appellant in obtaining Letters of Administration and, in these circumstances, I think that the whole of the costs of this litigation including the costs of this appeal should come out of the estate. Having regard to all the circumstances, I think a hearing fee of Rs. 150 would be proper in this case. Before I conclude this judgment, I wish to say that I think that it is a deplorable thing that these two young ladies, whatever terms they may have been upon in the past, should be so foolish, to put it upon no higher basis, as to quarrel between themselves as to their right to inherit their father's property. It would appear from the baptismal certificate that Miss Myrtle Stoney is, what she alleges she is, the legitimate daughter of her parents and one thing is perfectly obvious that if she in fact is the legitimate daughter she is entitled equally to a half share in her father's property with her sister. The estate is a very small one, and if merely for personal reasons these parties are going to quarrel between themselves on a matter of this sort they will find that before very long the whole of the estate will be swallowed up in litigation and there will be nothing left for either of them in the end. I, therefore, earnestly suggest for their consideration that they should, without any further delay, come to an amicable settlement about the matter instead of foolishly wasting their substance, which is very small, in litigation.

SUBBAROYA MUDALIY V. THANGAVELU MUDALI.

Where the managing member or any other accredited agent of a Hindu trading family who carries on the family trade contracts debts for bona fide trading purposes, the creditors are entitled to proceed against the whole family property including the shares of minor members, and such liability is not confined to the assets of the business. In cases of such trading families, the trade assets are not limited to the good will, stock in trade and outstandings of the business but comprise the entire family properties, in the absence of evidence to show that the trade was carried on without reference to the family property. JUDGMENT.

Devadass, J.—This is an appeal against the preliminary decree of the District Judge of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 18 of 1916 by the plaintiff, who sued the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for partition of the family properties and impleaded certain alienees and creditors as defendants. The 1st defendant was the father of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Fourth defendant is the brother's son of the 1st defendant. Fifth defendant is the mother of the plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 6, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37 and 39 are alienees. The rest are creditors.

The plaint allegations are:—The 1st defendant was the manager of the joint family of which plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were members. The properties set out in B Schedule are the joint family properties. The plaintiff's family carried on a cloth trade under the name and style of V. S. Varadaraja Mudali in shop No. 154. The 2nd defendant who was at enmity with the rest of the family carried on a separate trade in another shop under a different Vilasam. He contracted debts and purchased some properties, and the plaintiff is not liable to pay from his share of the family property the debts contracted by the 2nd defendant, which were not for family purposes and which could not bind the family.

C Schedule properties were purchased by the 2nd defendant and the plaintiff did not claim any share in them but stated that should the Court hold that the 2nd defendant purchased them out of the family funds, the plaintiff would be entitled to his share in them also.

The 1st defendant died before notice of the suit could be served on him. Second defendant was ex parte. Third defendant filed a written statement supporting the plaintiff's case. Fourth defendant supports the case of creditors. The creditors and alienees pleaded that the 1st defendant was too old to manage the family concern, that 2nd defendant was managing the affairs of the family, that the trade carried on by him was a family trade, the debts were incurred for purposes of the trade, that the plaintiff, the 1st defendant and other members of the family were benefited by the trade, and the debts are binding upon the plaintiff and the plaintiff cannot question the alienations made by the 2nd defendant.

The learned District Judge in a very careful and elaborate judgment held that the trade carried on by the 2nd defendant was a family trade and that the debts were contracted and the alienations were made for purposes which could bind the family and gave a preliminary decree for partition and directed that Rs. 300 should be paid for the marriage expenses of the plaintiff. The plaintiff now appeals in forma pauperis against that portion of the decree which declares that this share is liable for the debts contracted by the 2nd defendant and the alienations are binding upon him. Original Suit No. 18 of 1916 was tried along with several other suits brought by the creditors against plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for recovery of the amounts due to them and the evidence was recorded by consent in Original Suit No. 18 of 1916. The main judgment is in Original Suit No. 18 of 1916 and the learned District Judge has written separate judgments in the other suits dealing specifically with the case of each plaintiff.

The issues common to all the cases are Issues Nos. 6, 7 and 15. They are:—

(1) Whether the 1st defendant was not the manager of the family or whether the 2nd defendant was constituted its manager?

(2) Whether the trade referred to in paragraph 6 of the plaint is also family business?

(3) Whether the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 4 undertook, to pay the debts alleged to be due to defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9 and if they did, whether any objection in respect thereof is supported by consideration?

It was agreed at the Bar that Issues Nos. 6, 7 and 15 which are dealt with by the District Judge in his judgment in Original Suit No. 18 of 1916 should be tried first, and after their disposal the appeals against the decrees in favour of the creditors should be heard and decided.

The first point for consideration is, whether the business carried on by the 2nd defendant at shop No. 172 was a joint family business or not.

[His Lordship then dealt with the evidence on the point—Ed.]

Taking all these circumstances into consideration and after carefully weighing the evidence I come to the conclusion that the business carried on at 172 was a family business and that the 2nd defendant acted as the accredited agent of the family in carrying on that business. Therefore, I agree with the finding of the learned District Judge on Issues Nos. 6 and 7.

It was urged by Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar that the 2nd defendant led an immoral life and that the debts contracted by him could not bind the plaintiff. There is no satisfactory evidence that the 2nd defendant led an immoral life. There is a vague allegation to that effect; but there is no specific proof that he kept a dancing woman or that he contracted debts for the purpose.

It was next urged that the 2nd defendant had no right to incur debts for buying property. No member of a joint family has a right to incur debts for buying property. But in this case there is no specific evidence except in the case of the loan of the 14th defendant that any money which was borrowed was utilised for buying property. It may be that the 2nd defendant thought he was making a large income and was investing a portion of the income upon immovable property. If there is specific evidence that any loan was given for the purpose of buying property it may be contended with some show of reason that that loan could not bind a minor member of the family unless it was shown that the buying of property was a necessary purpose.

Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar urged that the plaintiff being a minor member of a joint Hindu family which carried on trade, his share of the trade assets alone could be made liable for debts contracted for trade purposes, and he relied upon Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (1). In that case it was held that a minor member of a joint Hindu family was liable on a bill drawn by the manager, his liability being limited to his share in the business, on the analogy of section 247 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). Mr. Justice Wallis (as he then was) in the course of the judgment quotes the well-known observations of Sausse, C. J., in

(1) 11 Ind. Cas. 79; 35 M. 692; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 385; 21 M. L. J. 620; 11 M. L. T. 56.

SUBBAROYA MUDALIYER v. THANGAVELU MUDALI.

Ramlal-Thakursidas v. Lakshminichand (2) "the power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade," and observes "This does not seem to mean more than that it is unnecessary to enquire whether there are minors or not." The principle of that decision is that, on a bill drawn by the managing member, a creditor could obtain a decree only against the trade assets of a minor member of a joint Hindu family. That case does not consider what the trade assets are. If credit is got on the strength of the family possessing immovable property it cannot be said that the assets of the trade are limited to the good will, stock-in-trade and outstandings. This is quite clear from a decision reported as Muthaya Pillai v. Tinnevely South Indian Bank (3), where a Bench of this Court held that the minor's liability was not confined to the trade assets alone. The learned Judges observe at page 342*, after referring to the cases reported as Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakshminichand (2), Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (4) and Chalamayya v. Varadaya (5): "Those decisions held in clear terms that in the case of an ancestral business all the members of the family including the minors are liable for debts incurred in the course of the business to the extent of their share in the family property and that seems to be only reasonable, because a business like the one in question is carried out on the credit of the entire family property. The family property is swelled by the profits earned in the business and it would be not only unjust to confine liability to the extent of the appellant's share in the assets of the business but it would be impossible in a case of this nature to say what is the extent of the property embarked on the business." The decision in Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (4) lays down "where a family carries on a business or profession and maintains itself by means of it, the member who manages it for the family has an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor is not bound to inquire into the purpose of the debt in order to bind the whole family thereby, because that power is necessary for the very existence of the family." Chandavarkar, J. says at page 81. "Where a minor is a co-parcener in a joint family, his share in the family property is liable for debts contracted by his managing co-parcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it. If the family is a trading firm, the same rule must apply with this difference: that the term family purpose or purposes incidental to it, must here give way to the expression trading purpose or purpose incidental to it, having regard to the nature and objects of the family business." It is, therefore, clear that where an accredited agent of the family, who carries on a business on behalf of the family, contracts debts for purposes of the trade the purpose for which he contracts the debt is a family purpose because the trade is a family concern and the creditors are entitled to go against the whole of the family property and a minor member is bound inasmuch as the debt is borrowed for a family purpose. It would be quite different if it could be established that the loan was not given for the purpose of the trade but for some other purpose which was not necessary for carrying on the trade. This principle is made quite clear by a later decision of the Madras High Court reported as Thammanina Chinna Lakshminarasimha v. Akarapu Venkanna Chinniah (6). There Sir Abdur Rahim, Officiating C. J. and Odgers, J., held that "in the case of trading families like the Kometti Chetties, if monies are borrowed for the purpose of an ancestral business carried on by the members of the joint family, all the members of the family including minors are liable for the re-payment of such sums, to the extent of their share in the whole family including the assets of the business." They follow the ruling in Muthaya Pillai v. Tinnevely South Indian Bank (3) and observe: "This view of the law is followed in the case just referred to in

SUBBAROYA MUDALIY V. THANGAVELU MUDALI.

Malathenmal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (7), where it is laid down that the ordinary presumption in the case of such business is that the entire family property is embarked in the business and forms part of the assets of the business. It is unnecessary to pursue this matter further as it is quite clear that a minor member is bound to pay out of his share of the family property the debts contracted for bona fide trading purposes when the trade is a family trade managed by the managing member or some one deputed by the managing member to do so.

Mr. Ramachandra Ayyar relied upon Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup. Singh (8) as supporting his contention that a minor is not bound to pay out of the family property the debts contracted by the managing member. That case was one of alienation and it was held in that case that the father could alienate joint family property for necessity or for an antecedent debt. That case has no application to the present, as the 2nd defendant was managing the family trade and contracted debts for the purpose of carrying it on. The trade carried on by the 2nd defendant has been shown to be one that was started in the lifetime of the grandfather and carried on by the plaintiff's uncle Singaravelu Mudaliar till his death, and afterwards continued by the 2nd defendant. The family is a trading family and there is nothing to show that the assets of the trade were confined to the stock-in-trade and outstandings. Evidently the family property was acquired out of the savings from the income of the trade and it cannot be said after a number of years that the immoveable property of the family became dissociated from the trade in such a way as to make the trade a separate entity altogether from the family property. There may be cases where the family trade is carried on without any reference to the family property, but in this case the income of the immoveable property belonging to the family was brought into the trade, was credited in the books kept for the purposes of the trade and the expenses of the family were met from the trade funds. It cannot be contended in this case that the family property was not embarked on the trade carried on by the family. It must, therefore, be held that the plaintiff's share in the family property is liable for such of the debts as were incurred for the purposes of the trade. If it could be shown that any particular debt was not incurred for the purpose of the trade but for some purpose of the 2nd defendant without any reference to the family or for an object which was not a family purpose then it might be contended with success that that debt could not bind the minor's share in the family property.

In the result, the preliminary decree of the lower Court will be modified by declaring that the alienations in favour of defendants Nos. 32, 33, 34, 35, 37 and 39 do not bind the plaintiff's share of the family property. The plaintiff is entitled to proportionate costs from defendants Nos. 32, 34, 35, 37 and 39.

The question of costs and the reliefs in respect of the debts will be decided after the connected appeals are heard.

Spencer, J.—I agree.

Appeal No. 387 coming on for hearing on the 18th September 1922, and this day and Appeal No. 386 of 1918 coming on again for hearing this day, the Court delivered the following.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal the only question argued was whether the plaintiffs was entitled to claim interest at the contract rate from the date of plaint to the date of decree. The Court has a discretion in the matter and the learned District Judge has allowed interest according to law. The case in Ramachandra v. Devu (9) is relied upon as showing that the Court has no discretion in the matter, but there is a later decision of the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Rajagopala Chetty v. Kandappa Chetty (10) to the effect that the Court has a discretion in the matter under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore,

RESPONDENTS Nos. 1 TO 4—

RESPONDENTS,

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXXVIII, r. 5—“Assets held by the Court”, meaning of—Rateable distribution—Attachment before judgment, effect of.

The expression “assets held by the Court” in section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code does not include all money lying in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor but only the assets levied in execution or paid into Court in satisfaction of the decree under execution and there is no receipt of assets within the meaning of the section until the Court holding the money comes to the conclusion that no objection exists and orders the money to be transferred to the credit of the first attaching creditor's suit, the decree in which it is engaged in executing. [p. 822, col. 1.]

Bisheshwar Das v. Ambika Pershad, 29 Ind. Cas. 622; 37 A. 578; 13 A. L. J. 732, dissented from.

Where on attachment before judgment in a suit certain moveables of the judgment-debtor were sold and the proceeds deposited to the credit of the suit and before any decree was passed, another creditor got a decree against the judgment-debtor in the same Court and in execution thereof applied in the first suit for payment of his decree amount but before any order was passed thereon, a third creditor got a decree against the same judgment-debtor and applied for payment and then the first creditor obtained a decree and applied for payment:

Held, that the money in Court had never been levied in execution or transferred to the credit of any other suit than that of the first attaching creditor and did not become “assets held by the Court” under section 73 until an order was made on application by him for execution of his decree; and that all the creditors who had applied were, accordingly, entitled to rateable distribution. [p. 822, col. 1.]

Per Schwabe, C. J.—Quære.—Whether property which has been attached before judgment can be said to belong to the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code, and whether it can be taken in execution, so long as the custody Court holds it pending the decision of the suit before it, so as to defeat the right of the attaching creditor as against a subsequent decree-holder. [p. 822, col. 2.]

Per Wallace, J.—An attachment confers no sort of lien or charge on the attached property and is not effective to create any sort of legal rights in the attaching creditor to have the property earmarked for the satisfaction of any decree he has obtained or may obtain, and it is in no sense to be regarded as the inception of execution on behalf of the attacher. Much less does it enure to create any such right for the benefit of other creditors seeking for decrees or for execution of decrees or for rateable distribution under section 73 of the Code. It can then be used only for one purpose, namely, to defeat and render void any private alienation made during its continuance. [p. 824, cols. 1 & 2.]

In the ordinary case of assets realised by Court sale under a decree, the assets are held when the whole of the sale-proceeds are paid into Court and it is only when the assets are actually realised that any question of the title of anyone to rateable distribution can arise. [p. 825, col. 2.]

But when the sale-proceeds are actually in Court prior to decree, they become assets only (1) when the debtor becomes a judgment-debtor, and (2) execution is taken out against him either by a judgment-creditor entitled by decree and by his position as the plaintiff in the suit to the credit of which the money lies to put in a valid execution petition; or by a judgment-creditor entitled by an order of Court transferring the fund to the credit of his suit to put in a valid execution application. It is only then at the earliest that they can become assets held and received in execution. But the actual point of time when they do become so is when the Court says “I, as attaching Court, take this property of the judgment-debtor lying in this Court as custody Court and make it property available for distribution in satisfaction of decrees against him.” [p. 825, col. 2.]

NACHIAPPA CHETTIAR V. SUBBIER.

Aiyar, in Letters Patent Appeal No. 53 of 1919, printed as 70 Ind. Cas. 20, preferred against the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, in Civil Revision Petition No. 1309 of 1917, preferred to the High Court against an order, dated the 31st August 1917, of the Court of the District Munsif, Periakulam, in I. A. No. 496 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 566 of 1917.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—Early in 1917 the first respondent Subbier brought a suit, Original Suit No. 566 of 1917, in the Court of the District Munsif of Periakulam against Kumaraswamy Mudali. In March 1917 he attached before judgment certain piece-goods, the property of the defendants. They were sold and the proceeds deposited to the credit of this suit on April 11th 1917. The present appellant, Nachiappa Chettiar, brought a suit in the same Court against the same defendant, Original Suit No. 678 of 1917, and on April 14th 1917, attached before judgment the money in deposit in Subbier's suit. He got a decree on April 19th, 1917, and on June 7th, 1917 he applied in Subbier's suit for payment out to him of the money in the Court. While this application was pending Subbier got a decree on July 2nd 1917 and on July 3rd applied for payment to him, or, as it is called, applied for cheque. The present second and third respondents, Rangasami Iyer and Sundara Rao, brought suits in the same Court against the same defendant, Original Suits Nos. 617 of 1917 and 785 of 1917, and obtained decrees and applied for payment out of them, one on June 29th, that is, before Subbier's application, and the other on July 20th, that is, after Subbier's application. Subbier first got an attachment before judgment and the money was deposited to the credit of his suit, but Nachiappa Chettiar and Rangasami Aiyar got decrees and applied for payment out of the money to them, one before Subbier got his decree, and applied for payment, one after Subbier got his decree and applied for payment.

The question for determination is which of these four plaintiffs is entitled to be paid. The question depends upon the interpretation of section 73, Civil Procedure Code, which is in the following terms: "Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of the decrees for the payment of the money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons." The District Munsif held that as none of the other three had applied before the receipt of the assets into the Court in Subbier's suit, they had no rateable distribution under section 73 and refused their application, and ordered that Subbier should draw the whole amount but stated that his order did not preclude the rival decree-holders from setting up their rights, which would have to be determined in a suit. The matter then came up on a civil revision petition before Bakewell, J., and he held, following Umma Venkataratnam & Co. v. Methewala Adamji Usman & Co. (1), that Nachiappa Chettiar being the first decree-holder to apply for payment was entitled to the money. On the Letters Patent Appeal from that order Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held, following Visvanadham Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti (2), that section 73 applied to the first three decree-holders and awarded rateable distribution among them. Coutts-Trotter, J., differed and proposed to follow Bakewell, J., and held that the petitioner Nachiappa Chettiar ought to be given preference. Owing to this difference of opinion the matter now comes before us under section 15 of the Letters Patent. In Umma Venkataratnam & Co. v. Methewala Adamji Usman & Co. (1) and in Bisheshar Das v. Ambika Pershad (3) it was decided in similar circumstances that the person entitled is the first decree-holder who applied to the Court in which the money is deposited on the same principle as applied in the case of an ordinary judgment-debtor's property in his own possession, namely, the first in order of time has the preference.

The whole matter was, however, reconsidered in Visvanadhan Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti (2) by a Full Bench of this Court and the proper interpretation of section 73 was laid down. The Court was unanimous. It was held that "assets held by a Court" did not include all money lying in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor, but only the assets levied in execution or paid into Court in satisfaction of the decree under execution, and that there is no receipt of assets within the meaning of section 73 until the Court holding the money comes to the conclusion that no objection exists, and orders the money to be transferred to the credit of the first attaching creditor's suit, the decree in which it is engaged in executing. This is the effect of the judgment of Wallace, C. J., with which Ayling, J., and Napier, J., agreed. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held that the words "before receipt of such assets" must be qualified by an implication of the words, "levied in the course of the execution and paid into Court in satisfaction of any of the decrees under execution, or transferred for purposes of execution to the credit of one or more of the decrees under execution." Krishnan, J., put it that only when the money is transferred to the credit of the suit in which the attachment takes place can the attaching Court be said to have received the assets and hold them within the meaning of section 73, and that the decree-holders who have attached prior to that are entitled to rateable distribution. In view of this decision, in my judgment, Umma Venkataratnam & Co. v. Methewala Adamji Usman & Co. (1) and Bisheshar Das v. Ambika Pershad (3) cannot be considered as good law. In this case the money in Court has never been levied in execution nor transferred to the credit of any other suit than Subbier's and did not become available as assets held by the Court under section 73 until an order was made on the application by Subbier for execution of his decree. Under O. XXXVIII, r. 11, he, having attached before judgment, was excused from applying for re-attachment in execution, and there being already other applications to the Court for attachment of this money in execution of decrees against the same judgment-debtor, the amount in Court should have been rateably distributed between these applicants. In this case the persons entitled to rateable distribution are Subbier, Nachiappa Chettiar and Rangaswami Aiyar. The fourth decree-holder, Surendra Rao, has not appealed, and it is not necessary to consider his claim and he must be excluded.

That is enough to determine this appeal, but speaking for myself I desire to say that I am not at present satisfied that the position of a person attaching the property before judgment as against a subsequent decree-holder against the same defendant does not require further consideration. It has apparently been accepted as concluded that because the property attached, or the proceeds thereof being in Court it is not the property of the attaching creditor it is available for any subsequent decree-holder against the same defendant. Under section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code any property can be attached which belongs to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. Under O. XXI, r. 52, Civil Procedure Code, where the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court a request must be made to that Court that the property may be held subject to the orders of the Executing Court, but the Court having custody shall determine all questions of priority and the claim of any person having an interest in such property by virtue inter alia of any attachment. There is no doubt that the money in one Court is available for the decree of another Court subject to the consent of the former and its decision as to priorities. In the case of money simply lying to the credit of the judgment-debtor no difficulty arises, as by this form of equitable execution it can be reached by a decree-holder but there is no doubt that the judgment-debtor has no power of disposing of property attached before judgment for his own benefit, and I very much doubt whether such properties can be said to belong to him within the meaning of section 60, Civil Procedure Code; or whether it can be taken in execution so long as the custody Court holds it pending the decision of the suit before it. If the prevalent view referred to above is correct, the result is that a plaintiff iff, who gets an order to attach before judgment because he satisfies the Court that there is a danger of the property being made away with, and that enough ought to be preserved pending his suit to satisfy any decree he may get, may find that the property he has preserved is taken away from him pending his suit by a decree-holder who is lucky enough to get a decree more quickly. Indeed, it would be easy for a defendant, who wishes to take his property out of the reach of the attaching creditor, after attachment to get, or even create, a friendly creditor for an amount large enough and allow him to take judgment and get the property attached in execution, while he delayed the suit of original attaching creditor. It seems to me that it is possible that the Court with custody of the property under attachment before judgment might properly refuse to allow to be attached in execution until after the decision of the suit in which it was originally attached. In Bisheshwar Das v. Ambika Pershad (3), Order XXXVIII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, was considered to be conclusive in favour of the decree-holder, but it is possible that the interpretation of that rule requires further consideration. I have referred to this matter here as the point was discussed before us. It may be that the solution is to be found in the exercise of discretion of the custody Court. It is, however, unnecessary to give a decision upon it in this case.

This appeal must be dismissed, and the case sent back to the District Munsif directing him to make rateable distribution between the present appellant and the present respondents Nos. 1 and 2. The parties will bear their respective costs throughout except this appeal. None of the respondents appeared in this appeal and there will be no order for their costs.

Krishnan, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in the order proposed by him. As pointed out in his judgment the present case is really governed by the recent Full Bench ruling Visvanadhan Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti (2). In that case the money attached was lying in Court to the credit of the judgment-debtor, the custody Court and the attaching Court being the same Court. In the present case the attachment before judgment was, no doubt, in the first instance of some piece-goods belonging to the judgment-debtor; but as the price was falling in the market and delay might cause loss, the goods had been sold by order of the Court under O. XXXIX, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, and the money obtained had been paid into Court in Subbier's suit in which that attachment had been made. The conversion of the piece-goods into money by sale was not, however, a "realization of assets" within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code, as the District Munsif held, for the sale was not in execution of any decree. The result of the sale proceedings was only to substitute the money paid into Court for the goods and subject it to the same attachment before judgment as was levied on the goods. We have thus here also a case of money in Court being attached by the same Court as in the Full Bench case. According to the ruling in the Full Bench case that money became assets held by the Court and available for payment out in execution only after the District Munsif passed the order for payment. Till then it remained in Court as money under attachment; the attachment before judgment having become in effect an attachment after decree (under O. XXXVIII, r. 11) when the decree was passed. Prior to the order of the Munsif the other decree-holders before us had obtained decrees and had applied for execution and had attached the money in question. The case seems therefore, to be clearly one to which section 73, Civil Procedure Code, applies.

It is, true that the appellant before us, Nachiappa Chetty, had obtained his decree before Subbier and the other creditors had obtained theirs and his attachment before judgment of the money had thus taken effect as an attachment in execution before that of any of the others. But in applying for execution by issue of a cheque to him, he applied to the Court in Subbier's suit, Original Suit No. 566 of 1917. So far as he was concerned, the Court acting in that suit was the custody Court, the attaching Court being the Court acting in his own Suit No. 678 of 1917. The custody Court could not pay out the money to him without an order of the attaching Court to that effect as it has to hold the money subject to the orders of the attaching Court under r. 52,

NACHIAPPA CHETTIAR v. SUBBIER.

Civil Procedure Code. If he wanted payment out he should have applied in his own suit and obtained an order from the Court as attaching Court for payment in execution before asking the custody Court to pay or he should have applied in his own suit for transferring the amount to the credit of his suit and then get that Court to pay the money to him. His application to the custody Court for payment was not a proper application and was rightly disregarded by the District Munsil. In these circumstances, it is not necessary to decide the question whether if he had made a proper application according to law to have his decree amount paid out, the fact that Subbier had a prior attachment before judgment on that money would have in any way justified his application being refused. I do not propose, therefore, to discuss the question raised by the learned Chief Justice in the latter part of his judgment regarding the effect of an attachment before judgment. I desire to reserve my opinion on it for the present. In my view Nachiappa Chetty got no right for the payment of the whole of his decree amount as claimed before us and, as was held by Bakewell, J., nor did Subbier get such right as held by the Munsif. An order for rateable distribution is, in my view, the proper order to make in the case. The fourth decree-holder, Sundara Rao, not having applied in revision is not entitled to the benefit of our order, he must be excluded.

Wallace, J.—I agree.

Appellant urges strongly that the attachment before the judgment by Subbier in March 1917 of the funds of the common debtor in the custody of the Court cannot confer on Subbier any sort of lien or charge on these funds; and could not be used to defeat the right of himself as first applicant for execution to have his decree satisfied in full, when he applied for cheque on 7th June 1917, at a time when no other creditor had obtained his decree or was entitled to apply in execution. It is well-recognised law that an attachment confers no sort of lien or charge on the attached property and is not effective to create any sort of legal right in the attaching creditor to have the property marked for the satisfaction of any decree he has obtained or may obtain and it is in no sense to be regarded as the inception of execution on behalf of the attacher. Much less does it enure to create any such right for the benefit of other creditors seeking for decrees or for execution of decrees or for rateable distribution under section 73. And it then can be used for one purpose only, viz., to defeat and render void any private alienation made during its continuance, see Annamalai Chettiar v. Palamalai Pillai (4) and Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (5). There is in the present case no such private alienation in question and hence, for the purposes of this case, the attachment before judgment by Subbier created or maintained for him no legal right to the fund in the custody of the Court.

So that, on 6th July 1917, when appellant applied for his cheque, he was in a strong position, with no legal bar to his having his decree satisfied out of this fund, provided his execution application was in order and the Court chose to grant it. But his application was not in order. It was an application in his own suit, the only suit in which he had then any locus standi, to operate on a fund in another suit. That he could not do until he had the fund transferred to the credit of his own suit. His application did not include any request to the Court to transfer to the credit of his suit, the amount at credit of Subbier's suit. Possibly, the omission was intentional, as such a request would have at once raised in the custody Court the question of the priority of the first attaching creditor Subbier. In any case, the appellant's application was thus not in form, and the Court, either for this reason or some other, did not choose to act on it then. Had it then ordered payment, one might infer that it had, as custody Court, settled the question of priority, and had itself, as attaching Court, transferred the money at credit of Subbier's suit to the credit of the appellant's suit. But it refrained, and the money re-maintained where it was, held as before, money in the Court as custody Court held subject to the disposal of the Court as attaching Court, in suspense, as it were, until the attaching Court had before it a proper execution application, i. e., an execution application in the suit in which the first attachment took place, or an execution application in another suit praying for transfer to that suit of the money from the suit in which it was. When that occurred, it was then for the attaching and Executing Court to decide to work out the attachment and call up the attached money for satisfying the various applicants. There was no such application until Subbier put in his application on 2nd July 1917 for cheque. In my opinion the Court ought to have then proceeded to execute Subbier's decree with due regard to the claims of persons entitled under section 73 to rateable distribution. There was no reason then for delaying matters further. However, the Court still refrained from moving, and, so far as one can see, the fund remained in the custody Court in the same state as it had been from the beginning, until on 31st August 1917 the Court decided to distribute and determined that the whole of it should go to Subbier. Only then can it be said that the attaching Court called up the fund in the custody Court for use in execution of pending unsatisfied decrees, and only then can it be said that the assets were received within the meaning of section 73.

The same conclusion follows also from a strict examination of the terms "assets held" and "receipt of the assets" in section 73. In the ordinary case of assets realised by Court sale under a decree, the assets are held when the whole of the sale-proceeds in execution are paid into Court, and it is only when the assets are actually realised that any question of the title of anyone to rateable distribution will arise, see Krishnaswamy Mudaliar v. Official Assignee of Madras (6). But when the sale-proceeds are already in Court prior to the decree it must be that they cannot become assets before (1) the debtor becomes a judgment-debtor, and (2) execution is taken out against them either by a judgment-creditor entitled by decree and by his position as the plaintiff in the suit to the credit of which the money lies, to put in a valid execution application; or by a judgment-creditor entitled by an order of Court transferring the fund to the credit of his suit, to put in a valid execution application. It is only then at the earliest that they can become assets held and received in execution, but it does not follow that it is then they do become so. The point of time of conversion is the point of time at which the Court says, "I, as attaching Court, take this property of the judgment-debtor lying in this Court as custody Court and make it property available for distribution in satisfaction of the decrees against him."

In the present case there is nothing to show that the Court made this conversion earlier than the date, 31st August 1917, on which it directed rateable distribution. It might have done it, as I have indicated, on 7th June 1917, when appellant applied for cheque, or on 29th June 1917, when the decree-holder in Suit No. 617 of 1917 applied for cheque, or most reasonably of all, on 3rd July 1917 when Subbier applied for cheque or on 29th July 1917 when the decree-holder in Suit No. 785 of 1917 applied. The fact that on none of these dates did it make any pay order shows that on none of these dates did it decide to effect the necessary conversion. I am not satisfied that the Court exercised its discretion judicially in withholding that conversion beyond 31st July 1917 which has had the effect of bringing in a fourth claimant for rateable distribution, who seems, so far as we have heard, to have had no particular claims to such indulgence. But that matter is now not before us. I do not think that the Court had no power to delay the conversion, or that this Court has power to alter the date of receipt of assets.

In the case like the present then section 73 leaves a wide discretion to the Court, which is both custody Court and attaching Court, to fix the date of "receipt of assets" within the meaning of section 73, and I am clear that we are not justified in holding that the Court exercises its discretion unjudicially when it fixes that date so as to enable the creditor who has been the first to attach the property and thus hold it, it may be, for all creditors as well as for himself, to obtain his decree, provided that creditor shows all due diligence in obtaining it and that the delay is due to the complexity of the suit or the dilatoriness of the Trying Court or some other cause over which he has no control, and it would certainly exercise its discretion wisely in so delaying the conversion, if the alternative was to permit a later attaching creditor who obtained his decree earlier merely because his suit was simpler, or because the common debtor did not choose to contest the claim, from going off with the whole fund which had been secured by the diligence and foresight of another creditor. It might, no doubt, be contended that, if the debtor's property had not been attached, he might have satisfied the less diligent creditor out of Court, and that such preference is not illegal, but I do not see why, when a Court has custody of the debtor's property, it should be bound to imitate the debtor's personal preferences, while it would in all cases be a matter of idle speculation whether the first holder of a valid application for execution was the one whom the common debtor, if left to himself, would have preferred to pay. On the other hand, it may well be argued that the object of O. XXXVIII, r. 5 was to put it out of the power of the common debtor to give such preferential treatment and thus to prepare in advance for some equitable rateable distribution. Such delay in conversion will, no doubt, at times have the result that other belated and perhaps indifferent and inactive creditors may also be unable to come in under section 73, when the assets are received, but even so, as a rule, I think it preferable that that should happen rather than that the most diligent creditor should be wholly deprived of a share in the assets which were secured by his forethought and promptitude.

This, I think, is the logical result of the principles laid down in Visvanadhan Chetti v. Arunachalam Chetti (2) as applied to a case like the present, and it will deviate from those laid down in Ummia Venkataratnam & Co. v. Metheemala Adamji Usman & Co. (1) in allowing the Court to exercise its discretion in favour of a diligent creditor who has attached before judgment the property of his debtor in the custody of the Court. The insistence in the latter case on the reward of diligence may be carried so much further forward. The Court will then exercise its discretion in favour of all diligent creditors, diligence being tested either (1) by promptitude in obtaining attachment before judgment, followed up by diligence in prosecuting the suit and, when the decree is obtained, in applying for execution, or (2) by promptitude in obtaining a decree and applying for execution.

I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

DORAISAMI NAICKER AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS.

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922), ss. 2 (3), 9—Tenant, whether entitled to enforce compulsory sale of trust property.

A tenant in occupation of trust land belonging to a temple or mosque is not entitled to enforce a compulsory sale of the land under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act and require the trustee to deliver the land to him on a valuation to be made by the Court. [p. 829, col. 1.]

The term "landlord" as defined by clause (3) of section 2 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act is comprehensive enough to include the trustee of a charitable endowment, but trust property is not "land" within the meaning of s. 9 of the Act which can be conveyed "under any power." [p. 830, col. 1.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—"Land" in section 9 of the Act does not mean the full interest which a trustee can convey under the power possessed by him to convey trust property when necessity exists or when the alienation is for the benefit of the estate. [p. 831, cols. 1 & 2.]

Case referred under section 113 and O. XLVI, r. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the City Civil Judge, Madras in Letter No. D. 405, dated the 20th June 1922, in PARTHASARATHI AITYANGAR v. DORAISAMI NAICKER.

Original Suits Nos. 75 and 76 of 1921 on his file for the opinion of the Hon'ble the Judges of the High Court on the following question :—

"Can a tenant in occupation or trust land belonging to a temple or mosque enforce a compulsory sale of the land under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act and require the temple or mosque to deliver the land to him on a valuation to be made by the Court."

Mr. N. Srinivasachariar, for the Plaintiffs :—Section 2 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act defines a "landlord" and the trustee of a religious endowment, whatever may be his powers of disposition, is a landlord within the meaning of that section. Landlord includes a person who is entitled to collect the rent on behalf of the trust whose representative he is.

Section 9 enables the tenant to apply to the Court for an order for compulsory sale of land in a suit on ejectment. Land itself is defined in the explanation to the section. It means the interests of the landlord and all other interests, "he can convey under any power." A trustee of an endowment has no power to convey ordinarily speaking. The restricted power of disposition under certain circumstances is irrelevant. That a trustee as a limited owner has ordinarily no power of disposition over debutter property is now well-settled law. Hunoomanpersad Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munsraj Koonweezee (1), Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (2), Palaniappa hetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (3), Magniram Sitaram v. Kasturbhai Manibhai (4).

Section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act throws considerable light on the meaning of the expression "interest he can convey under power." That section provides for directions as to investment of the amount awarded in cases of acquisition of trust property and a trustee is dealt with as a person "who has no power to alienate."

The decision in Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath Mookerjee (5) is conclusively in my favour. I rely on the observations of Justice Mukerjee that the trustees come under category of persons who have no power to alienate land. See also Ramprasanna Nandi Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (6). The word 'power' occurs both in section 9 of the Madras Act and section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act and must receive the same construction.

The absence of a provision in the Madras Act similar to that in section 32 of Land Acquisition Act also indicates that trust property was not intended to be brought within the scope of the Act, and a construction which would facilitate the committing of a breach of trust must be avoided.

Further, section 31 of the Land Acquisition Act refers to persons who have a limited interest in land and also provides for cases where there is no person competent to alienate the land. Such provision is not found in the present Act.

Mr. Aiyasami Sastriar, for the Defendant-tenant :—The question is, whether a trustee is a landlord who has an interest "to convey under any power." A trustee like every other limited owner has a disposable interest.

It is clear law that an alienation by a limited owner is not void but voidable, good and valid until it is set aside in the appropriate manner. In Kadiri Masthan Rowther v. Segammall (7) it was held an alienation by a trustee is a not void ab initio. The law gives power to a trustee to alienate. It is immaterial it is not an unrestricted power.

The analogy with the Land Acquisition Act is not sound. The power of directing investment of trust funds is an inherent power and there is nothing in law to prevent a Court, in allowing a compulsory sale, to direct the investment of the sale-proceeds in some approved security.

PARTHASARATHI AYYANGAR v. DORA SAMI NAICKER.

The phrase "which he could convey under a power" is only descriptive of the powers of the landlord and has reference to the quantum of interest passing. The object of the Act was to benefit tenants and it was most unlikely that all landlords with limited powers of disposition were intended to be excluded. The construction suggested by the other side would only involve great hardship and would exclude the very common cases of a manager of a Hindu family, a widow, a guardian, and in fact every limited owner. Unless compelled by the language of the Act, a construction which would fail to carry out the manifest purpose of the Act ought to be avoided. Construed in the ordinary sense, a trustee is a landlord who has a power of disposition. Neither the restriction in the exercise of the powers of disposition nor the absence of the circumstances in particular cases would necessarily connote the non-existence of such power itself.

Under the Estates Land Act it is settled that permanent rights of occupancy can be acquired against trustee landlord as well.

In the absence of specific words excluding trusts from the scope of the Act, the beneficent operation of the section should not be unduly narrowed.

The decisions in the Insolvency Act also show that the son's undivided interest passes, on the father's insolvency, to the Official Assignee, the father having a "disposing power" over the son's share of the properties.

The obvious and plain meaning of the section, when read in the light of the obvious purpose of the Act, avoids a construction which would defeat the object of the Legislature in a considerable body of cases. The plain meaning does not involve any hardship. It is always within the inherent powers of the Court to direct an investment. The absence of a provision for it is far from conclusive. The Madras Act only settles a doubtful legal position in favour of the tenant and purports to confer certain special benefits on tenants, of which the Courts should not lightly deprive them.

Mr. Srinivasachariar replied.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The question referred to us is, whether a tenant in occupation of trust lands belonging to a temple or mosque can enforce a compulsory sale under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act and require the temple or mosque to deliver the land to him on a valuation to be made by the Court.

There is no difficulty, to my mind, in including the trustees of temples, mosques and other religious endowments within the definition of "landlord" in section 2 of Madras Act III of 1922, as they certainly are persons entitled to collect the rent of the land on behalf of another person. A greater difficulty arises when we come to consider section 9. This section provides for the compulsory sale by a landlord of land in the possession of a tenant in the City of Madras from which the tenant is sought to be ejected in a suit instituted under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. The explanation to this section defines "land" as "the interest of the landlord in the land and all other interests which he can convey under any power." If they signify easements and other subsidiary interests, it would have been easy for the Act to so describe them. If the title to the land is intended to be included, has a trustee power "to convey it?" In Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (3), the Judicial Committee, quoting the words of Lord Justice Knight Bruce in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooze Munraj Koonweree (1), observe, "the power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is under the Hindu Law a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need or for the benefit of the estate." And at page 716*, quoting Sir Montague E. Smith's words, they say: "There is no doubt that, as a general rule of Hindu Law, property given for the maintenance of religious worship and of charities connected with it, is inalienable." They then proceed to consider what kind of benefit will justify an absolute alienation of temple property. Among benefits to an estate they include the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it from injury or deterioration. These and such like things they say would obviously be benefits. In Magniram Silaram v. Kasturbhai Manibhai (4), there is an observation: "The disability of a shebait to make a permanent grant is not absolute." A trustee then, like the guardian of an infant, has power to convey portions of the corpus of trust property under circumstances of necessity or where the conveyance will be for the benefit of the estate. As the Act which we are considering creates a statutory necessity for landlords to sell portions of their land where the conditions fulfil the terms of the Act, it may be argued that even trustees landlords are under the necessity of selling land to their tenants as provided in section 9. A similar statutory necessity arises when land is acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act. Section 31 of that Act speaks of persons "having a limited interest" in land and provides for cases where there is "no person competent to alienate the land." Section 32 also speaks of certain persons as having "now power to alienate" lands acquired under the Act. In Kamini Debi v. Promotho Nath Mookerjee (5). Mookerjee, J., observes, that the trustees will come under the category of persons who have "no power to alienate" land dedicated to an idol or to religious and charitable purposes. In this Presidency also it is the practice to apply these sections whenever land belonging to temples and mosques is acquired for a public purpose. But section 32 provides a safeguard for the preservation of the money awarded as compensation by directing that it shall be invested in the purchase of other lands and meanwhile deposited or invested in some approved securities. Madras Act III of 1922 does not contain any such safeguard. The presumption, therefore, is that the Legislature did not intend to so endanger the preservation of trust properties as to include them under the definition of "land" which can be conveyed "under any power." I am, therefore, of opinion that the question referred to us should be answered in the negative.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I entirely agree.

The question to be determined in this Reference is whether a tenant can compel a trustee of a temple under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act Madras Act III of 1922, to sell him the land on which the tenant has constructed a building. The point has been referred for the opinion of the High Court by the Judge of the City

Civil Court, Madras, who states that more than a hundred ejectment suits are now pending disposal in respect of land belonging to a temple or mosque or other charitable or religious trust and that he entertained considerable doubt regarding the interpretation of the word "land" in section 9 of the said Act.

The object of the Act is stated to be to give protection to tenants who, in many parts of the City of Madras, have constructed buildings on others' lands in the hope that they will not be evicted so long as they pay a fair rent for the land.

Section 3 provides that every tenant shall on ejectment be entitled to be paid as compensation the value of any building erected upon the land.

Section 4 enacts that, in a suit for ejectment in which the landlord succeeds, the Court shall ascertain the amount of compensation payable under section 3, and direct that, on payment by the landlord of the amount so found due, the tenant shall put the landlord into possession of the land with the building thereon.

It will be seen that the effect of sections 3 and 4 is that the landlord becomes on payment of a price the owner of the tenant's building.

Section 9 provides for cases where tenants are not anxious to obtain compensation for the buildings, but, on the contrary are desirous of obtaining the land on which the buildings stand. It enacts that any tenant, who is entitled to compensation under section 3 and against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted, may apply to the Court for an order that the landlord shall be directed to sell the land for a price to be fixed by the Court. The Court shall then fix the price and shall order that the tenant shall pay into Court the price so fixed. On payment of the price, the Court shall pass a final order directing the conveyance of the land by the landlord to the tenant. Under section 9, therefore, the tenant, instead of parting with his building, becomes the owner of the land on which the building has been constructed.

The term "landlord" is defined by clause (3) of section 2. "Landlord" means any person owning any land, and includes every person entitled to collect the rent whether on his own account or on behalf of another person or by virtue of any transfer from the owner or of any order of a competent Court or of any provision of law.

The definition is comprehensive enough to include trustee of a charitable endowment. I may state that a farmer of rents, a usufructuary mortgagee, a Receiver appointed by Court, a committee of a lunatic or a guardian of a minor would undoubtedly come within the definition. The difficulty is created by the Explanation to section 9. It runs thus: "Land means the interests of the landlord in the land and all other interests which he can convey under any power." A person absolutely owning the land can convey it, but what is the interest that can be conveyed in the case of a person who is entitled to an interest short of absolute ownership? If a lease is granted by a usufructuary mortgagee or by lessee for a term of years, if either of them files a suit against a tenant who has erected a building it cannot possibly be contended that by a conveyance under section 9 a higher right can pass to the tenant than is possessed by the mortgagee or the lessee, the plaintiff in the suit. But there is a class of landlords who occupy a position very different from that occupied either by absolute owners or persons with admittedly a very limited right in the property such as lessees for a term of years or usufructuary mortgagees. To take only a few cases, managers of joint undivided Hindu families, Hindu widows, trustees of temples or other religious endowments, and guardians of minors would fall in this category. There are no words in the Act which indicate the intention of the Legislature in regard to these various classes of landlords. It is indeed strange that an Act, whose assumed object is to afford protection to tenants, should be silent in matters so vital as this. On behalf of the tenants it has been argued before us that we must presume that the Legislature intended to protect tenants irrespective of considerations that have reference to the extent of interest possessed by the landlords in the land leased. I do not think we would be justified in presuming anything of the kind. We must gather the intention of the Act, if possible, from the words used.

What is the meaning of the words "under any power" used in section 9? The word "power" occurs both in Indian Acts and decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and of various Courts in India. Confining my observations to the case of trustees, I may first refer to Prosunno Kumari Dehya v. Golab Chand Baboo (2), where Sir Montague E. Smith in delivering the judgment of their Lordships observes: "But notwithstanding that property devoted to religious purposes is, as a rule, inalienable, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, competent for the shebait of property dedicated to the worship of an idol... to incur debts and borrow money for the proper expenses of keeping up the religious worship, repairing the temples or other possessions of the idol, defending hostile religious attacks, and other like objects. The power, however, to incur such debts must be measured by the existing necessity for incurring them. The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of the manager for an infant heir."

Regarding the power of the manager for an infant heir, the observations of Lord Justice Knight Bruce in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammatt Babooee Munraj Koonwerree (1) are quoted: "The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate."

In Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Devisakamony Pandara Sannadhi (3), the power of a trustee to grant a permanent lease or temple lands was considered. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that, unless a trustee is constrained thereto by unavoidable necessity or any benefits accrued to the charity, he cannot grant a lease in perpetuity of debutler lands at a fixed rate. They observe that it is impossible to give a precise definition of "benefit to the estate," but they indicate that the preservation of the estate from extinction, the defence against hostile litigation affecting it, the protection of it or portions from injury or deterioration by inundation would be benefits.

Referring to Hunoomanpersaud's case (1) their Lordships observe, "in that particular case in reference to which this language was used, the 'necessity' for the loan would appear to have been plain and imperative, the benefit to the estate, the preservations of its existence; obvious."

This and similar passages in the judgment will make it clear that the word "benefit" is used in this context in a special sense.

In the course of the judgment their Lordships further observe that it is a breach of duty on the part of a shebait in the absence of necessity or benefit to grant a lease in perpetuity at a fixed rent.

An argument was advanced before the Judicial Committee that the charity will be benefited by a transaction which put at the shebait's disposal a sum of money capable of being profitably used. Their Lordships say that no authority has been cited giving any countenance to the notion that a shebait is entitled to sell debutter lands solely for the purpose of investing the price so as to bring in an income larger than that derived from the probably safer and certainly more stable property, the land itself.

These principles have not in the slightest degree been departed from in Bawa Magnum Sita Ram v. Kasturibhai Manibhai (4), where it was held that the disability of a shebait to make a permanent grant is not absolute and that, although the manager for the time being has no power to make a permanent alienation in the absence of proved necessity, yet the existence of justification may be presumed from the long lapse of time between the alienation and the challenge of its validity. In that particular case there was an interval of a hundred years between the date of sale and the date of the challenge of its validity.

It is not necessary to refer to further decisions on this subject and it may be taken to be settled law that the power of a trustee of temple property is limited and that an alienation by him in the absence of necessity or benefit will not be upheld.

This being the state of the law, what do the words "under any power" in section 9 connote? Can it be said that the trustee can convey the interest which he can convey only, when necessity exists or when the alienation is for the benefit of the estate?

In other words, if the construction urged on behalf of the tenants is adopted, the explanation to section 9 will be equivalent to this: "Land" means the full interest which a trustee can convey under the power possessed by him to convey trust property when necessity exists or the alienation is for the benefit of the estate.

I do not think that this construction can be adopted. It has been argued that there is a statutory liability imposed by virtue of the Act itself, upon trustees to convey the land and that this constitutes sufficient necessity to justify an alienation. The argument begs the question because the point to be decided by us is—Does the Act impose such a statutory liability?

The decisions bearing upon the interpretation of the word "power" used in the various Acts, such as the Civil Procedure Code and the Insolvency Act, gives us very little assistance in understanding the expression "under any power" in section 9. I may refer to Fakir Chand Motichand v. Motichand Hurruckchand (8), which deals with the power vested in the Official Assignee to dispose of the insolvent's son's interest in ancestral property for the payment of his debts and two other similar cases, Rangayya Chetti v. Thamkachalla Muddali (9) and Nunna Brahmayya Setti v. Chidaraboyina (10). I may also refer to Jagabhai Lalubhai v. Vijbhukandas Jagjivandas (11), which refers to the expression in section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) "has disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit."

The provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894, seems to me to furnish a guide in regard to the determination of the question at issue. In that Act are to be found three expressions (1) persons interested in the land, (2) persons entitled to act, and (3) persons competent to alienate the land or having power to alienate the same. Section 3 (g) mentions trustees among persons entitled to act. The clause runs thus, "the following persons shall be deemed persons entitled to act as and to the extent hereinafter provided, that is to say, trustees for other persons beneficially interested shall be deemed the persons entitled to act with reference to any such case, and that to the same extent as the persons beneficially interested could have acted if free from disability." If there are no persons competent to alienate the land, the Act prescribes that the compensation shall be deposited in Court and the Court shall order the money to be invested in the purchase of other lands. In Kamini Debi v. Promotha Nath Mookerjee (5) and Ramprasanna Nandi Chowdhuri v. Secretary of State for India (6), it was held that a shebait is a person incompetent to alienate for the purposes of sections 31 and 32 of the Land Acquisition Act, I of 1894.

Section 10 contemplates various interests possessed by co-proprietors, sub-proprietors, mortgagees and tenants.

Sections 29 and 30 deal with the apportionment of the compensation. In great detail provision is made in the Land Acquisition Act to safeguard the interests possessed by various persons in the land acquired. No such provisions are to be found in the Act under consideration. Are we to assume that the Legislature intended that the trustees should be compelled to sell the land and that he should in lieu of it receive money which should be hence forward at his absolute disposal? If the lands in possession of trustees were intended to be included certainly we should expect to find some provisions in the Act dealing with the investment of the funds. To adopt the construction suggested on behalf of the tenants would be in effect to hold that the Legislature intended the conversion of trust lands into money without providing for the protection of the money so obtained.

We cannot assume that breaches of trust were intended to be facilitated by the Act.

These observations may apply to the cases of all limited owners but we have nothing to do with the consequences that may follow from our interpretation of the sections of the Act. If the Legislature dees it necessary or desirable to extend further protection to tenants, the Act may be amended but we have nothing to do with it.

It is said that this interpretation will cause hardship to the tenants. Under section 9 the tenant may apply for an order directing the landlord to sell the land. There is nothing in the section to compel the tenant to do so. On his applying for a direction, the Court is required to pass an order directing the conveyance of such interest as the landlord can pass. If the landlord cannot pass any interest, the tenant cannot acquire it.

The contrast between section 9 of the Act and section 16 of the Land Acquisition Act is very marked. Under the latter when the Collector has made an award the land "vests absolutely in the Government free from all incumbrances." The absence of these words in section 9 indicates conclusively that the sale to the tenant does not vest in him the land absolutely.

For these reasons, I would answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Memorandum of costs will follow.

Mr. Girja Saran Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The view of the law taken in the first Appellate Court appears to be correct. No mention is made of the mortgage at this stage because the mortgagee has not appealed. One Musammal Radha, who had a life-interest in the property in suit, died and admittedly the plaintiff Binda was the next reversioner to the property and entitled to succeed to the entire property. His nephews, the defendants, however, with his consent obtained mutation of names about a month after Musammal Radha's death. This was in 1916. Consequently, the plaintiff who appears to have got into the hands of some money-lenders asserted his claim to the entire property by this suit.

The Court of first instance, the Munsif of Shafipur, held that the plaintiff was bound by his statement in the mutation proceedings and entitled to only one-sixth of the property in suit. The learned Subordinate Judge as an Appellate Court held that the plaintiff Binda's statement did not act as an estoppel and decreed the entire property to him. From that decree in favour of Binda the defendants have appealed to this Court.

Admittedly, the plaintiff is the owner of the property in suit and has not lost his title by adverse possession of the defendants. The only estoppel of his title is said to be his statement (Exhibit B-2) made by him on 4th May 1916 in the Court of Assistant Collector. What he stated there was that he and his nephews were heirs of Musammal Radha meaning really that they were next reversioners of the property. He desired that mutation of one-sixth of the property may be made in his favour and of the rest in the names of the defendants. It was argued in this Court that this statement amounted to an admission of a claim. But as there was no claim I do not think that there can be any admission of one. The facts of this case are similar to the facts of the Privy Council case, Chokhey Singh v. Jote Singh (1). In that case also what was urged by way of estoppel was a statement in the Court of an Assistant Collector during the mutation proceedings to the effect that the plaintiff and two others were in possession of the property in equal shares and that mutation of names may be made accordingly. It was held that such a statement did not prevent the plaintiff from asserting his right to the entire property in a Civil Court subsequently. Knowing this difficulty of the defence the defendants attempted in the first Court to make out that there was some dispute between the parties and that they arrived at a family settlement or family arrangement by which the plaintiff accepted one-sixth of the property in order to avoid family litigation. This case completely broke down in the First Court and it is certain that the plaintiff's statement was not the result of any family settlement, arrangement or compromise.

DEFENDANT NO. 1—APPELLANT

Malabar Law—Tarwad—Maintenance of junior members—Principles applicable—Decree against karnavan, form of.

The junior members of a Malabar tarwad are entitled to receive maintenance out of the tarwad house, when there is no room for them in that house, and if the karnavan makes an insufficient allowance, they are entitled to apply to the Court to determine what allowance is sufficient having regard to the circumstances of the family. [p. 834, col. 2.]

The general principle governing such cases is that, prima facie, the junior members living out of the tarwad house should be treated equally, but the circumstances of each particular member can be taken into consideration and it is for the karnavan to judge how much each particular member should get. He may take into account, circumstances like the health of a particular child, or the education of a particularly intelligent child or a child with small intelligence, or the earning capacity of the junior member or apparently even a rich marriage connection by him. Property given to a karnavan while he was junior member before he became karnavan can also be taken into account. [p. 734, col. 2; 735, col. 1.]

To some extent, this discretion of the karnavan can be controlled by the Court and if a junior member is aggrieved, he can apply to the Court for fixing his rate of maintenance. On such application very great weight should be given to the decision of the karnavan and it should not be lightly interfered with. What is a reasonable amount of maintenance is a question of fact. Ordinarily, a decree in favour of a junior member for maintenance against the karnavan should not, in the absence of special circumstances, be a personal one; but must direct him to pay maintenance out of the income and corpus of the tarwad properties. [p. 836, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry in A. S. No. 19 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kuttuparamba, in O. S. No. 285 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case the District Munsif and the lower Appellate Court have awarded to the plaintiffs maintenance, the lower Appellate Court at rather a higher rate than the District Munsif. The plaintiffs are the junior members of a tarwad. The 1st defendant is the karnavan of the tarwad. The 2nd defendant is the next to him for that position. The decree has been made for arrears of maintenance at the rate which has been found by the Subordinate Judge to be the proper rate, personally against the karnavan in the following terms: "that the 1st defendant personally and as karnavan of his tarwad do pay" * * * * This form of decree does not seem to me to be right. I see no reason for a personal decree against the karnavan which would involve the right of the minor members of this tarwad to arrest him if he did not pay forthwith, although it may be, he may have none of the property in his hands available for immediate payment. We have had several decrees, which have come before this Court looked up and I have found none in which this form of decree has been used. In No. 1036 of 1918 [Govindan Nair v. Kunja Nayyar (1)], on second appeal from the South Malabar District; the form of decree approved by this Court was: "that this Court doth order and decree that the 1st defendant, as karnavan and manager of his tarwad and from the income of the tarwad properties and also from the properties of the tarwad do pay the plaintiff Rs. 216 for his maintenance due for the past three years." In No. 48 of 1916 [Kozhipurath Kunnikrishna Menon Karnavan v. Kozhipurath Kunhikavamma (2)], on appeal from the same District, the decree approved by this Court was: "that the plaintiffs do recover from their and the defendant's tarwad Rs. 1136 being the amount of maintenance due for the plaint period, that is, 6 years." On the whole, I think, the former of those two forms, namely, that approved in Govindan Nair v. Kunja Nayar (1) is the better form, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court in this case must be amended by being made to conform with that form.

It is then argued that the amount of maintenance allowed in this case is wrong, because the lower Appellate Court has not applied the right principle in arriving at the proper figure and has allowed too much, and it is argued on the other side that too little has been allowed. Now, the law seems to be this, as stated by Turner, C. J., and Kindersley, J., in an apparently unreported case of the Madras High Court the judgment in which is set out clearly in Moore's Malabar Law and Custom at page 132: "The members of the tarwad are entitled to receive maintenance out of the tarwad house, when there is no room for them in that house, and if the karnavan makes an insufficient allowance, the Anandravans are entitled to apply to the Court to determine what allowance is sufficient, having regard to the circumstances of the family." The circumstances which may be taken into consideration on such discussion before the Court are dealt with in the case Ekanat Thayu Kunji Ama v. Ekanat Shungunni Valia Kymal (3). The general principle is this: Prima facie the junior members living out of the tarwad house should be treated equally, but the circumstances of each particular one can be taken into consideration and it is for the karnavan to judge how much each particular one should get. He may take into consideration, no doubt, things like the health of a particular child, or the education of a particularly intelligent child or a child with small intelligence, he can take into account the earning capacity of the junior member; apparently it has been laid down that he can also take into account the fact that a particular person has himself made a rich marriage; and there are many other things which the karnavan, in exercising his discretion as, so to speak, the father of this family, can take into consideration. To some extent all these are things which can be controlled by the Court; if a junior member is aggrieved, he can come to the Court and apply for maintenance and ask the Court to say what allowance is sufficient. I think it is enough to say that, on any such application to the Court, very great weight indeed should be given to the decision of the karnavan and his decision in such a matter would not be lightly interfered with. In this case it is proved that certain members of the tarwad and, in particular, the 2nd defendant have had provisions made for them by way of maintenance not by the present karnavan but by his predecessors, he having been karnavan only for a short period; and both the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have, to a great extent, in arriving at what they considered to be a proper maintenance for these plaintiffs, eliminated the individual arrangements which had been made by those previous karnavans in regard to the 2nd defendant and other members of the tarwad. But they have both, in arriving at what they think the right amount, taken the generality of those members so provided for and said that that on an average works out so much and I think quite properly the Subordinate Judge took that into consideration as a guide provided by past karnavans as to what was the sort of maintenance this tarwad was capable of paying to its minor members. I do not find that he did anything more than look at it as a guide. It is also true that, in making that calculation for the purpose, he eliminated from consideration the amount which was going to the 2nd defendant. He does not seem to have had before him anything about the 2nd defendant to show why he got a considerably larger amount than other members. I do not see any reason for saying that the figure arrived at is wrong, and certainly I find no reason for saying that it is wrong in law, what was the reasonable maintenance is a question of fact and on the facts before the Courts the figure was arrived at. I cannot find any reason to say that there was any error in law in arriving at that figure. I think it right to say something further. In this case a discussion took place in both the Courts below as to whether some property which the karnavan had got for his own maintenance before he became karnavan was to be taken into consideration, or whether the amount that he was getting and wanted as karnavan should be taken into consideration. In my judgment, he is, in respect of property which he is using for his own maintenance, in the same position as other members of this tarwad who have got similar property made available for their maintenance. In arriving at the amount of maintenance that should be paid, the income is, of course, to be considered and as against the income, the proper expenditure to be met by the karnavan for managing this tarwad is to be taken into consideration. But the property that the karnavan is in enjoyment of himself under some arrangement by a previous karnavan is merely useful as a guide in the same way as the properties in the possession of other members of the tarwad are useful as a guide in arriving at the reasonable amount. But all those grants, the grant to the present karnavan, the grant to the 2nd defendant and the grant to the other members of property in lieu of maintenance are subject to revision by the karnavan in a proper case. It has been laid down, and I think rightly laid down, that that revision can only take place if he proposes to substitute for the maintenance provided in this way some other proper maintenance. How this decree is to be met, how the maintenance of those minor members for the future is to be paid, is a matter for the karnavan to decide, and he can, if he thinks it right, look into the position of every member to the tarwad, and he would be perfectly justified in saying that one member was getting too much and another member was getting too little and he could alter and re-adjust the incidence of the burden of the expenditure of this tarwad. I need hardly add that he must, in exercising any such powers, act honestly and in the general interest of the tarwad and not of course in his own personal interest as opposed to the general interest.

I think that disposes of everything in this case and this appeal must be allowed to the extent of varying the order in the way suggested by me.

My brother points out to me that it may be too general a statement to say that a personal decree against a karnavan can never be given. I can conceive those cases where it would be right that there should be a personal decree. All I meant to convey is that the ordinary decree in the first instance in the absence of special circumstances should be a decree in the form suggested by me.

As regards costs, on the whole, I think that respondents Nos. 1 to 9 must have their costs against the tarwad. The memorandum of objections of respondents Nos. 1 to 9 is dismissed with costs of the appellant and the memorandum of objections of the 10th respondent is dismissed without costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

An agreement pending an appeal from a decree by which the plaintiff agrees to forego a portion of the decree amount and to recover the balance from certain defendants only and not to proceed against others, and in pursuance of which the appeal is dismissed as having been settled out of Court, cannot be pleaded in bar to the execution of the appellate decree as against any of the defendants.

O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code which relates to adjustments subsequent to the decree sought to be executed is inapplicable to the case of an adjustment of the decree of the Trial Court pending an appeal from it.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the first defendant appeals against the order of the lower Court sanctioning the proclamation of sale, fixing the upset price and the date of sale. The appeal is on the ground that under an agreement dated 20th July 1918 the decree cannot be executed against the 1st defendant. The lower Court's reasons for rejecting this contention are not clear but it appears to have rejected it with reference to O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. In fact, the agreement was made after the date of the decree of the Court of first instance, but before the date of appellate decree of this Court, that appellate decree being one dismissing the appeal as the matter had been settled out of Court.

It is urged, with reference to Chidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1), that the first defendant should have been allowed to prove the agreement. The terms of the agreement are that, of the decree amount of Rs. 36,000, only Rs. 33,750 shall be recovered, the recovery to be made as regards half of that sum from the 2nd defendant and half from the 3rd defendant within specified periods. In case of default at the end of those periods the decree is to be executable, against at least those two defendants. For it is said (though this is disputed) that it is another term of the agreement that there is to be no recovery from the 1st and 4th defendants. It is not necessary to settle that dispute, because the question is whether the agreement can be proved at all. We think that it resembles the agreement dealt with in Arumugam Pillay v. Krishnaswami Naidu (2) and not that dealt with in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1). It no doubt contains a provision for postponing the liability, and it also contains a provision—this is its main provision—for the relinquishment of the right to recover Rs. 2,250 odd out of the decree amount. It has been suggested that Arumugam Pillay v. Krishnaswami Naidu (2) was wrongly decided and that we should refer the case before us to a Full Bench with reference to an alleged conflict between those decisions. We do not think that there is any sufficient reason for distinguishing the present case from Arumugam Pillay v. Krishnaswami Naidu (2) or doubting the correctness of that decision. In fact, if necessary, we should have been prepared to consider the propriety of making a reference in respect of Chidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1). We may, before parting with this portion of the case, observe that there is no question of the application of O. XXI r. 2 as the lower Court appears to have supposed; because that rule relates to adjustment subsequent to the decree and Exhibit A was before the decree to be executed was passed in appeal, and the ground on which the agreement is useless to the 1st defendant in these proceedings is, that it was superseded by the decree of the Appellate Court, made after it.

Taking this view, we turn to other contentions, which have been relied on, that the agreement can be regarded by an effort of construction as in fact an agreement made subsequently to the decree, since it had in fact been certified to the Executing Court under O. XXI, r. 2. We are unable to understand how an agreement made on one date can be regarded as having been made on another or how there has been any certification, such as would be necessary to support the argument. Reliance has been placed on Birao Gorain v. Jaimurat Koer (3). But we are unable to follow the course of that decision and can only suppose that it was justified by the apparently exceptional circumstances of the case dealt with in it. We further cannot understand how, even if this agreement could be treated as made after the decree, there has been anything resembling a certification of it. The mere fact that payments are mentioned in the execution application as having been made consistently with it is certainly not a certification.

The appeal failing on this ground also, there remains only an objection to the figure, which the lower Court fixed as the upset price at which the sale was to be held. Sivagami Achi v. Subrahmaniam Ayyar (4) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Scmasundaram Chettiar (5) negative the right of a party to execution proceedings to raise any such question by appeal at this stage.

The result is that the appeal against order fails and is dismissed with costs with the legal representative of the 1st plaintiff.

The memorandum of objections are not pressed and are dismissed. There will be no order as to costs in them.

Under a resolution of a Co-operative Stores, a purchase committee was constituted consisting of a certain number of members and one of them was entrusted with a sum of money for the purchase of certain articles. The Stores claimed a balance, and the liability was disputed by the member. The Secretary of the Stores thereupon made a reference in writing under section 43 (2) (i) of the Co-operative Societies Act to the Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies who held an inquiry and passed a decree against the member. On an objection by the member that the whole reference was outside the scope of the section and was invalid:

Held, (1) that the dispute which arose out of a particular transaction of the Society was a dispute "touching the business of the Society" and, therefore, within the scope of the section;

(2) that a dispute between a member who happened to be an officer, on the one hand, and the Committee or an officer, on the other, fell within the purview of the section;

(3) that the reference was, therefore, valid. The expression "disputes touching the business of a Society" in section 43 (2) (i) of the Co-operative Societies Act is not confined to disputes regarding the internal management of the affairs of the Society or the regulation of the conduct of its business, but includes all disputes arising out of any transaction of the Society.

The Advocate-General and Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

ORDER.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question that was argued before us turns on the construction of section 43 (2) (i) of the Co-operative Societies Act, II of 1912.

The dispute arose between the petitioner, P. Dasaratha Rao, and the Co-operative Stores, Vizianagaram, in regard to sums of money that were entrusted to the former for purchase of certain articles. The Stores, claimed a balance on the ground that, after some adjustments had been made, the sums were found due and that the petitioner was wrongfully withholding it from the Stores. The liability was disputed and the Secretary of the Co-operative Stores made a reference in writing to the Assistant Registrar who held an enquiry and passed a decree against the petitioner.

Two contentions were raised before us by Dasaratha Rao. The first contention had reference to the interpretation of the words "touching the business of a Society" in section 43 (2) (i). He contended that the present dispute does not fall within the said words and that the clause refers only to disputes regarding the internal management of the affairs of a Society or disputes in regard to the principles which would regulate the conduct of business; a dispute, for instance, whether the Society should purchase and deal in a particular commodity or should take up a particular line of business would, according to this construction, come within the terms of the clause; but a dispute arising out of any particular transaction would be outside the scope of the section. The words are quite general and I am unable to accept this contention. If the restricted construction contended for is to be adopted, I find great difficulty in understanding how such a dispute can arise between the past members of a Society inter se.

The second contention was that the petitioner was a Director, and that therefore, was an officer and that the words in the section exclude the case of a dispute between an officer and the Committee or between an officer and an officer. This contention, again, I am unable to accept. A dispute between a member and the Committee or a dispute between a member and an officer is admittedly within the purview of the section. It was brought to our notice that, under a resolution of the Society, a Purchase Committee was constituted consisting of six, of whom four were Directors and two were members but not Directors and in his capacity as a member of this Committee the petitioner became indebted to the Society. For the respondent it was argued that the dealings which the Society had with the petitioner were with him qua member and not qua Director. This argument, so far as it goes, seems to me correct. But I am prepared to go further and hold that, on a true construction of the words of the clause, a dispute between a member who happens, to be an officer on the one hand, and the Committee or an officer, on the other, does fall within the words of the section.

I, therefore, reject both the contentions advanced by the petitioner and in this view it becomes unnecessary to decide the other questions argued by the learned Advocate-General before us on behalf of the respondent.

The application for review is, therefore, dismissed. In the circumstances, I would make no order as to costs.

Krishnan, J.—I agree.

Section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code is intended for the benefit of the decree-holder and it is open to him to waive the benefit. There is no public policy making it incumbent on a Court to avoid an alienation pending an attachment. [p. 840, col. 2.]

An attaching decree-holder who, for valuable consideration, agrees with a purchaser of the attached property to withdraw the attachment is not entitled to go back on his agreement and a transferee from him with notice of the agreement is not entitled to apply for execution of the decree by attachment of the same property. O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code does not bar the purchaser in such a case from setting up the agreement as against the decree-holder's claim for execution. [p. 840, col. 2.]

The transferee of a decree is not in a better position than the decree-holder himself and can put forward only such rights as the decree-holder himself had at the time of transfer and is bound by any agreement made by his transferor of which he had notice at the time of transfer. [p. 841, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT. This case arises from an application put in by the appellant before us to exclude from Court sale a property which he had purchased while it was under attachment under an agreement made between him, the decree-holders, and the judgment-debtor that, on the purchase-money Rs. 200 being paid to the former, he should no longer execute the decree against the property purchased and that the attachment should be withdrawn.

NANDIGAM GANGAYYA v. MADUPAILI VENKATARAMAYYA.

The decree-holders have now transferred their decree to one Venkataramayya, the first respondent, and he is now trying to execute the decree by selling this very property. He has also applied for execution against the other properties as well; but we are not concerned with that portion of the execution application. The main question that has to be decided in this case, on the facts found is, whether, because the property was under attachment at the time that the appellant purchased it, section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code is a bar against his plea that the property should not be proceeded against in execution.

The District Munsif held that the section was not a bar as it did not make the alienation absolutely void but only void to the extent of the claims enforceable under the attachment and that the decree-holders having entered into an agreement and received full consideration for it that they would not proceed against the appellant's property, they were bound by that contract and could not rely upon section 64 and insist on selling the property again. According to him, section 64, being a section enacted for the benefit of decree-holders, it was open to them to waive such a benefit.

Against the order of the Munsif there was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge. He also found all the facts in favour of the purchaser, namely, that the sale-deed, Exhibit A, by which he purchased the property had full consideration, that the agreement set up by him was true and that the purchase-money was paid to the decree-holders in pursuance of that agreement. There seems to have been at the same time an agreement that the purchase-money was to be taken in full satisfaction of the decree. That was, however, an arrangement primarily for the benefit of the judgment-debtor; that arrangement as it amounted to an adjustment of the decree between parties, would fall under O. XXI, r. 2 and could not be pleaded in execution; but so far as the appellant's claim is concerned, his plea is only that the property purchased by him should not be sold and the only objection that could be raised against him is that section 64 bars his pleas.

The Subordinate Judge in appeal, though he found all the facts in favour of the present appellant, nevertheless, came to the conclusion that it could not be disputed that, no satisfaction of the decree having been recorded, the decree continued in force and was executable against all the attached properties. He thought that the transferee decree-holder was entitled to sell again the present appellant's property as it had not been sold to him at all. It is not, however, clear whether he puts the case under O. XXI, r. 2 or under section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code. If it is the former, it is clear that the rule has no application so far as the purchaser, the appellant, is concerned. He is not interested in insisting upon any adjustment of the decree. All that he is concerned with is, that his property should not be sold in execution. It does not matter to him whether the decree should be executed or treated as adjusted so long as the contract between him and the original decree-holders is enforced as against the latter and their transferee. O. XXI, r. 2 does not, therefore, bar his contention.

As already stated, the question that really arises is one of the construction and effect of section 64, Civil Procedure Code. We are inclined to think that the view taken by the Munsif is the correct one. The section is really one intended to benefit the decree-holders so that they may not be impeded by any alienation pending attachment in executing their decrees. The benefit being for the decree-holders we are inclined to think that he could waive the benefit and as, in the present case, the decree-holders had entered into an actual contract with the purchaser, they cannot be permitted to go back upon their contract and insist upon the application of section 64 in their favour. To allow them to do so would be clearly to perpetrate a fraud. We see nothing in section 64 that necessitates such a construction as that.

Numerous authorities have been cited to us regarding the application of O. XXI, r. 2 but none of them have got any bearing on the present case and, therefore, we do not propose to refer to any of them. No case has been cited as regards the construction of section 64. We have, therefore, to decide the question arising here on the language of that section. There is no particular public policy underlying the section which makes it incumbent on the Court to void an alienation pending an attachment, the section being intended only to help the decree-holder to realise his decree amount.

It was finally argued that, whatever obligations there might be upon the decree-holder to act according to his agreement, such obligations did not pass to the transferee-decree-holder and that it was open to him to sell the property in execution. We are unable to accept this argument; for the transferee decree-holder in this case is proved to have had knowledge of the agreement between the decree-holders and purchaser before transfer. Furthermore, a transferee decree-holder can be allowed to put forward only such rights as the decree-holder had at the time of transfer; and as, in this case, the decree-holder was bound by the arrangement, we must take it that the transferee was also bound by it. The case cited in Krishna Aiyar v. Savurimulhu Pillai (1) has no bearing on the present case at all for there the transferee decree-holder was entirely within his rights because the decree-holder himself had the right of executing the decree in spite of the anterior adjustment with the judgment-debtor as the adjustment had not been certified to the Court under O. XXI. r. 2. If we may respectfully say so, it was rightly held that there was no cause of action against the transferee. The cause of action against the decree-holder was based on his failure to perform his statutory duty of certifying to the Court the adjustment that he had entered into with the judgment-debtor. Such a duty did not devolve upon the transferee at all.

The point has also been taken before us that no second appeal lies in this case as the matter arises in the execution of a small cause decree. This seems to be so and the second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed; but we are prepared to allow the second appeal to be converted into a revision petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is argued for the appellant that, in that view, we should set aside the decree of the lower Court as well. But section 102 does not affect the right of appeal from such a decree but only the right of second appeal. It is not necessary to decide if there was a right of appeal in this case under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground that the purchaser of a property attached is a representative of the judgement-debtor, in disputing the right of the decree-holder to sell it, as we are setting aside the Subordinate Judge's order on another ground.

Assuming the appeal was a competent one we must still hold that the order of the Subordinate Judge was one falling under section 115, Civil Procedure Code as he entirely misconstrued the legal position in the case and refused to release the property from attachment as he should have done. Having found that there was an agreement as pleaded by the purchaser, and having found all the facts in his favour, the Subordinate Judge has, by a mistake of the law that he made, declined to give effect to his findings and to release the property from attachment as he should have done. Where a Court by an erroneous view of the law refuses to exercise a power which it has got or exercises a power which it assumes it has, but it has not really got, the case would be one falling under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. We may refer to the most recent decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Sundaram v. Mamsa Mavuthar (2) for this view.

In these circumstances, we think this is a fit case for interference under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and we set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif. As regards costs, we think it right to make the parties bear their own costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court.

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, Sch. I, Arts. 49, 120, 145, applicability of—"Trust for specified purpose", meaning of—"Deposit," what is—Suit to recover property entrusted—Limitation.

Plaintiff gave certain jewels to the defendant, a co-parcener in the same family, to enable the latter to raise a loan by a pledge of the jewels. Subsequently, by a family arrangement, it was agreed that the plaintiff should get a life interest in the jewels and the defendant undertook to get back the jewels and return the same to the plaintiff in a few days. In a suit by the plaintiff for recovery of the jewels:

Held, that the defendant was constituted an express trustee in whom the jewels became vested for a specific purpose within the meaning of section 10 of the Limitation Act and the suit was, therefore, governed by that section.

Per Schwabe, C. J.—Assuming that there was no express trust under section 10 of the Limitation Act, the case would be governed by Art. 145, and if not covered by Art. 145, would be covered by Art. 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

The phrase "trust for a specified purpose" in section 10 of the Limitation Act connotes the same idea as "express trust" in English Law, and is used in the section in contradistinction to trusts arising by implication of law, trusts resulting and trusts constructive. [p. 843, col. 2.]

The word "vested", in section 10 of the Limitation Act means no more than properly having control of the property. [p. 843, col. 2.]

The word "deposit" in Art. 145 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is not confined to the strict meaning of "depositum" in Roman Law, but extends to all cases where one man's property is handed by that man to another, so that, the latter becomes a "depository" of it unless there is something in the terms of the handing over, which would prevent his being treated as a person with whom it was deposited at all. Appeal against a decree of the Court of the City Civil Judge, Madras, dated the 9th March 1922, in Original Suit No. 132 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—This is an appeal from the City Civil Court in a suit in which the plaintiff sought to recover certain jewels or their value, and an order was made for their return or for their value, Rs. 1,000.

The facts of the case are that the jewels in question being in the possession of the plaintiff were handed by her to the defendant on terms that he might pledge them for a short time for his own benefit and then should redeem them and return them to the plaintiff. While the jewellery was still in his possession or in the possession of the pledgee with whom he had pledged them, the plaintiff and the defendant and other members of the same family, the plaintiff being the widow of a brother of the defendant, entered into an agreement Exhibit A. By that agreement the jewels in question were settled on the terms of Exhibit A, which was to the effect that they should be enjoyed by the plaintiff during her life without power of alienation and upon her death they should be divided between the defendant and other parties to the agreement. Within a short time of the making of that agreement the jewellery, if it was not already in the hands of the defendant, came into his hands, for he was under a duty to redeem it and there is no evidence that he did not do so. At the time that Exhibit A was executed there was an express promise by the defendant that he would within ten days obtain the jewels and deal with them in accordance with Exhibit A. In 1916 the plaintiff demanded from the defendant the return of the jewels and he refused. She subsequently took criminal proceedings against him but was referred by the Criminal Court to the Civil Court, and in 1921 she brought this suit. She alleged that she had discovered in 1917 that the defendants had sold the jewels in 1912. The defendant denied that he did sell the jewels in 1912 or at any time and there has been no finding of fact as to whether he has or has not sold them.

The learned Judge has held that the suit is not barred by limitation because section 10 of the Limitation Act applies and that the defendant is a trustee for the plaintiff. It is contended before us that section 10 has no application and that the case is governed by Art. 49 and is, therefore, barred because the suit was not brought in three years after the demand and refusal referred to above. Section 10 applies only to "suits against persons in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose." It has been held in Bhurabhai v. Bai Rukmani (1) that "the phrase 'trusts for a specific purpose' in this section is merely a more expanded mode of expressing the same idea as that conveyed by the expression 'express trust' in English Law: and it is used in this section in contradistinction to trusts arising by implication of law, trusts resulting and trusts constructive." In my judgment that is a correct statement of the law and I think it is right to say that, wherever you have an express trust, the trustee comes under section 10 and no period of limitation avails him. What amounts to an express trust as opposed to a constructive trust was fully discussed in Soar v. Ashwell (2). That was a case in which a Solicitor for some trustees received some of the trust monies on the terms that he was to invest them for the trust. It was held that he, by those terms, became an express trustee of those monies. In my judgment, in this case the true position of the execution of Exhibit A was that, when the jewellery came into the hands of the defendant, a party to that agreement, he, by his agreement, had undertaken to hold it and apply it in accordance with the terms of Exhibit A and was thereby constituted an express trustee in whom the property was vested for that purpose. I do not think that the word "vested" in section 10 means anything more than properly having control of the property. The jewellery was accordingly held by him from that time forward on terms that he should hand it over to the plaintiff, if alive, or, if dead, should hand it over to himself and others entitled to it in reversion. I, therefore, agree with the decision of the learned Judge of the City Civil Court. I agree with the decision of the majority in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Kristo Kamini Dassee (3) which supports this view.

I wish, however, to deal also with the other point, namely, whether, assuming that there is no trust, the case is governed by Art. 145 or by some other Article of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. For this purpose one has to consider the terms on which the defendant originally got the jewellery into his possession. The terms were that he might use the jewellery for his own benefit by pledging it and, if not so required, if and when redeemed, he should hand it over to the plaintiff. Art. 145 refers to suits against depositories or pawnees to recover moveable property deposited or pawned; the period of limitation is 30 years from the date of the deposit or pawn. It is argued that the word "deposit" there must be confined to the strict meaning of "depositum" in Roman Law and there is some authority in support of that view. There is a judgment to that effect of Sadasiva Iyer, J., in Narayanassamy Thevar v. Aiyasamy Iyengar (4) where it was unnecessary for the decision, and of the Bench in Gopalasami Iyer v. Subramania Sastri (5) where, as the Court was holding that the time had not expired, it was also unnecessary for the decision. There is also the dissenting judgment of Hill, J., in Administrator-General of Bengal v. Kristo Kamini Dassee (3). Looked at from the point of view of the Roman Law, I do not think that the handing over of property in this case by the plaintiff to the defendant was a depositum. I think it is more in the nature of commodatum. There are six kinds of bailment referred to in Roman Law and set out in

(1) 32 B. 394; 10 Bom. L. R. 540.

(2) (1893) 2 Q. B. 390; 4 R. 602; 69 L. T. 585; 42 W. R. 165.

KISHTAPPA CHETTY v. LAKSHMI AMMAL.

Detail in the famous judgment of Holt, C.J., in Coggs v. Bernard (6). But the Indian Limitation Act was meant to provide a simple guide to cover every possible case that might come before the Courts in India. It is obvious that the intention was merely to have to look up the particular suit and you find the answer in the First Schedule. The results, it is true, are not very happy, but I cannot believe that it was the intention of the framers of the Statute that the various District Munsifs throughout India or other Subordinate Judges who have to administer the law should study either Coggs v. Bernard (6) or the Roman Law in order to ascertain what was the true meaning of the Art. 145. I think they meant to use simple and plain language and they used the word 'depository' and, in using that word, they meant simply to say that, where one man's property was handed by that man to another he became a depository of it, unless, of course, there was something in the terms of the handing over which would prevent his being treated as a person with whom it was deposited at all. It is almost impossible that, when they were making a period of 30 years applicable to cases of goods handed over either for safe custody or in pledge, they should have intentionally made a shorter period for cases of goods handed over for the advantage of the person to whom they were handed. It would be most illogical to allow a shorter period in the case where the depositor, if I may use the word, gets the advantage than is allowed in the case where deposit is merely doing something for the advantage of the depositor, and it is to be observed that cases not coming under Art. 145 come nowhere, unless indeed they can be brought within the words of Art. 49. Art. 49, if intended to cover cases like the present, is most curiously worded, for it is for suits for other specific moveable property than property lost or acquired by theft or dishonest misappropriation or conversion or for compensation for wrongfully taking or for wrongfully detaining the same, and the period of limitation is three years from the time when the property is wrongfully taken or injured or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful. It seems to me that an entirely different class of suits is being dealt with—not suits for recovery of property deposited with another but suits in respect of property wrongfully taken or wrongfully detained. It is to be observed that, if this is not so, there would be two different periods allowed in respect of goods deposited strictly so called; for, where goods are deposited for safe custody only, and a demand is made for their return and refused, those goods become wrongfully detained and there would be a period of 30 years under Art. 145 and a period of three years under Art. 49 and it is not probable that the Legislature intended to arrive at that result. I think that that is an argument in favour of the view that Art. 49 is not dealing with the articles deposited in any sense, and it would follow that it is an argument in favour of holding that Art. 145 covers more than the depositum of Roman Law. In my judgment, if this case were not covered by section 10, it would be covered by Art. 145, and if it is not covered by Art. 145, it is not provided for at all and would, therefore, be covered by Art. 120, and the suit is in time.

For these reasons, in my judgment, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Wallace, J.—I agree that section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act applies and it is sufficient to dispose of this case.

This is in effect a suit by a widow for property in which she had a life-interest under a deed of maintenance executed by all the members of the joint family property withheld from her by the manager of the joint family. Whatever were the terms by which the defendant originally came into possession of the jewels, he, whenever he subscribed to Exhibit A, which declared that the jewels were to be the property of the plaintiff for her life time and then promised, as was found in the judgment in the previous case, Original Suit No. 427 of 1919, on the file of the lower Court, to return them to her within ten days, evidently then either having them himself in his possession or being able to obtain them within that period, constituted himself, so long as he held them and did not return them to her, a trustee of them on her behalf. And having regard to his definite promise to return them he had them in trust for a specific purpose, while from his promise and the terms of Exhibit A it seems to me clear that the jewels were considered then to be in the possession of the first defendant and, therefore, vested in him. I see no difference in his position from that of a managing member of a joint family, who is withholding from a widow in the family entitled to maintenance property which that widow on the arrangement of the joint family itself is entitled to have in her own possession and which the manager is bound at her request to hand over to her for her lifetime. That would clearly be a case in which the property has become vested in the manager for a specific purpose, as soon as he continued to hold it after the family arrangement came into force, and where the manager would be in the fiduciary relationship from that time and would be bound to hold the property for her as directed by her. In this view, the defendant is, at the very least, a trustee de son tort if that expression may be used, and is certainly an express trustee in English Law as laid down in Soar v. Ashwell (2). It seems to me further clear, as indicated above, that the property was, on the date of Exhibit A, vested in the defendant for a specific purpose.

I, therefore, agree that section 10 applies in terms and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—A pedigree table showing the relationship of the parties and of the important witnesses in the case is attached to this judgment.*

On the 25th June 1913 Najim-ud-Din, son of Munshi Badr-ud-Din, Sheikh of Lahore

*Not material to this report, so not printed. —[Ld.]

NAJIM-UD-DIN V. ABDUL HAMID.

instituted a suit against his brother-in-law, Abdul Hamid, a minor, his daughter, Musammât Aziz Fatima, a minor, through the guardianship of Khan Bahadur Dr. Sayad Amir Shah and the said Sayad Amir Shah himself. With him as co-plaintiff was joined one Girdhari Lal, son of Lala Wasdev, as Najm-ud-Din had assigned to the said Girdhari Lal $\frac{1}{4}$ th of his interest in the property in suit. The suit was for possession by partition of $\frac{5}{6}$ ths share of certain moveable and immoveable property described in detail in the plaint and $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of certain ornaments which were also detailed. It was alleged in the plaint that Musammât Aziz Begam, wife of Sheikh Aziz Din, and mother of Abdul Hamid, had died at Lahore on the 12th September 1908 leaving her surviving her sons Abdul Hamid and Muhammad Said and a minor daughter Musammât Hamida Begam; that Muhammad Said had died on the 13th September 1908 and that the plaintiff Najm-ud-Din had married Musammât Hamida Begam. It was further alleged that Musammât Aziz Begam had left considerable moveable and immoveable property succession to which had devolved on her issue under Muhammadan Law and that, on the death of Muhammad Said, his property had devolved on his brother and sister under the same law. It was then alleged that on the 11th October 1910 Musammât Hamida Begam had died leaving a daughter Musammât Aziz Fatima and that the plaintiff Najm-ud-Din, his daughter, Musammât Aziz Fatima, and her brother, Abdul Hamid, succeeded to her estate in accordance with the Muhammadan Law of Succession. The plaint then went on to recite that, on the 23rd May 1911, the District Judge of Lahore had refused to recognize the plaintiff Najm-ud-Din and his daughter, Musammât Aziz Fatima, as the heirs of Musammât Hamida Begam's estate and the plaintiff was thus forced to bring this suit. On behalf of Musammât Aziz Fatima the claim was admitted but the suit was contested by the other defendants, it being pleaded that the parties followed custom and not their personal law. After protracted proceedings the suit was finally disposed of on the 29th October 1917, the plaintiff being awarded a decree against Abdul Hamid, defendant, for Rs. 550. The Court below has held that the parties are governed by custom and not by Muhammadan Law and that by the custom found to have been established Musammât Hamida Begam was excluded from succession to her mother's estate by her brothers, Abdul Hamid and Muhammad Said, and to her brother Muhammad Said's estate by Abdul Hamid. The amount decreed was the share claimed by the plaintiff in the ornaments said to have been left by Musammât Hamida Begam.

Against this decree the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal, while the respondents have filed cross-objections. On behalf of the appellants we have heard Mr. Mool Chand while Bakhshi Tek Chand has addressed us on behalf of the respondents.

At the outset, it was sought to make Dr. Amir Shah personally liable for the share claimed in the ornaments said to have belonged to Musammât Hamida Begam, but Abdul Hamid having assumed all responsibility Dr. Amir Shah has been absolved from liability and Mr. Mool Chand has not asked for any relief against him.

The property in suit originally belonged to M. Aziz Din who belonged to a family of Pirs whose home is at Sham Chaurasi in the Hoshiarpur District. It is said that the family was founded by one Abu Nabi who (or whose father) was a convert to Islam from Hinduism, originally being Bahal Khatri by caste. Fazal Elahi, father of M. Aziz Din, was apparently the last member of the family to act as the manager and guardian of the shrine. Instead of following in his father's footsteps M. Aziz Din entered Government service and succeeded in amassing a considerable fortune. He married three wives from each of whom he had issue—sons and daughters. He was on bad terms with the sons of his first two wives and, in order to assure the further comfort of his sons by his third wife, Musammât Aziz Begam, he made an arrangement by which he sold and gifted to her, in lieu of her dower of Rs. 20,000 the property the succession to which is now in question. With his other property this suit is not concerned.

It is alleged, and has been found, that the property so sold and gifted to Musammât Aziz Begam became her absolute estate. An effort was made on the part of Abdul Hamid to show that the property in suit really belonged to M. Aziz Din and that the transaction in favour of Musammât Aziz Begam was merely benami for the benefit of her two sons. This contention formed the subject of Issue 12 which was decided against Abdul Hamid, and has been again advanced in ground 3 of the cross-objections. There is, however, no material on the record to support this contention which was not seriously pressed. M. Aziz Din's Will, Exhibit D 4, (page 106 of printed book) and a lease, Exhibit P. 40 (page 5 of printed book) were referred to and commented on but there is nothing in these documents to suggest that the transactions were benami and the view of the Court below is obviously correct. It must, therefore, be held that Musammât Aziz Begam was the absolute owner of the property in suit. She died on the 12th September 1908 leaving her surviving two sons, Abdul Hamid and Muhammad Said, and a daughter Musammât Hamida Begam.

On the same, or the following day, Musammât Hamida Begam was married to the plaintiff Najm-ud-Din, a kabin-nama being executed by him in which her dower was fixed at Rs. 20,000. Muhammad Said died on the 13th September 1908 and Dr. Amir Shah was appointed guardian of Abdul Hamid and Musammât Hamida Begam by Court. Musammât Hamida Begam gave birth to a daughter, Musammât Aziz Fatima, (defendant No. 2) and died on the 11th October 1910.

Najm-ud-Din's claim is that he is entitled under the Muhammadan Law of Succession to a share in (1) the property left by Musammât Aziz Begam, (2) the property left by Muhammad Said, and (3) the jewellery left by Musammât Hamida Begam. Abdul Hamid's defence is that the parties follow custom and not Muhammadan Law and that by this custom sons exclude daughters from succession to their father's or mother's estate, and brothers exclude sisters from succession to the estate of a brother. He also contends that none of the ornaments in which Najm-ud-Din claims a share belonged to Musammât Hamida Begam. This last question was put in issue as Issue No. 3 and was decided against Abdul Hamid. This decision is attacked in grounds Nos. 1 and 2 of the cross-objections. The finding of the Court below on this point is to be

It will be seen that the conclusions are based on certain admissions made by (1) Dr. Amir Shah as guardian of Abdul Hamid and (2) Elahi Bakhsh, an old man who had been connected with the family for a very long time and was assisting Abdul Hamid. It has also been concluded that, "in all probability" these ornaments had been given to Musammât Hamida Begam as her dowry.

This last theory is obviously untenable. At the time of Musammât Hamida Begam's marriage both her parents were dead, her two brothers were minors and there was no one who could have given her anything by way of dowry.

The admissions attributed to Dr. Amir Shah are to be found at pages 28 and 33 of the printed book. At page 28 is an application dated the 12th December 1909, (Exhibit P-31) in which Dr. Amir Shah asks the Court's sanction to the sale of certain ornaments with the exception of "the ornaments valued at Rs. 2,500 approximately, belonging to Musammât Hamida Begam, minor daughter of Musammât Aziz Begam, in respect whereof a separate application will be submitted." At page 33 is another application dated the 7th October 1909, Exhibit P. 35, in which Dr. Amir Shah points out that the weights given in a former list of the ornaments sold were not accurate, and that "the gold wala (ear ring) was, by mistake, entered in the list of the ornaments of Musammât Hamida Begam, minor. Therefore, I have penned through the entry in the list in red ink to-day."

At pages 38, 39 and 74 are the lists referred to. Doubtless, these applications contain admissions that Musammât Hamida Begam had ornaments to the approximate value of Rs. 2,500, but, as pointed out by the learned Senior Sub-Judge, Dr. Amir Shah's admissions cannot bind Abdul Hamid. Their value is also very considerably reduced, if not entirely taken away, when Dr. Amir Shah's evidence at page 422 is considered.

Admittedly, at the time when these applications were made and the lists prepared, there was no dispute between the minors, and Najm-ud-Din was rendering Dr. Amir Shah assistance in the collection and management of the estate. Dr. Amir

NAJM-UD-DIN v. ABDUL HAMID.

Shah states in his cross-examination that he was sent for some 5 or 6 hours after *Musamm*at Aziz Begam's death and the property was made over to him on that or the following day in the presence, inter alia, of *Musamm*at Hamida Begam and Najm-ud-Din and that neither of them advanced any claim to any of the property or ornaments which were all said to belong to *Musamm*at Aziz Begam, and, further, that it was not until the death of *Musamm*at Hamida Begam that Najm-ud-Din advanced any claims. The applications were brought to him by Najm-ud-Din or the Munshi and were signed by him without his having any knowledge as to who was the heir of the deceased lady. The ornaments were with him for a year or so and given by him to *Musamm*at Hamida Begam to wear. In the circumstances disclosed by this statement, it is clearly impossible to place any value on the admissions in the applications and, still more impossible, to regard them as binding on Abdul Hamid.

There is no admission by Elahi Bakhsh and the mere fact that he wrote the applications and lists cannot be regarded as amounting to one. Further, in his statement at page 417 he distinctly states that he wrote these documents at the instance of Najm-ud-Din and that he had no personal knowledge of the ornaments but thinks they belonged to *Musamm*at Aziz Begam. Eliminating these so called admissions and the mere "probability" of dowry having been bestowed, Mr. Mool Chand has not been able to refer to any other evidence on which the decision of this issue can be supported, and it must, therefore, be held that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that *Musamm*at Hamida Begam died possessed of the ornaments in suit.

The real contention between the parties is, whether the family in matters of succession follows Muhammadan Law or custom. On this point, at first, the following issues were settled:—

"(3) Whether the parties are not governed by Muhammadan Law?

"(4) If issue No. 3 is found in favour of the defendants, whether they are governed by custom which excludes daughters from inheritance in the presence of sons?"

On the 1st December 1914 Mian Yar Muhammad Khan of Jahan Khelau was appointed a Commissioner to make an enquiry into the question of custom and was asked to enquire into and report on the following questions:—

(1) Was Sheikh Aziz Din, whose property is now in dispute, a permanent resident of Sham Chaurasi in the Hoshiarpur District and had removed to Lahore for temporary purposes only, or was he a permanent resident of Lahore?

(2) Do the Muhammadan Sheikhs of the Biradri of Sheikh Aziz Din who was a converted Bahal Khatri follow custom in matters of succession whereby sons exclude daughters entirely?

Parties took no exception to the terms of this reference and an enquiry was made by the Commissioner who furnished his report on the 10th April 1915. Some other evidence was then led by the defendants and the case was set down for arguments, when it was pointed out that the real question, viz., the rule of succession to the property of a mother, had been lost sight of; issue No. 11 was then settled in the following terms:—

"Does a custom prevail among the Sheikhs, who are converts from Hindu Khatri, whereby sons exclude daughters from succession to the property of their mother and brothers exclude sisters from succession to the property of a brother?" (Vide order dated 10th November 1915, page 517 of printed book).

Lala Madan Gopal, Pleader of Jullundur, was appointed Commissioner for the purpose of recording evidence and holding an enquiry into this issue. He submitted a report in due course (page 579 of printed book) and witnesses were also examined on interrogatories and in Court, and ultimately issues Nos. 3, 4 and 11 were, as already stated, decided in favour of Abdul Hamid. It was contended in the Court below that inasmuch as M. Aziz Din had left Sham Chaurasi and settled in Lahore any custom that may be found to exist at the former place was not binding on the parties.

This point has not been pressed in this Court and there is ample evidence on the record to show that, though M. Aziz Din came to Lahore, he continued to maintain a close connection with his family and brotherhood at Sham Chaurasi. The presumption, therefore, is that his family is governed in matters of succession by the same rules as are in force in its original home : Parbati Kumari Devi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal (1). Mr. Mool Chand contended, however, that as the family is descended from converts from Hinduism the presumption is that they follow Muhammadan Law, and in this connection reference was made to Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (2) Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok (3) and Mahomed Ibrahim Rowther v. Ibrahim Rowther (4). This contention was not contested by Mr. Tek Chand, who drew attention to the fact that these same authorities point out that the presumption is a rebuttable one and indicate that, as often as not, such converts do not follow strict Muhammadan Law in matters of succession and inheritance. He further claimed that in the present case this presumption had been rebutted and that it had been proved that Sheikh converts from Hindu Khatri follow the custom set up.

Next, it was urged that this is a non-agricultural family of "Sahibzadas" who are in no way bound by any custom that may be found to exist among Sheikh converts from other gots, of Hindu Khatri, and that, therefore, instances of succession by custom among other sections of Sheikhs were irrelevant and should be eliminated. Mr. Tek Chand admitted that the family was not agricultural and, being descended from Pirs, came within the Sahibzada class, but he contended that in the Jullundur Doab all Sheikh converts from Hindu Khatri followed the same custom in matters of succession and, therefore, instances among other gots were to the point.

That any such distinction existed among the various 'gots' does not appear to have been asserted during the trial. Indeed, both sides seem to have recognised that all Sheikh converts from Hindu Khatri in the Jullundur Doab irrespective of their various gots were governed by the same rules of succession.

D. W. Bashir Ahmad, at page 425, line 51 of printed book, clearly stated that "all the Sheikhs have one custom." Again, at page 426, Mr. Tirath Ram for the defendants states that "converted Muhammadans from Hindu Khatri have all the same custom." While at page 427 Najm-ud-Din is recorded as having stated that "all the Sheikhs converted from Hindu Khatri resident in towns follow "Sharah Muhammadi." Khan Sahib Sheikh Rahim Bakhsh, a Sahgal Sheikh asserted that the Sheikhs generally followed custom, pages 430-431. The same may be deduced from the evidence of Sheikh Taj Din (a Sahgal Sheikh) pages 438-447, of Muhammad Kushaish page 452, of Muhammad Bakhsh page 467, of Wazir-ud-Din page 468, and of Chiragh-ud-Din page 475, while the report dated 9th March 1915 (page 463) of Mian Yar Muhammad, Local Commissioner, is to the same effect. No objection was taken to this report and the witnesses' assertion in this connection were not challenged in cross-examination. Again, when the new issue No. 11 was settled, objection was not taken to its terms though the language used clearly showed that no distinction was made so far as the various gots were concerned.

In the evidence led subsequent to the settlement of this issue, it is clear that both parties fully realised that the enquiry related to the custom followed by all Sheikh converts to Islam from the Khatri caste of the Hindus, page 518, line 10. A number of similar statements were referred to, but it is not necessary to discuss this matter further as there can be no doubt that the distinction now sought to be made by Mr. Mool Chand does not exist and was never thought of by Najm-ud-Din himself who has all along maintained that all Sheikh converts to Islam from Hindu Khatri, irrespective of their different 'gots,' were, in matters of succession, governed by Muhammadan Law. Instances from other gots in the Jullundur Doab, therefore, must be held to be relevant to the matter under investigation.

In support of their respective cases the parties have produced a certain number of instances. The Court below has placed these instances under four heads and it will

(1) 29 C. 433; 29 I. A. 82; 6 C. W. N. 490; 4 Bom. L. R. 365; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 205 (P. C.).

(2) 19 B. 1; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 383.

(3) 20 B. 53; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 594.

(4) 67 Ind. Cas. 115; 45 M. 308; 30 M. L. T. 85; 26 C. W. N. 793; (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 59; 43 M. L. J. 69; 36 C. L. J. 64; (1922) M. W. N. 470; 24 Bom. L. R. 944 (P. C.).

NAJIM-UD-DIN v. ABDUL HAMID.

be convenient to maintain that division. These four heads are:—

I. Instances among Bahal and other Kanungo Sheikhs where sons succeeded to father's property to the total exclusion of daughters.

II. Instances where daughters were excluded from inheritance to maternal estates.

III. Instances where on death of a childless brother his brothers succeeded excluding sisters.

IV. Other instances opposed to Muhammadan Law.

The defendants have produced instances under all these heads while the plaintiff has confined himself to Heads I, II and III. Each side has filed a list under each head giving the details of the instances relied on and the learned Counsel have examined and criticised each instance minutely and at great length.

Under Head I, the defendants' instances number 46. Of these the first 17 relate to Bahal, or Bahal, Sahibzada, Sheikhs, chiefly of Sham Chaurasi and there are instances in the family of M. Aziz Din, while No. 3 is an instance showing that when Najm-ud-Din's father died succession to his estate was according to the custom set up and not according to Muhammadan Law. Instances 18 to 39, both inclusive, relate to Sahgal Sheikhs, and the remainder to other Khatri Sheikhs. With the exception of instances 41, 43 and 44 all the others are amply proved by the witnesses deposing to them.

Mr. Mool Chand has urged that in many of these instances the property in question was of so small a value that the daughters who had married into wealthy families had not considered it worth while to advance any claim, and that none of these instances, appear to have been before the Courts, the evidence regarding them consisting only of the oral testimony of witnesses. While giving due weight to these contentions, there seems to be no reason to doubt the correctness of the instances. The fact remains that in the cases cited daughters did not inherit any portion of the paternal estate, the sons taking the whole.

Proof of custom is not confined to judicial precedents alone and the fact that no contest has taken place in the past may well raise a presumption that the custom was so well recognized that no one thought of contesting it. In this connection the remarks quoted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge from Hassan v. Jahana (5) are apposite.

The witnesses produced by the defendants in support of these instances are mostly of good position and unexceptionable character. e.g., Mian Sir Abdul Hamid Khan, and Khan Bahadur Sheikh Rahim Bakhsh, and their position and connection with the brotherhood very considerably enhances the value of the defendants' evidence.

It must be held then that the defendants have proved 43 instances in which sons excluded daughters from succession to their father's property. As against these instances the plaintiff has produced 10 in which he has attempted to show that Muhammadan Law was followed.

As to No. 1, it has not been shown who Musammam Bhagan was. Her brother was Haji Shah and the probability is that Musammam Bhagan was not a Sheikh. The witness who deposes to this instance, Muhammad Amir, admits that he never saw Musammam Bhagan and his evidence is hearsay. This instance has not been proved.

As to No. 2, there is the same witness whose knowledge of the facts is obviously hearsay and worthless. He has made contradictory statements, cf. page 575 and page 478, line 21.

As to No. 3, it is to be noted that while the witness asserts that his father's sister succeeded to their father's estate, he admits that his father is alive, yet he has not been produced. Further, it does not appear from the witness's statement that the succession was really according to Muhammadan Law.

The next three instances Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are strictly not relevant as they relate to Sheikhs of Lahore who have not been shown to have had any connection with Sham Chaurasi. In instances Nos. 5 and 6 the parties have not even been shown to be converts from *Khatri*s. P. W. Maulvi Abdul Hakim shows that he has been endeavouring to induce the Sheikhs of Lahore to adopt Muhammadan Law in matters of succession, but not with any apparent success, while Gulzar Muhammad, another witness, admits (page 485 line 14) that in his family the rule of succession has not been in accordance with Muhammadan Law.

Instance No. 7, is deposed to by the aforesaid Maulvi Abdul Hakim, but it is clear that Muhammadan Law was not followed in the case as the witness's wife received nothing till her mother had died.

Instance No. 8, again it has not been shown that the witnesses's aunt received her proper share and that Muhammadan Law was followed has not been proved. The evidence is also clearly hearsay as the witness is deposing to events that took place 60 or 70 years ago while he gives his own age as 30.

Instance No. 9 relates to the succession to the moveable property of one Sheikh Gauram Muhammad. A succession certificate was applied for and granted to the deceased's widow and father. No question of a succession by a daughter or a son arose, and the order granting the certificate (page 40) indicates that there was no son.

Instance No. 10 refers to Sheikhs of Kulnaur and is scarcely relevant. No connection with Sham Chaurasi has been shown and the instance is not a case of succession.

It will be seen that in not a single one of these ten instances has it been proved that succession was in accordance with Muhammadan Law and these instances have no weight as against those proved by the defendants. Finally, there is M. Aziz Din's Will (page 106) in paragraph 7 of which he distinctly refers to the devolution of his property according to custom.

It must, therefore, be held that the defendants have proved a custom by which sons exclude daughters from succeeding to their father's estate. That in this family itself this custom prevails seems to be clearly established by the three instances brought forward. The first relates to the succession to the estate of Fazal Elahi, father of Aziz Din, and even if it be held that Fazal Elahi's estate was a small one, the same cannot be said with regard to the estate of Aziz Din himself in the succession to which Aziz Din's sons excluded his daughters.

Under-Head II, (succession to maternal estates). The defendants have produced evidence relating to 24 instances. In criticising them Mr. Mool Chand pointed out that they were only brought forward after the settlement of issue No. 11 and during the enquiry that followed. This matter has been dealt with above. There can be no doubt that during the enquiry by the first Local Commissioner this extremely important part of the case was completely lost sight of by all concerned. The mere fact then that these instances were brought forward during the second enquiry cannot in any way minimise any value they may otherwise possess.

Mr. Mool Chand then contended that in none of the instances had it been shown that the property held by the mother had been acquired by her purchase or gift. The importance of this is not very apparent. The present dispute relates to the succession to property of which Musammam Aziz Begam was the absolute owner and the instances relate to the succession to estates held by women absolutely.

It was next contended that there is only oral evidence to support these instances. This matter has been dealt with above. If the oral evidence is reliable there is no reason why a custom cannot be based on it. Instances Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 22 relate to Bahal Sahibzadas and are obviously pertinent. The first shows that Aziz Din succeeded to the property of his mother, while the second refers to the estate of Najm-ud-Din's own mother, and shows that the daughters took nothing. This could have been explained or refuted by Najm-ud-Din but has not been. In the fourth instance the property (ornaments) were worth from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,200, not an insignificant amount. In the 22nd instance, again, the property was a house. There is no reason why the evidence of the witnesses who depose to these instances should be disbelieved.

Instance No. 8 is a case of *Bahal Khatri*s of Khanpur which is only a few miles from Sham Chaurasi. The witnesses to this instance succeeded to the ornaments of their mother to the exclusion of their sisters, and no reason has been shown to discredit them.

Instances Nos. 5, 6 and 7 are deposed to by Wazir-ud-Din, Petitioner-Writer of Hoshiarpur, and relates to events in his own family. He is a Silli Sheikh but belongs to the same brotherhood as Bahals and Sahgal

NAJM-UD-DIN v. ABDUL HAMID.

Sheikhs. His evidence appears reliable. Instance No. 9 relates to Sohni Sheikhs. The estate was small (about Rs. 40) but there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the instance.

The evidence relating to instances Nos. 10 and 11 is vague and they cannot be considered proved.

Instances Nos. 12 to 18 relate to Sakgal Sheikhs. Of these, No. 12 is important being an instance of Najm-ud-Din's own family. It is an instance of the succession to one Miran Bibi who is the plaintiff's maternal grand-mother, and has been proved. No. 13 is an instance deposed to by Sheikh Faiz Bakhsh, a retired Extra Assistant Commissioner, and shows that he succeeded to his brother's property. As, however, his sister predeceased his mother this instance is not in point. No. 14 is an instance where the property left by Musammat Karam Bibi alias Karmo was of very considerable value. It all devolved on her son to the exclusion of her daughters. The evidence with regard to this is particularly good. Khan Bahadur Sir Abdul Hamid Khan being one of the witnesses regarding it (page 607). The evidence relating to instances Nos. 15, 16 and 17 is also good. Instance No. 18 must, however, be eliminated as there the daughters predeceased the mother and the question of her succession did not arise. No 19 is an instance among Ghai Sheikhs. It has, however, been proved and the witness Hafiz Rahim Bakhsh states that he has relations with Bahal Sheikhs.

No. 20 does not assist, as though it is an instance in Aziz Din's family the evidence indicates that the lady in question gifted her property to her son and the question of succession did not properly arise. Instance No. 21 is good and has been satisfactorily proved. No. 23, however, must be eliminated as it does not appear to relate to Sheikhs of the same brotherhood as Bahals and Sakgals. Instance No. 24 relates to the devolution of the property of the widow of Sheikh Nanak Bakhsh, Extra Assistant Commissioner. Khan Bahadur Sir Abdul Hamid Khan was a son of one Sheikh Nanak Bakhsh and states that his mother inherited nothing either from her mother or father.

From the above it will be seen that out of the 24 instances relied on by the defendants

Nos. 10, 11, 13, 18, 20 and 23 cannot be accepted leaving 18 instances that can be regarded as proved. In most cases the facts were well known to the plaintiff, for it has to be borne in mind that he is closely related to Aziz Din's family apart from his having married Musammat Hamida Begam and any mis-statements by the witnesses could have been brought out at once. He has produced 4 instances of alleged succession under Muhammadan Law. The evidence as to Nos. 1 and 2 shows that the distribution of the mother's estate was not in accordance with Muhammadan Law, while No. 4 is not a case of a daughter's succession. Instance No. 3 needs more detailed consideration and to illustrate it the following pedigree-table has been put forward:—

Aziz Bibi married Sheikh Rahim Bakhsh, Extra Assistant Commissioner. It is said that Musammat Zebo had two houses one of which she got from her mother, Musammat Saliah, and the other from her husband. On her death her son, Bakht Baland, succeeded to the house his mother had obtained from her husband, while the daughter, Musammat Begam Bibi, took the other. This, it is alleged, was a division according to Muhammadan Law. This is deposed to by Muhammad Amir (page 574) who states that he and his brotherhood follow Shara. At the same time, at page 117 is to be found the copy of a plaint in which it is distinctly alleged that the then plaintiffs of whom this witness is one, followed Zemin-dari custom (see paragraph 7). There is nothing to show what the values of the two houses were so that it is impossible to say that they devolved according to Muhammadan Law. It is also possible, as urged by Mr. Tek Chand, that Musammāt Zebo made a gift of the house to her daughter and that it was not a case of succession at all. In any event, it cannot be said that it has been proved that succession in this instance was in accordance with Muhammadan Law.

The result is that, while on the plaintiff's side there is no proved instance of succession by a daughter to a maternal estate among these Sheikhs, the defendants have proved 18 instances of succession to such estates according to the custom set up. Having regard to all the circumstances, therefore, it must be held that the defendants have succeeded in proving that, among the Sheikhs to which their family belongs, a custom exists by which sons exclude daughters from succession to their maternal estates.

Under Head III, (exclusion by brothers of sisters from succession to a childless brother's estate) the defendants have put forward 7 instances. Of these the 1st and 2nd relate to Bahal Sheikhs of Sham Chaurasi itself, but No. 1 must be eliminated as in this instance there was only one sister who predeceased the brother whose estate was in question. Instance No. 2 is deposed to by one Nur-ud-Din who states that, on the death of his father he (witness) had one brother and one sister. The sister was excluded by the two brothers and when witness's brother died he succeeded to the estate excluding the sister. This witness is the father-in-law of Najm-ud-Din's sister so that it may safely be assumed that this is a true instance. In instance No. 7 one Miran Bakhsh, a Sahgal Sheikh died without issue leaving a brother and a sister. The brother succeeded to the exclusion of the sister. The evidence in support of this has in no way been discredited. Instances Nos. 4, 5 and 6 also relate to Sahgal Sheikhs and the evidence in support of them is good. Instance No. 3 is the case of Silli Sheikhs and Wazir-ud-Din who deposes to it claims that the Sillis belong to the brotherhood of Bahal and Sahgal Sheikhs. There is no reason to disbelieve the testimony of this witness who comes from Hoshiarpur.

On the other side two instances have been put forward. As to the first, P. W. Sheikh Mulk Shah states that his paternal uncle died leaving lands, house and cash. A sister of his, Musammāt Imam Bibi, succeeded to the cash and house, while the brother took the land. The brother, Nur-ud-Din, however, states that the house had been gifted to her by their father (page 473, line 20). Further comment is needless.

In the second instance the succession was to the estate of Sheikh Muhammad Ishaq. As, however, he only left him surviving a daughter and a sister it is obvious that there were no males such as a son or a brother to put forward any rival claims and this is not in any way in point.

Here, again, while the plaintiff has failed to prove a single instance in support of succession according to Muhammadan Law the defendants have proved six instances in which, when it was the case of succession to a childless Sheikh of the tribes in question, sisters have been excluded by brothers. It must be held that the defendants have proved that by custom in the tribe to which their family belongs brothers exclude sisters from succession to a childless brother's estate.

Under Head IV, the defendants have produced a number of instances relating to succession by collaterals according to custom and against Muhammadan Law. Mr. Mool Chand's objection to these instances was that they were irrelevant to the points at issue but he did not seriously contest their existence and an examination of the evidence in support of the first 21 leaves no doubt that they have been proved. No. 22 is not an instance but a reference to the evidence of a witness for the plaintiffs, one Muhammad Said, a Sheikh of Hoshiarpur, shows that no daughter has ever filed a suit to claim a share.

On the question of relevancy it was contended that instances showing that these particular Sheikhs had departed from strict Muhammadan Law in other matters could not be regarded as raising any presumption that Muhammadan Law had been abrogated by custom in matters of succession, and this contention was still further extended so as to urge the exclusion from consideration of instances coming under Head I (Succession to Paternal Estates). It would seem, however, that these instances are relevant and of importance, not to prove the special custom set up, but to show that, in spite of the fact that the parties are converts to Islam from Hindu *Khatri*s, strict Muhammadan Law has not been invariably followed and thus to weaken the presumption referred to in Mahomed Sidick v. Haji Ahmed (2), Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok (3) and Mahomed Ibrahim Rowther v. Ibrahim Rowther (4).

It is doubtless true, as pointed out in Bhambul Devi v. Narain Singh (6), that custom is not always logical and that the Courts should guard against the danger of seeking to extend custom by logical processes, e.g., by analogy. It would, therefore, be erroneous to say that because these Sheikhs in the Jullundur Doab follow custom in certain matters including succession to paternal estate, therefore, they must also follow custom when the succession is to a mother or a childless brother, but it is a little difficult to deny that when such departures from Muhammadan Law have been established the task of the defendants is not rendered more easy in establishing the custom now sought to be proved.

Custom is not a matter of inference but of proof, and it is the evidence adduced in support of the custom set up that can and must alone be looked to to ascertain whether or not it has been proved to exist. In the present case, therefore, the instances adduced by the defendant under Heads I and IV are of value and relevant only so far as to show that these particular Sheikhs in the Jullundur Doab have not always followed strict Muhammadan Law in other matters.

It is, therefore, not necessary to discuss the following authorities cited at the Bar:—Maula Bakhsh v. Muhammad Bakhsh (7), Daya Ram v. Sohail Singh (8), Rulia v. Sultani (9), Ram Lal v. Gopi (10), Rahim Bakhsh v. Budhan (11), Fatima Bibi v. Shah Nawaz (12), Dhannun v. Bhagwani (13), Faqir Muhammad v. Miran Bakhsh (14), Bakht Bano v. Chiragh Shah (15), Mehtab-ul-din v. Abdullah (16), Ganesh Devi v. Darshan Singh (17), Muhammad Islam v. Hari Lal (18), Haji Bakhsh v. Rahim Bakhsh (19), Mahan Kaur v. Sundar Das (20), Muzaffur Ali v. Zainab (21), Rahim Bakhsh v. Umar Din (22) and Nur Muhammad v. Khuda Bakhsh (23). Suffice it to say that, they have been fully considered and the principles enunciated in them have been observed and given full weight.

Next, Mr. Mool Chand laid stress on two matters that he contended told strongly in favour of Muhammadan Law being the rule of succession in this family. The first was that, on the death of Aziz Din, Musammam Aziz Begam applied to be made guardian of her three minor children stating that property to the value of Rs. 18,000 belonged to them. A list of the property is, however, not on the record and there is nothing in the application that can be treated as an admission, either that Musammam Hamida Begam had a definite share under Muhammadan Law, or that the parties, in matters of succession, followed that Law. Further, it has to be noted that the Will of Aziz Din is repeatedly referred to and in that Will Aziz Din definitely refers to a devolution of his estate according to custom (page 108). The second was that LAXMIBAI v. DEVI.

Muhammad Hafiz, son of Aziz Din, sued Musammat Aziz Begam and the other members of the family for a share in the estate of Aziz Din. This suit was compromised, after the death of Musammat Aziz Begam, by Dr. Amir Shah, a stranger to the family who had admitted that he had no personal knowledge of the rule of succession followed by these people. It is also significant that Muhammad Hafiz says that he does not know whether the tribe to which he belongs is governed by Muhammadan Law or custom (page 479). Both these matters, therefore, afford the plaintiff no assistance. Similarly, the application of Ghulam Rasul, a brother of Musammat Aziz Begam, to be appointed guardian of the minors, Abdul Hamid and Musammat Hamida Begam, on the death of Musammat Aziz Begam can carry no weight. Admittedly, it contained a false allegation that Musammat Hamida Begam had been married to one Sheikh Muhammad and not Najm-ud-Din.

Mr. Mool Chand then urged that the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses was of considerable weight as a number of them were from Sham Chaurasi and four of them were members of a 'Committee' that was managing the shrine at that place. The existence of such a Committee has, however, not been proved and, as pointed out by Mr. Tek Chand, not one of these four has been able to quote a single instance of succession under Muhammadan Law.

On the other hand, the witnesses for the defendant are, many of them, men of good position and Mr. Tek Chand pointed out that no fewer than 19 of them were related to the families of Musammat Aziz Begam or Aziz Din.

After a careful and anxious examination and consideration of the evidence on the record, and of the elaborate arguments of the learned Advocates, we are of opinion, that the defendant, Abdul Hamid, has discharged the onus that was on him and has proved that among the Sheikh converts to Islam from Hindu *khatri*s, residing in the Jullundur Doab, that is to say, in the Districts of Jullundur and Hoshiarpur, a custom prevails whereby sons exclude daughters in the succession to their maternal estates, and brothers exclude sisters in the succession to the estate of a childless brother.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and partly accepting the cross-objections dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

The rule that no tenant can deny his landlord's title only applies where the tenant has been let into possession by such landlord and not where the tenant has been in possession previously.

Yerragunilla Seshachartu v. Mukkumalla Chiniah, 25 Ind. Cas. 721, relied on.

The rule that a person who takes a lease from one of several co-sharers cannot dispute his lessor's exclusive title to receive the rent or sue in ejectment is also subject to the abovementioned qualification.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for Non-Applicant No. 2.

ORDER.—This order also disposes of Civil Revision No. 85-B of 1922. The applicant in both cases is the same though the non-applicants are different. But the point to be decided, namely, whether one Baliram who has at the request of the defendant been brought on record as a defendant has been rightly brought on it common to both cases. Both applications for revision were heard together. Both suits are based on leases. In Civil Revision No. 84-B, the lease is dated the 11th January 1921, while in the sister case, No. 85-B the lease is dated the 15th January 1921.

It has been argued here that no tenant can, during the continuance of his tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had at the beginning of his tenancy no title to the immovable property. Baliram has been brought on record in each case on written applications stating that before the execution of the rent-notes in favour of the plaintiff defendants used to pay half rent to the plaintiff and half to one Krishnaji. This Krishnaji had mortgaged his half share of the site, namely, half of Survey No. 5, with one Baliram Pandoba and this was foreclosed in Civil Suit No. 78 of 1920 on the file of the Third Sub-Judge, Akola. Baliram taking possession of the half share on or about the 2nd July 1921, and Baliram had given notice of his rights to the defendants but subsequently allowed them to occupy the site. It is, therefore, necessary to make Baliram a party to the suit.

Though, under section 116 of the Evidence Act, no tenant can deny his landlord's title existing at the commencement of the lease, the rule only applies where the tenant has been let into possession by such landlord. It has been held by the Madras High Court in Yerragunlla Seshachari v. Mukkumalla Chinniah (1) that section 116 of the Evidence Act applies only to cases where the tenant has been put in possession by the landlord and not to cases where he has been in possession previously. It is not denied that in the present case though the defendants executed the rent-notes in favour of the plaintiff, yet they had been in possession of the sites previously. I am aware of the case of Jamsedji Sorabji v. Lakshmiram Rajaram (2) which lays down that, if a person takes a lease from one of several co-sharers he cannot dispute his lessor's exclusive title to receive the rent or sue in ejectment. But this also, I think is bound by the rule of the landlord's giving possession under the tenancy. If through ignorance or mistake a tenant has executed a rent-note and has not been put in possession by the lessor it seems to me he can dispute the lessor's title.

In the present case it seems that there is dispute as to whether these sites belonged to the plaintiff whose husband is said to have got them by gift from one Aochit, the brother of Krishnaji the mortgagor to Baliram, or whether they had passed to Baliram under his foreclosure decree, and it seems to me that to prevent fresh suits the matter can be decided by making Baliram a party to the two suits here. I, therefore, decline to interfere with the lower Court's order and dismiss the two applications with costs. There will be but one set of costs. I fix Pleader's fee at Rs. 15.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Claim proceedings—Order directing notification of claim, effect of—Title suit—Limitation—Procedure.

Where a claim is preferred to property attached in execution of a decree it is the duty of the Executing Court to investigate the claim, and if it is satisfied that the claimant has made out his case to release the property from attachment, or if it arrives at a decision against the claimant, to disallow the claim. An order merely directing the notification of the claim to intending purchasers without investigating it is an improper order. [p. 859, col. 2.]

Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma, 48 Ind. Cas. 270; 41 M. 985; 35 M. L. J. 335; 24 M. L. T. 197; (1918) M. W. N. 599; 8 L. W. 292 (F. B.), followed.

The combined effect of O. XXI, r. 63 of the Civil Procedure Code and Art. 11 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is to cut down the usual period for a title suit, which in many instances is twelve years, to a year when the case falls within the terms of those provisions. The result is that, if a person whose property is attached takes no steps under the summary procedure available to him to get his right established, he has the usual period of limitation, but if he prefers a claim and an order is made against him he is bound to file a regular suit within a year of the order. Therefore, unless an order is clearly against a claimant as contemplated by those provisions, the Court will not be justified in placing a forced construction upon it for the purpose of deciding that it is such an order. [p. 858, col. 2.]

A claim was preferred against the attachment of certain properties in execution of a decree on the ground that the judgment-debtor had only a share in them and that the claimant was entitled to a moiety thereof, and the order of the Court was Whatever right the defendant has will pass by the sale. The claim put forward in the petition will be noted in the sale proclamation.

Held, that the order did not negative the claimant's right to a share and did not amount to an order against him under r. 63 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code and that a suit for the recovery of his moiety against the decree-holder auction-purchaser more than a year after the date of the order was not governed by Art. 11 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and was not, therefore, barred by limitation. JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The District Munsif's order of 17th March 1917 on the claim petition was an improper one as it followed the practice condemned in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (1) of notifying claims to intending bidders without investigating them.

But whatever was the order which should have been passed on the claim, I am satisfied that the order that was actually passed was not an order against the claimant within the meaning of r. 63 of O. XXI (of the Code of Civil Procedure), as it did not negative his claim to an undefined share in the property attached. The claimant's petition was not dismissed. The facts of this case are similar to those in Lakshmi Ammal v. Kadiresan Chettiar (2) and Ayya Pattar v. Athupurath Manakkal (3) and in the course of those decisions it was pointed out that every order which is not in favour of a claimant is not necessarily an order against him.

In this view, the lower Appellate Court was right in deciding that r. 63 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, does not bar the present suit. As my learned brother agrees with me, the Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided is: "Is the suit barred by Art. 11 of the Limitation Act?" The suit is for partition. The suit property had been attached in execution of a decree obtained by the first defendant against a certain person and the plaintiff then preferred a claim stating that the judgment-debtor had only a share in the property and that he himself was entitled to a moiety thereof. On the claim petition the Court made the following order: "The petitioner's contention is that the defendant has only a share in the property and that the other shares belong to the petitioner and some others. Whatever right the defendant has will pass by the sale. The petition does not require any further investigation. The claim put forward by the petitioner will be noted in the sale proclamation." The sale was held and the first defendant became the purchaser. The plaintiff seeks in the present suit to recover his half share of the property from the first defendant. It is contended on behalf of the latter that the order referred to amounts to an order against the plaintiff under r. 63 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code; and that the suit having been filed long after the lapse of a year from the date of the order the suit is barred under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention.

It seems to me that the Subordinate Judge's decision is correct. In the first place it is necessary to observe that in making the order referred to the Court did not act in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. It was the duty of the Court to have investigated the claim, and if it was satisfied that the claimant made out his case, to have released the property from attachment, or if it arrived at a decision against the claimant, to have disallowed the claim. This course was obviously not followed by the District Munsif who made the order in question. At the same time, it must be noted that an order to sell the property did not necessarily mean that the claim of the plaintiff was found against because in any event the judgment-debtor was entitled to share in the property. The District Munsif, moreover, expressly stated in his order that by the sale only the right of the defendant would pass. No doubt this is a truism. But we are not concerned with the propriety of the course followed by the District Munsif. The question is not, whether the District Munsif's order is legally sustainable, but whether the order that was made was an order against the plaintiff under r. 63 and under Art. 11. It is clear that the District Munsif did not intend to make an order against the plaintiff, and he in effect states that as by the sale, only the right of the defendant will pass and as the petitioner has not claimed the whole of the property, the petition does not require any further investigation. I cannot construe this order as an order against the plaintiff. The Courts have repeatedly condemned the practice followed in this instance by the District Munsif. But I fail to understand why the plaintiff should suffer on account of the erroneous order made on the claim petition. The combined effect of O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code and Art. 11 of the Limitation Act is to cut down the usual period of limitation which, in many instances, is 12 years to a year when the case falls within the terms of the said sections. The result is, if a person whose property is attached takes no steps under the summary procedure available to him to get his right established, he has the usual period of limitation. But if he prefers a claim and an order is made against him he is bound to file a regular suit within a year of the order. In this state of things, when it is not clearly an order against the claimant as is contemplated by the provisions referred to above, I do not think the Courts will be justified in placing a forced construction upon the order for the purpose of deciding that it is an order against him though it is not, on the face of it, and though it was not intended to be, such an order.

The appellant strongly relied upon the decision of the Full Bench in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vedreva Ranganayakamma (1). It was held in it that an order refusing to investigate a claim on the ground that there was delay in filing it is an order passed "against" the claimant. The order to be construed in that case was in the following terms: "The allegations of the zemindarini will be notified to the bidders with the remark that the zemindarini did not take steps for her claim being enquired into during the last 10 months." Rule 58, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, enacts that no investigation shall be made "when the Court considers that the claim or objection was designed by or unnecessarily delayed." But, however, the Full Bench decided that the order made was in effect an order rejecting the claim. Sir John Wallis, C. J., seems, to think that the claimant having been at fault in preferring his claim beyond the time allowed by the law, there was nothing unfair in requiring him to proceed to assert his title by suit within the shorter period of limitation prescribed. He observes at the close of his judgment: "Though the order only was that the allegations of the Zemindarini would be notified to bidders, we think it amounted, and was understood to amount, to a rejection of the claim on the ground that it was filed too late." We are bound by the decision of the Full Bench. But I cannot regard it as an authority which bears on this case. In Lakshmi Ammal v. Kadiresan Chettiar (2) the following order which was made on a claim, "Sale stopped. The claim cannot be investigated by this Court. The petition dismissed" had to be construed, and it was held that the order did not negative the right set up by the claimant. Mr. Justice Spencer basis his decision on this ground and Mr. Justice Ramesam says: "I agree with my learned brother in holding that Exhibit VII cannot be taken to be an order negating the claimant's right, and that learned Judge clearly says that that is the ground of his decision. In Ayya Pattar v. Attupurath Manakkal (3) a Bench of this Court held that where a person objected to the attachment of property and filed a petition asking that his objection should be recorded without asking for an investigation of his claim, and the Court recorded his objection, such recording did not amount to an order against the objector under r. 63 of O. XXI. Al dul Rahim, J., refers to the decision of the Full Bench and observes: "But it would be going too far to say that the rule applies to a case where a person, while putting in a petition setting out his objections, does not ask the Court to investigate his claim." These two cases support the view which I am inclined to take.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has referred us to the decision in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 423 of 1921 of Mr. Justice Krishnan and myself. In that case a claim petition was filed and an order was passed in these terms: "withdrawn, closed." We decided that the word "closed" was tantamount to "dismissed" and we held that the point was concluded by the authority of the Full Bench ruling. The case was indistinguishable from the decision of the Full Bench and I, therefore, arrived at that decision. I may refer to the following passage in the judgment:—"The question whether an order is against the claimant or not does not depend on whether the Court had investigated the claim or not. It really depends upon the effect of the order, and if in substance and in effect it negatives the claimant's claim and refuses to recognise it, that is an order which falls under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act." I do not think this is a decision which helps the appellant. I am clearly of the opinion that the order in question is not in effect and in substance one negating the plaintiff's claim. I do not think there is any justification for extending the rule laid down in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vedrevu Ranganayakamma (1) to cases not really covered by it. For these reasons, I entirely agree with the judgment delivered by my learned brother.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 66—Execution of decree—Sale pro-brance, nature of—Appeal.

Certain incumbrances were notified in a sale proclamation under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code at the instance of the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor subsequently made an application objecting that the property was not liable to be sold subject to those incumbrances. The Executing Court gave effect to the objection:

Held, that the order of the Executing Court was made under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and not under r. 66 of O. XXI of the Code and was appealable.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the decree-holders against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 30th April 1921 in a proceeding for execution of a decree.

It appears that the decree-holders wanted certain incumbrances to be notified in the decree. They made their application to that effect to the Court under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code and sale proclamation as finally drawn up by the Court did notify those incumbrances. Thereafter, the respondents who were the petitioners in the Court below made an application which is to be found at page 1 of the paper-book. That petition is as follows:—

"These petitioners have come to know today that the decree-holders have cunningly shown certain incumbrances on the properties entered in the sale proclamation. This is contrary to the real state of things. A a matter of fact, the decree under execution is on the basis of a bond that was executed before the debts referred to in the sale proclamation were contracted and if the said properties be sold subject to the liabilities mentioned in the sale proclamation, they won't fetch adequate price. This will cause immense loss to the judgment-debtors. The decree-holders have no right to cause the properties to be sold subject to the said liabilities which are contrary to the real state of things, nor is the decree under execution of such nature. The mortgaged properties cannot, according to law, be sold subject to those incumbrances."

This petition was presented by the judgment-debtors under the provisions of section 47 of the Code and they invited the Court to hold in substance that the properties could not be sold subject to the incumbrances as notified in the sale proclamation. The learned Subordinate Judge who dealt with this application thought that as the decree-holders did not produce before him the mortgage-bonds or the pattas which according to the decree-holders constituted the incumbrances on the land the properties could not be sold subject to these incumbrances. In the result he allowed the objection of the judgment-debtors.

It was argued by Mr. Das on behalf of the respondents judgment-debtors that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge being an order in a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 66 of the Code is not an appealable order. In my view the contention does not deserve any success; the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 66 were concluded long before the petition, upon which the order of the 30th of April 1921 was passed, was presented. The application of the judgment-debtors did not raise any question as to the terms on which the sale proclamation should be settled, it raised the question whether the Court could sell the properties subject to the incumbrances. In other words, the question raised by the judgment-debtors was a question relating to the execution of the decree. In my opinion the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was an order under section 47 of the Code and is accordingly appealable.

On the merits, there is nothing at all to be said in favour of the view of the learned Subordinate Judge. The sale proclamation did notify those incumbrances. There is no dispute between the parties that these incumbrances do exist, in fact the assertion in the petition that the debts referred to in the sale-proclamation were contracted after the date of the decree is undoubtedly incorrect as the facts show. The learned Subordinate Judge could not in those proceedings go behind the sale proclamation which was settled upon notice to the judgment-debtors.

The order of the Subordinate Judge must accordingly be set aside.

The appellants decree-holders are entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Adami, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 2, 16—Execution of decree—Transfer of decree to one of several judgment-debtors, effect of—Adjustment.

The spirit of the second proviso to r. 16 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code is that one judgment-debtor should not, by acquiring the interest of a decree-holder, be allowed to put himself in a position in which he can force the other judgment-debtors to pay the whole of the decree amount when his proper remedy is a suit for contribution, and for this purpose it does not signify whether the assignee decree-holder is one against whom a personal money-decree was passed or one who has been directed to pay the decree amount out of the proceeds of the property in his hands. [p. 861, col. 2.]

Panachand v. Sundrabai, 31 B. 308; 9 Bom. L. R. 409, dissented from.

A transferee of a decree must first prove his right before he can be allowed to execute the decree and it is then only that any question of adjustment will arise. [p. 862, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the appellate order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Tanjore in Appeal Suit No. 81 of 1920, (Appeal Suit No. 54 of 1920 on the file of the District Court, Tanjore) preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, in E. P. R. No. 295 of 1919 in Original Suit No. 183 of 1918.

Mr. T. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastry, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge has in effect found that the execution petitioner is a benamidar for Sowri Iyengar who with the money of 1st defendant purchased the decree.

This finding is sufficient to bring the case within the scope of the 2nd proviso to r. 16 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code.

The decree was one for the payment of money against first defendant and three others.

The fact that first defendant was directed by the decree to pay the amount out of his family properties does not make the decree any the less a decree for payment of the money against him.

The observation of Chandavarkar, J. in Panachand v. Sundrabai (1), that "A decree for money against several persons" means a personal decree for the payment of money by two or more defendants jointly, in our opinion, puts an unduly narrow interpretation on this provision. The spirit of the rule is that one judgment-debtor should not by acquiring the interest of a decree-holder be allowed to put himself into a position in which he can force the other judgment-debtors to pay the whole of the decree amount; when his proper remedy is a suit for contribution; and for this purpose it does not seem to signify whether the assignee decree-holder is one against whom a personal money-decree was passed or one who has been directed to pay the decree amount out of the proceeds of the property in his hands.

DHAROHAR SINGH v. RAM PRASAD NARAYAN SAHI.

It is next argued that the Subordinate Judge was by reason of O. XXI, r. 2 not entitled to find that the decree was satisfied by Sowri Iyengar's purchase. This argument is met in the decisions in Bayyana Ramayya v. Nidamarthi Krishnamurthi (2) and Mohamad Rowther v. Pichai Rowther (3), where it was pointed out that the transferee must first prove his right before he can be allowed to execute the decree, and it is then only that any question of adjustment will arise.

The lower Courts had jurisdiction to decide as they have done and the civil revision petition is dismissed.

Execution of decree, application for—Continuation of previous application—Conditions requisite—Test.

In order to entitle a decree-holder to claim that an application should be regarded as a continuation of a previous application, two conditions must be satisfied, first, that the previous application was dismissed for no fault, or default on his part, and, secondly, that the subsequent application is similar in scope and character to the previous application. To determine this latter a fair test to apply would be to see if the decree-holder could have got the relief in the previous application which he subsequently claims. Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Muzafferpore, dated the 12th April 1921.

Mr. S. C. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the decree-holder and is directed against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Muzafferpore, dated the 12th April 1921, by which the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed an execution case against the respondents.

The decree-holder obtained a mortgage decree against Babu Harbans Narain Singh and his sons. The decree was made absolute under the old Civil Procedure Code so far back as the 22nd December 1906. We are not concerned in this appeal with the first application for execution. In 1912 the decree-holder for the second time applied for execution of his decree and he expressly wanted to sell the property described as lot No. 4 in the mortgage-decree. The respondent Babu Ram Prasad Narain Sahi and Babu Ram Rekha Prasad Narayan Sahi intervened in the execution proceedings and objected to the sale of lot No. 4 on the ground that they had purchased lot No. 4 at a revenue sale. The objection was disallowed and the respondents thereupon instituted a suit, being suit No. 152 of 1912 in Chapra for a declaration that the property described as lot No. 4 was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree-holder's mortgage-decree. On the 27th of November 1913 a compromise decree was passed in Suit No. 152 of 1912 by which the respondents as purchasers of lot No. 4 agreed to pay to the decree-holder Rs. 2,000 on or before the 30th August 1914.

We are not concerned with the third application for execution which was presented in 1915. The respondents were not parties to that execution as the decree-holder proceeded in that application against properties other than lot No. 4. In 1918 the decree-holder presented his fourth application for execution and it will be necessary to consider the scope and character of that application presently. By that application the decree-holder did want to sell lot No. 4 as well as two other lots of properties described as lots Nos. 5 and 6, he did not bring the respondents on the record as parties to that execution proceeding but the respondents intervened in that execution proceeding and admitted their liability to satisfy the decree to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and, in fact, paid a portion of the decretal amount. The entire sum of Rs. 2,000 not having been paid by the respondents, the decree-holder proceeded with the sale of, amongst other properties, the property covered by lot No. 4. The sale took place on the 15th March 1913 and lot No. 4 was purchased by the decree-holder. There was then the inevitable application for setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90 and that application ended in a compromise between the parties on the 7th June 1919. The sale was set aside by consent on the respondents agreeing to pay Rs. 540 within a month. It was agreed that if the sum of Rs. 540 was not paid on or before the 7th July 1919 the decree-holder would be entitled to sell lot No. 4. It is needless to say that the sum of Rs. 540 was not paid by the respondents to the decree-holder. On the 26th July 1920 the present application for execution was presented in Court and it was at once met by the respondents with the plea that it was barred by limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the execution petition on two grounds, first, on the ground that the respondents not being parties to the suit in which the mortgage-decree was passed cannot be proceeded against in the execution proceeding arising out of that suit, and, secondly, on the ground that the application for execution is barred under the provisions of section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

I will first consider whether the learned Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the execution petition on the ground that the respondents were not parties to the mortgage suit. It is quite true that they were not parties to the mortgage suit but they have undoubtedly purchased one of the properties which was the subject-matter of the suit. They are accordingly representatives-in-interest of the judgment-debtor unless they can establish that by reason of the fact that they purchased at a revenue sale they are not liable to satisfy the mortgage-decree of the plaintiff. They did make an attempt to establish their case in Suit No. 152 of 1912 which they instituted in the Chapra Court. By a consent decree which was passed in that suit they took upon themselves the liability for Rs. 2,000 out of the entire decretal amount. They intervened in the fourth execution proceedings and they admitted their liability to pay the decretal amount to the extent of Rs. 2,000 and in fact in that execution case they did pay a sum of money to the decree-holder. In my opinion, it is impossible to contend that they were not proper parties to the execution proceedings. In my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in dismissing the execution proceedings and on the ground that those proceedings were not maintainable against the respondents.

So far as the question of limitation is concerned, it is clear that execution is prima facie barred under the provisions of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, but Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter on behalf of the decree-holder urges before us that his present application ought to be regarded as a continuation of the application for execution which he presented in 1918. It is well established that in order to entitle a decree-holder to claim that an application should be regarded as a continuation of the previous application, two conditions must be satisfied, first, that the previous application was dismissed for no fault or default on his part and, secondly, that the present application is similar in scope and character to the previous application. If these two conditions are satisfied there is no reason why the Court should not regard the present application as a continuation of the previous application.

Now, in this case clearly there were no laches on the part of the decree-holder. The respondents entered into a compromise with him, they agreed to pay Rs. 540 to him on or before the 7th July 1919, and on the faith of the representation made to him by the respondents the decree-holder consented to have the sale in his favour set aside. Therefore, the decree-holder has satisfied one of the conditions, namely, that there was no fault or default on his part at all.

The next question is, can the present application for execution be regarded as similar in scope and character to the previous application? I take it that all that is necessary for the decree-holder to establish is that, in substance, though it may not be in form, the present application is similar in scope and character to the previous application.

DHAROHAR SINGH v. RAM PRASAD NARAIN SAHI.

Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha on behalf of the respondents urges before us that the present application cannot be regarded as similar in scope and character to the previous application; he points out that the previous application was an application which arose out of Suit No. 41 of 1906 and that the respondents were not parties to that application and that the present application is stated by the decree-holder himself to arise both out of Suit No. 41 of 1906 and Suit No. 152 of 1912.

Now, it is quite true that the decree-holder in his petition for execution recited both the suits, that is to say, Suit No. 41 of 1906 and Suit No. 152 of 1912. In this I think he was wrong. The Muzafferpore Court could have no power whatever to execute the consent decree which had been passed by the Chapra Court in Suit No. 152 of 1912, but I do not think that makes any difference in the substance of the application which was presented by the decree-holder. He undoubtedly recited Suit No. 41 of 1906, he recited all the facts which would enable the Court to determine what was the sum of money that was still due and owing by the respondents to the decree-holder.

In regard to the argument that the respondents were not parties to the previous application for execution, all that I need point out is, that they were undoubtedly parties to that execution not indeed when that application was presented but when it was struck off. They intervened in that application and they took upon themselves the responsibility for at least Rs. 2,000 out of the decretal amount claimed by the decree-holder. In my opinion, no argument can be founded upon the fact that the present application recites the fact that there was a suit in Chapra by the decree-holder against the respondents.

It is next urged that the decretal amount shown in the previous application is Rs. 14,564 whether the decretal amount shown in the present application is Rs. 2,000. This is relied upon by Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha as showing that the present application for execution has been made not in Suit No. 41 of 1906 but in Suit No. 152 of 1912. As I have said before, the decree-holder was ill-advised in saying anything about Suit No. 152 of 1912 in his petition for execution, but that is merely the form of the application. Can it be urged that in substance it makes any difference because the decree-holder in his present application for execution instead of mentioning that the decretal amount is Rs. 14,564 has stated that the decretal amount is Rs. 2,000. I think not, for the argument goes not to the substance of the thing but merely to the form of the thing.

Then it is urged that the names of the judgment-debtors are different, that whereas the previous application for execution shows that Harbans Narayan Singh and his sons are the judgment-debtors, the previous application for execution shows the respondents as the judgment-debtors. That undoubtedly is so, but then, as I have said before, the present respondents intervened in the previous application, so that they were undoubtedly parties to the execution proceedings. It is true that the present execution petition is not against Harbans and his sons but that is, because, so far as the claim of the decree-holder against them is concerned it has been satisfied by them.

Lastly it is urged that the properties are not the same. It is necessary to mention that the previous application for execution was in respect of the properties described as lots Nos. 4, 5 and 6, whereas the present application for execution is in respect of lot No. 4. But it appears that, so far as the claim of the decree-holder is concerned, in respect of lots Nos. 5 and 6 the judgment-debtors, namely, Harbans Narain and his sons satisfied the claim of the decree-holder, so that it was impossible in the present application for execution to claim any relief in respect of lots Nos. 5 and 6. In my opinion in order to determine whether an application may be considered as similar in scope and character to a previous application, a fair test to apply would be to see if the decree-holder could have got the relief in the previous application which he now claims supposing his previous application had not been struck off. If this were not the rule it would in many cases be impossible to hold that an application should be regarded as a continuation of the previous application. To take the present case, the claim of the decree-holder in relation to lots Nos. 5 and 6 has been satisfied. It would, therefore, be impossible for the decree-holder in the present application to claim any relief in respect of lots Nos. 5 and 6. But if we apply the test which I have mentioned, it is easy to see that the decree-holder in the previous application could have got the relief which he now claims in the present application for, in spite of the fact that the claim of the decree-holder in respect of lots Nos. 5 and 6 was satisfied by Harbans Narayan Singh, it was open to the decree-holder in the previous application to proceed against the respondents in respect of lot No. 4. Applying the test it would appear that the relief claimed in the present execution proceedings is substantially the same as that claimed by the decree-holder in the previous application, that is to say, that in substance the present application is similar in scope and character to the previous application, if that be so, and if the present application be regarded as a continuation of the previous application, no question of limitation arises.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that the execution case do proceed.

The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 19—Gross-claims under same decree—Party, entitled to smaller sum, right of, to execute—Interest of decree-holder split up—"Two parties," meaning of.

Plaintiff obtained a decree in respect of certain properties, which she claimed as the heir of her mother, with a liability to pay a sum of Rs. 2,000 to the fourth defendant. Under the decree the fourth defendant was also liable to pay plaintiff a sum of Rs. 385 for past mesne profits. Plaintiff died after decree, and the lands passed to her brother, first defendant, by right of inheritance but the amount of mesne profits which was the plaintiff's stridhanam passed to her husband. On an application for execution of the decree for Rs. 385 by the plaintiff's husband:

Held, that under O. XXI, r. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code the plaintiff's husband was not entitled to take out execution for the smaller sum awarded to the plaintiff under the decree. [p. 867, col. 1.]

O. XXI, r. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code does not exclude the case of a decree-holder on whose death his interest devolves on two different individuals. [p. 867 col. 1.]

The point of time when operation is to be given to the provisions of O. XXI, r. 19 of the Code, is when application is made for execution and the rule does not become inapplicable merely because, before the date of the application, the plaintiff's interest had become split up. [p. 867, col. 1.]

The words "two parties" in O. XXI, r. 19 refer to the parties to the suit and not to the different representatives of the same party. [p. 867, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Oldfield, J.—I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's judgment and I am not prepared to dissent from his interpretation of O. XXI, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code. In accepting it, however, I observe that the difficulty arising from the division of the interest of a deceased party to a decree between two legal representatives does not seem to have been contemplated in that rule, since it does not include even a provision similar to r. 18 (3) (a) and that I am, with all respect, unable to apply language used by Batchelor, J., in Madappa Ganapa Hegde v. Jaki Ghosal Gabri Ghosal (1) to the present case, since that difficulty was not there under consideration. But the language of r. 19 in my opinion is consistent only with the (1) 30 Ind. Cas. 893; 40 B. 60; 17 Bom. L. R. 689.

YELLAPRAGADDA SRIRAMACHANDRA VENKATANARAYANA V. RUVVADA NARASIMHA ROW.

conclusion reached by my learned brother and I accept his conclusion that the agreement set up between first and fourth defendants was subject to a condition which is not shown to have been fulfilled and is, therefore, ineffective. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry allowing execution against the fourth defendant at the instance of the husband of the plaintiff who claimed to be the plaintiff's legal representative. The fourth defendant was directed by the decree to pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 385-4-0 as mesne profits in respect of some property. The plaintiff's husband applied for execution in respect of this sum of money. The fourth defendant objected to execution on the ground that under the same decree, the plaintiff was directed to pay him Rs. 2,000 with interest at 12 per cent. from a certain date and that the amount due to him being much larger than the sum payable by him, the plaintiff's representative was not entitled to take out execution for the smaller sum. The Subordinate Judge overruled this contention and the fourth defendant is the appellant before us.

The respondent, the plaintiff's husband, has sought to support the judgment of the lower Court on the ground that the decree was obtained by the plaintiff in respect of certain properties which she claimed as the heir of her mother; that the amount payable to the fourth defendant under the decree was payable by the plaintiff as representing the estate of her mother; that the amount which the plaintiff was to get from the fourth defendant was her stridhanam property; that the respondent, as her husband, inherited that property, and that he was, therefore, entitled to recover by execution the sum which the plaintiff was to get under the decree without reference to the amount which the plaintiff was directed to pay to the fourth defendant. It was further argued that the first defendant in the suit, who was the brother of the plaintiff, became the plaintiff's representative in respect of her mother's estate and that the first defendant, was, therefore, liable to pay the amount which the plaintiff was decreed to pay to the fourth defendant.

In short, the argument on behalf of the respondent was that the fourth defendant was bound to pay him Rs. 385-4-0 and the fourth defendant's remedy in respect of Rs. 2,000, and interest thereupon lay against the first defendant.

We have to determine which of these two contentions is correct. O. XXI, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code runs as follows:—"Where application is made to a Court for the execution of a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other, then,—(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction for both shall be entered upon the decree; and (b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree."

The decree under consideration is "a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other." The plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 385-4-0 from the fourth defendant and the latter Rs. 2,000, and interest thereupon from the plaintiff. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff, and the fourth defendant answer the description of "two parties" in the rule. That being so, the provision is clearly applicable, because an application has been made to the Court for the execution of a decree of the nature described by the rule. Clause (b) provides that where application is made to the Court for the execution of such a decree, satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree. Now such an application has been made; and, under the rule, the Court has no option but to enter up satisfaction for the smaller sum, that is, in this case the sum due to the plaintiff. When the satisfaction has been so entered, there can be no sum payable to the plaintiff and the plaintiff, therefore, will not be able to execute the portion of the decree which awards him the smaller amount, if the plaintiff during her lifetime attempted to execute the decree, O. XXI, r. 19 would be an effective bar against her. The respondent has argued that the provision does not automatically of its own force render the decree for the smaller sum inexecutable; in other words, that the effect of r. 19 is not to convert a decree with two distinct provisions into a single decree enforceable only for the difference between the two sums; but, on the contrary, that the point of time when the operation is to be given to the provision under question is when application is made for the execution and that, as in the present case, on the date of the execution application the plaintiff's interest became split up, the rule has no application. It is no doubt true that the provisions of the section come into operation only "where application is made to a Court for the execution of a decree," but that condition has been satisfied in the present case. The application has been made. The section does not exclude the case of a decree-holder on whose death his interest devolves on two different individuals." "Two parties" referred to in r. 19 are the parties to the suit. The words do not refer to two different representatives of the same party. On a strict construction of O. XXI, r. 19, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the appellant's contention is correct and that the plaintiff's husband is not entitled to take out execution for the smaller sum awarded to the plaintiff under the decree.

Moreover, I am at a loss to understand why the defendant should suffer because on the death of the plaintiff, her interest devolved on two different representatives. I fail to see why, if, as the result of the set-off, the fourth defendant was entitled to recover from the plaintiff, the difference between the two sums, he should immediately upon her death be obliged to pay into the hands of one representative the smaller sum and perhaps be unable to recover the larger sum from the other representative. This seems to me clearly opposed to justice and I find no justification for this view in the terms of the section to which reference has been made.

Four cases were cited by the appellant's learned Vakil as bearing on the question, Bhagwan Singh v. Ratan (2), Sankara Menon v. Gopala Pattar (3), Annada Mohan

Roy v. Atul Chandra Chakrabarti (4) and Madappa Ganappa Hegde v. Jaki Ghosal Gabri Ghosal (1). I shall refer only to the last cited decision, because I think it alone has a material bearing upon the case on hand. There the applicant applied to execute a decree for recovering Rs. 445-8-0 which he was entitled to recover from the opponents as mesne profits. Under the same decree, the opponents were entitled to claim the sum of Rs. 855 as costs from the applicant; but they were prevented from recovering it as the right to it was barred by limitation. They, however, claimed to set off the amount against the amount sought to be recovered by the applicant. It was held that the applicant could not be allowed to execute his decree for the smaller sum without reference to the larger sum which the decree awarded to the opponents. Batchelor, J., observed at page 63,* "For, as I read the rule, it contemplates that the decree should be regarded as a single indivisible order of the Court enforceable only for the balance, that is, the difference between the two sums awarded, and that balance becomes awardable by the Court without the intervention of the parties as soon as the amount of the balance is determined."

There remains one point to consider. It is said that the fourth defendant entered into an agreement with the first defendant in respect of the amount payable by the plaintiff to the fourth defendant. The respondent has argued that the fourth defendant has thus precluded himself from setting up that an amount is due to him under the decree. In answer to this argument it is sufficient to say that it is admitted that the agreement relied upon is a conditional agreement and that the condition has not been fulfilled. The amount due to the fourth defendant has not been paid and the respondent cannot, therefore, contend that the portion of the decree relating to payment to the fourth defendant has been satisfied. In this view, it becomes unnecessary to determine the other question, namely, whether the adjustment referred to not having been certified under O. XXI, r. 2, may or may not be recognised by the Court executing the decree.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 35—Decree for specific performance, form of—Time fixed for payment, effect of—Failure to pay within time fixed—Procedure—Delay in suing, effect of.

A decree in a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of land, directing conveyance on payment of an amount by the plaintiff and fixing a time for such payment, is in the nature of a preliminary decree and after the original judgment, the action is not ended but remains under the control of the Court. It is competent both to the Original and the Appellate Courts on suitable application, to extend the time fixed for payment, and the plaintiff's rights under the decree are not lost merely by non-payment within the time fixed.

A decree for specific performance must not make payment of the purchase money by a certain date a condition of the continuance of the rights under the judgment.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract, the fact that certain persons entitled to the benefit of the contract refused to join the plaintiff and were, therefore, joined as defendants, is not a bar to a decree for specific performance. [p. 871, col. 2.]

Persons who desire the assistance of a Court in obtaining an equitable relief must come quickly, but the question whether a Court should grant an equitable relief is one of fact to be decided on the circumstances of each case. [p. 871, col. 2.]

Where a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale is brought some two years after the time fixed for its performance and it appears that the plaintiff was put off by the defendant himself who is not shown to have been prejudiced by the delay in bringing the action, the Court ought not to refuse to exercise its powers of decreeing specific performance.

Per Wallace, J.—Where specific performance of a contract of sale has not been effected within the period laid down by the decree, it is open to the purchaser to apply to the Court for an extension of time for payment of the purchase-money, and to the vendor to apply either for a final and peremptory order for specific performance, or for an order rescinding the contract either immediately or to follow automatically on the expiry of the period peremptorily granted. [p. 872, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court, in Civil Suit No. 80 of 1920.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. L. Venkataramma Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—The respondents, plaintiffs, obtained a decree for specific performance of a contract for the sale of certain lands and superstructures thereon to them by the first defendant: Coutts Trotter, J., gave judgment in the following words: "I must therefore find for the plaintiffs and give them decree for specific performance on payment of Rs. 4,000. Time for payment two months." In pursuance of the judgment a decree was passed providing (1) that, upon payment by the plaintiffs on or before the 19th December 1921 of a sum of rupees four thousand only, the first defendant do execute and register a proper deed of conveyance of the properties in the schedule, (2) that upon payment the 1st defendant do put the plaintiffs in possession of the properties together with all documents and title-deeds. Before the expiry of the two months, that is, before December 19th, the 1st defendant had given notice of appeal. Before the expiry of the two months but after the notice of appeal, the plaintiffs had issued an application before the Judge in charge of the original side for extension of the time for paying the money and this application was heard in January 1922, that is, after the expiration of the two months, and was ordered to stand over until the hearing of this appeal. The appeal coming on, a preliminary point is taken, namely, that the two months having elapsed neither the Original Court nor this Court has any power to extend the time and that, therefore, the plaintiffs have lost irrevocably all their rights under the decree except the costs, and it is therefore, useless to occupy the time of this Court in considering the merits of the case. I do not think that this is strictly a preliminary point, because the question of the costs of the suit would still remain. If the decree was right, the plaintiffs would be entitled to costs from the first defendant and if wrong the plaintiff would be liable for costs. But the point has been fully argued on both sides and raises important points on which we shall express our opinion.

The decree was drawn up, I am told, in the ordinary form of decree in use here in cases of specific performance. It may be that it is a convenient form in certain cases, though I have been unable to discover its history and how it came to be adopted. No form for a decree for specific performance is provided by Statute or rule here, and it has been left to the Courts to devise a suitable and appropriate form. Specific performance is an equitable remedy which has been known and used by the Courts of Chancery in England for centuries, and appropriate forms of judgment have been approved by the learned Equity Judges in England and have now become almost stereotyped and those at present in use will be found set out in Seton on Judgments under the title "Specific Performance." On a perusal of them the first thing to be observed is, that not one of those forms contains in the first instance, a limit of time for payment of the purchase-money and not one attempt to make payment of the purchase-money by a certain date a condition of the continuance of the rights under the judgment. After the original judgment for specific performance it is the definite practice in England that all consequential relief by reason of any party failing to comply with the terms of the judgment must be sought by application to the Court by which the judgment was passed. Such applications are made by motion in the action showing that in England, after the original judgment the action is by no means ended but remains under the control of the same Court. If the default is made by the purchaser in paying the purchase-money, there are several remedies open to the vendor. (1) He may on motion in the action obtain an order fixing a definite time and place for payments and delivery over of the conveyance and title-deeds and can, after the expiration of that time, levy execution for that amount, if not paid. (2) He may apply by motion in the action for an order rescinding, not the judgment but the contract, and in order to succeed in such a motion he has to satisfy the Court that there has been a positive refusal to complete, which, it may be observed in the present case, the respondent has certainly not proved. A similar right is given by section 35 of the Specific Relief Act of 1899. (3) He can enforce his unpaid vendor's lien for the purchase-money and costs. (4) He can by motion in the action obtain an order for sale by the Court of the property when he will be at liberty to bid. The proceeds of the sale are paid into Court and the vendor gets his contract price, interest and costs and the purchaser the balance, if any. Where the vendor is in default, the remedies are even more varied.

It would seem to be absurd to hold that the mere fact that a date of completion is fixed in the original decree (sic) puts an end to the action and that the control of the Original Court expires on the expiration of that date and thus substitutes in effect for all the known remedies stated above the simple expedient of treating the action and the decree as dead for all purposes and leaving the vendor in undisturbed possession of property which is not his and may, as in the present case, be of a greater value than the contract purchase-money, which, perhaps by some accident, the purchaser has failed to pay. It is also worth observing that there is no evidence that the first defendant was ready to execute a conveyance or hand over the title-deeds in exchange for the money and in fact, so far from intending to complete he was appealing on the ground that the decree was wrong.

In my judgment it was not intended by this decree that the payment of the Rs. 4,000 by the date named should be a condition, failing to comply with which would deprive the successful plaintiff of all his rights under the decree. In my judgment this decree is in the nature of a preliminary decree the original Court keeping control over the action and having full power to make any just and necessary orders therein, including, in appropriate cases, the extension of the time. If I am wrong in this and the proper interpretation of this decree is as contended for by the appellant, then, in my judgment, this decree is wrong, and I should, if necessary, order that it be set right by eliminating the condition which ought not to have been imposed upon the successful plaintiff except at a much later date and upon definite refusal by him to complete. Even in that case such condition could only be imposed at the request of the defendant who, as I have pointed out, has other various remedies. As long as this form of decree is understood to be of a preliminary nature and the Court still retains full power over the action, I do not see any particular harm in the continuance of its use. Some words such as "further consideration reserved" shall be added. But, personally, I should be prepared to say that the appropriate forms are those set out in Seton.

It is, however, contended that this form having been used we are precluded by authority from holding that the time fixed is not a condition and, as I understand, also from holding that either the original Court or this Court has power to extend the time. I do not so interpret this decree but, as I have said, if that is the correct interpretation of it, in my judgment, it must be varied. Therefore, the question whether we are bound by authorities which so interpret it is not of great importance. The cases relied on are Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1), Moiden Kuppai v. Punnuswamy Pillai (2) and Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi (3).

In Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1) the decision of the District Munsif was that on plaintiff's paying into Court the balance of consideration within a month the defendant should execute a sale deed. The money was not paid into Court within the month, and, after the expiration of the month, the defendant appealed. On appeal the Subordinate Judge confirmed the District Munsif's order. The plaintiff then applied to execute this decree and the District Munsif held that the original one month granted by his decree having expired and the plaintiff not having complied with its terms, the plaintiff could not have execution. The plaintiff then applied to the Subordinate Judge to modify the appellate decree by introducing into it, a fresh time limit. This having been refused, the plaintiff appealed against the District Munsif's order dismissing his application for execution. That appeal was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. The case came on appeal before a Bench of this Court which held that, on the proper construction of the first appellate decree of the Subordinate Judge, the time was not extended and that, therefore, execution could not be granted. The Court, however, did lay down that the Subordinate Judge could extend the time for performing conditions precedent granted by the original decree on appeal from that decree. It is, however, to be observed that no application was at any time made to the District Munsif to extend the time allowed by the decree, and this case does not, therefore, touch the point in question here.

In Moiden Kuppai v. Punnuswamy Pillai (2) this Court, on second appeal, directed that on payment of Rs. 50 within three months by the plaintiff to the defendant a moiety of the suit property should be delivered to the plaintiffs. Subsequently, the plaintiff applied to the lower Court to extend the time. That was refused by the lower Court, and on appeal it was held by this Court that the lower Court had no power to extend the time fixed by the Appellate Court. The plaintiffs then petitioned this Court to extend the time and this Court held that it had no power to modify its own order except on a proper application for review which that application was not. The Court held that the time fixed by its order in that case was an essential term and that non-compliance with it could result in plaintiff's losing their rights unless they could put the matter right by review. But, in that case, the question was not under consideration whether the original Court, if it directed that specific performance should be performed within a certain time, could extend that time.

In Gopala Aiyar v. Sannasi (3) the Court of first instance gave a decree for specific performance, giving the plaintiff one month's time to pay the price, which decree was, on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, confirmed by him. More than one month after the date of the appellate decree the plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge to extend the time fixed by the original decree. The application was granted but on a revision petition it was held by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time fixed by the original Court. This may be right; but the learned Judge said that it had been decided by this Court in Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1) that the Court which passed the decree had no power to extend the time, much less any Appellate Court. As I have pointed out Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1) did not say so, and with that part of the judgment of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., I do not agree.

I, therefore, do not feel in this matter in any way hampered by authority and this preliminary point fails.

Turning to the merits, the main question is a pure question of fact. The learned Trial Judge has, I think, correctly stated different Judges or different Juries might take different views of the facts. But there was ample evidence to support his finding that the contract alleged was made and I see no reason for differing from it.

Further, the contract alleged is to reconvey the property when the Rs. 4,000 is tendered within one year. There is no evidence of an actual tender but there is evidence that the first plaintiff attended upon the first defendant with P.W. No. 6 who had the money with him and on the first plaintiff asking the first defendant to take it, the first defendant said he would not. This, in my judgment, was a waiver of and dispensed with any actual tender, see Polglass v. Oliver (4) and many subsequent cases.

A further point was taken that, as certain persons entitled to the benefit of the contract refused to join the plaintiffs in the suit, and have been joined by them as defendants, the decree for specific performance could not be granted. I do not agree with this contention and I have nothing to add to the judgment of Courts-Trotter, J., on the point.

Lastly, it was contended, and this is a more difficult point, that as two years had elapsed from the date of the original offer of the money, the plaintiffs were too late in bringing this suit. It is a well-established principle that persons who desire the assistance of the Court in obtaining equitable relief must come quickly. In each case it is a question to be decided on the facts whether the delay on the part of the plaintiff is such that the Court ought not to exercise its powers. In this case on the facts I think that the delay should be excused, for, on the evidence, the plaintiffs were put off for some time by the first defendant himself. The case has, however, been brought very late, but in my judgment not late enough to compel us to refuse relief it not being shown that the defendant has been prejudiced.
